7. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st May 1912 (received on the 25th May), refers to the candidature of the Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid, Mr. Mushir Husain Kidwai and Mr. Abdul Raoof, Barrister-at-law, for election to the Viceregal Council as a representative of the Muhammadans of the United Provinces, and remarks that the Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid has done no useful work in the Council, and should not be re-elected by his constituents. The editor says that the Hon'ble Nawab does nothing besides opposing the Hindus in the Councils, and advises the Muhammadans to send either Mr. Abdul Raoof or Mr. Mushir Husain Kidwai as their representative to the Imperial Council.

He goes on to say that the country and the people are not in need of the services of men who create and preach separation between different communities, and he reminds his readers that such men can do no good to the country or nation.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st May 1912.

The coming council elections.

8. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st May 1912, urges the need for the creation of a strong and healthy public opinion in order to ensure the election of the ablest representatives to the Legislative Councils, and the editor suggests that the candidates should issue manifestos detailing their public work, and that opinion about the merits of each candidate should be invited from the voters as well as from the general public. He proposes that after public opinion has been ascertained in this way a general meeting of the voters of the division should be summoned to nominate the most suitable candidate, who would be asked to undertake to act entirely in their interests. The editor expresses the hope that each district would be able to furnish at least one man who would take interest in this work, and who would devote time and money to it.

He admits that there would be some difficulty in getting the voters to come in, and expresses regret that they do not appreciate the privilege granted them by Government of electing their representatives.

He deplores the lack of interest in politics on the part of Muhammadans, and invites attention to the moribund condition of most of the district Muslim Leagues in the province. He remarks that if fresh life and vigour be infused into the district Muslim Leagues his scheme could very easily be given a practical shape, and he appeals to the members of the district Muslim Leagues of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions, and particularly to the Bareilly district Muslim League, to earnestly consider his suggestions. He reminds his readers of the remarks of Lord Minto that the Legislative Councils stood in need of really able members, and that it was the duty of the Indian electorate to exercise the greatest circumspection in electing representatives. He urges the Muhammadans of Rohilkhand to make every effort to secure a really able representative.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 22nd May 1912.

East and West in India.

9. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), says that the Indian horizon is at present being lit up by two different lights, the one being the dazzling, lurid light of the West and the other the calm and serene light of the East. The editor remarks that sooner or later one of the lights must overpower the other, and he expresses the opinion that the Western light cannot affect the future of India, and that the light of the East must continue to hold its own and influence the future of the people.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 22nd May 1912.

Lord Carmichael.

10. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), expresses appreciation of the action of Lord Carmichael in going out incognito to see for himself how the people fare in their daily life, and remarks that governors of this type who adopt such methods to ensure the welfare of the people deserve to be appointed rulers over their fellow beings. The editor observes that all officials should follow the example of Lord Carmichael instead of depending on police reports.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 22nd May 1912.

European colonies in India.

11. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), referring to the proposal to establish European colonies in India, says that the tea planters of Assam and indigo planters of Behar should serve as a warning to Government against any such undertaking, seeing that non-official Europeans generally behave in an irresponsible manner towards Indians and Government gets discredit for no fault of its own.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 22nd May 1912.

Muhammadans and political agitation.

12. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 25th May), contains a contributed article in which the writer expresses regret that the Muhammadans of India should consider political agitation to be equivalent to acting against the interests of Government, and remarks that owing to their scruples in this matter they have not made the same progress as the Hindus in political activity.

He asserts that politics is an indication of the highest standard of civilization, and that efforts to safeguard their interests by the subject races can never be resented by a just government.

He says that if the ruling class denies the just rights of its subjects it is the duty of the latter to demand their fulfilment by courageously and persistently carrying on constitutional agitation till their claims are satisfied.

He condemns unconstitutional agitation, and asserts that people who are opposed to political agitation are not true well-wishers of Government, seeing that true loyalty to Government consists in pointing out its weakness, in advising it to improve its relations with the subject races, and in giving it timely warning of the dangers it incurs by wrong methods of administration. He observes that Englishmen came to India not as invaders but as reformers, and that now, when they have established peace everywhere in the country, Government should willingly grant the Indians their claims, and fulfil the pledges which were given to them in the past.

ABHYUDAYA, 23rd May 1912.

The meaning of liberty according to Indian philosophy.

13. In an article entitled "The meaning of liberty according to Indian philosophy," the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May 1912, urges that Indians should not blindly follow the European ideal of liberty, which encourages republican institutions for the government of a people, and says that liberty, according to Indian philosophy, is control over ones circumstances. The editor remarks that nations like individuals have to realize this ideal before they can enjoy true freedom, that they should realize that they are free by nature, and that their liberty is curtailed according to the amount they depend on outward circumstances and help for the improvement of their position.

Coloured races in South Africa.

14. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th May 1912, refers to the meeting organized by the White League Committee which was held a short time ago at Pretoria under the presidency of Mr. F. P. Van der Venter, in which racial hatred was shown by all the speakers, and invites attention to the statement made by the chairman that the whites were determined that the blacks should not be placed on an equal footing with them, and that he could not understand how the railway officials could allow blacks to sit with whites in railway carriages. The editor notes that the resolutions were to the effect that the society should by all social and political means prevent any equality between the white and coloured people, should maintain the status of the whites, and should tax the natives more heavily as they were increasing more rapidly than the whites.

He calls attention to the threats expressed by some other speakers that, if the Government did not take any steps within three months, the members of the League would fling out every coloured person who forced his company on white passengers, and to the statement that the question of black versus white was the most important question in the country as the whites were no longer masters in their homes, and that every politician grovelled to secure "the blanket vote."

The admission of Indians into the commissioned ranks of the Army.

15. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th May 1912, refers to the fact that Sir William Plowden recently advocated granting commissions in the Army to Indians and placing them on a footing of perfect equality with British officers, and says that there are numbers of Indians who are devoted, brave and loyal, and who are deserving of promotion to the highest ranks, but cannot find scope for their military talents under the present system. The editor observes that even if the reservation be made that all the officers in the subordinate ranks in the regiments in which Indians are appointed as commissioned officers should be Indians, such a change would be welcomed as a great improvement. He expresses the hope that, when Lord Minto has said that it was his desire to see Indian officers placed on an equality with British officers, and when men like Lord Napier of Magdala, Sir Donald Stewart, Sir George Chesney and others have supported the proposal, the experiment will soon be introduced and will be a successful one.

The admission of Indians into the commissioned ranks of the Army and the police.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th May 1912, refers to the paper on "Problems of Indian Administration" read by Sir William Plowden at a meeting of the East India Association held under the presidency of Lord Minto, and expresses agreement with Sir William Plowden's views regarding the desirability of associating, as far and as closely as possible, the people of the country in the management of Indian affairs.

With regard to Sir William Plowden's observations regarding the reforms, the editor says that the system of representation based on numerical franchise, with proper safeguards for important minorities is more suited to the requirements of India than any other system. He expresses disapproval of the system of special and separate electorates introduced in 1909, and says that he hopes that the cumbrous regulations of 1909 will be considerably improved at no distant date. He points out that no condemnation of these regulations could be more severe than that made by Lord Minto himself, who admitted that the regulations were so "confusing" that he "had great difficulty in understanding them." With regard to Sir William Plowden's statement that the regulations did not contain the important reform of creating District Councils, he deplores the attitude of Government in thus refusing to associate Indians in a responsible manner with the administration, and expresses gratification at Sir William Plowden's vigorous advocacy of the appointment of Indians in the higher ranks of the police. He observes that in the interests of the country it is necessary that the disability under which Indians suffer at present should no longer be allowed to continue, and endorses Sir William Plowden's opinion that Indians are fit to be entrusted with high appointments in the police. The editor trusts that Government will, in the interests of justice, fair play and good government, remove the ban under which Indians are at present suffering in the matter of appointment to the higher ranks of the police service, and to commissioned ranks in the Army.

Indians in the higher ranks of the public service.

17. Referring to the paper on "The problems of Indian Administration" read by Sir William Plowden at the East India Association, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, expresses gratification at Sir William's generous and whole-hearted support of the cause of Indians for admission to the higher offices in the public service. The editor expresses agreement with Sir William Plowden's views that the present absence of Indian officers in the higher ranks of the police should not be permitted to continue. He asserts that Sir William is quite right in holding that Indians are fully qualified by capacity and character to undertake the duties of police superintendents, and are, by the very nature of the case and the circumstances of the country, bound to be more successful and satisfactory officials than any men brought from a foreign country. He urges that Indians have never been found wanting when placed in positions of trust and responsibility, and contends that when Indians of proved merit, ability and probity could be found to fill the high positions of High Court Judges, Commissioners and Magistrates in British territory, and ministers in big native states, there should be no dearth of Indians for the office of District Superintendents of Police. He says that Indians should also be appointed to the higher ranks of departments other than the police, and remarks that the admission made by Sir William Plowden will greatly strengthen the hands of those who, like the Hon'ble Mr. Subba Rao, are agitating for the more extensive admission of Indians to the higher ranks of the public service.

Self-government in India.

18. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th May 1912 (received on the 31st May), remarks that it is difficult to ensure success for any scheme for self-government in India on account of conflicting interests as the result of the existence of so many castes and creeds in the country, and seeing that even under the control of the British Government Hindus and Muhammadans lose no opportunity of injuring each other's interests.

The editor enquires what guarantee there is that mutual ill-will and hatred between Hindus and Muhammadans will not increase under self-government, and expresses the opinion that it is premature to think of self-government until all the different races and communities of India become united.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th May 1912.

The treatment of Asiatics by Europeans.

19. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 26th May 1912, refers to the article by Mr. Sidney Low in the Fortnightly Review (London), in which the need for Europeans dealing fairly with Asiatics in order to maintain their supremacy in oriental countries, and remarks that his observations deserve close attention, not only of missionaries but also of the Government of India, which should see that no partiality, injustice or irregularity marks its treatment of the various communities in India.

ABHYUDAYA, 26th May 1912.

Indian Muhammadans and Muslim countries.

20. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th May 1912 (received on the 31st May), remarks that all of the Muslim countries are in a very depressed state, and expresses regret that Indian Muhammadans do not show sufficient sympathy with the sufferings of Muslims in other countries. The editor refers at length to the troubles in Persia and Turkey, and appeals to his co-religionists in India to show their sympathy by subscribing liberally towards the relief of the sufferers in Tripoli and Persia. He remarks that it is generally the case that when an Indian Muhammadan rises to a high post he begins to injure the interests of his co-religionists in order to gain a reputation for impartiality.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th May 1912.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 22nd May 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

21. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), in the issue of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 25th May), discusses a contributed article which appeared in the Musalman (Calcutta), of the 10th May 1912, justifying the existence of the Muslim League, and endorses the opinion expressed by the editor of the paper that the Muslim League did not truly represent the views of the Muhammadan community, and that it was run by a body of men who had formed a clique, and urges the need for a revision of its constitution.

ADVOCATE, 23rd May 1912.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd May 1912, discusses the circular letter issued by the secretary of the All-India Muslim League, Lucknow, to the press with regard to Mr. Montagu's speech on the second reading of the Government of India Bill in the House of Commons, and objects particularly to the references to "Hindu domination" and "Hindu ascendency" in it. The editor remarks that such a letter should now have dispelled the mistaken idea held by many Anglo-Indians that it is the Hindus who are always ready to rebel, and that it is only the opposing force of the Muhammadans that is preventing them from disturbing the peace of the country. The editor says that Muhammadan politicians are much concerned on hearing that Government now proposes to treat all classes impartially, and as a result they have now begun to attack the Under Secretary of State for India. He remarks that it it is not logical for the Muslim League to make baseless allegations against the Hindus, when it professes to promote goodwill between Hindus and Muhammadans, and that it cannot with any show of reason accuse Hindus of disloyalty when the London branch of the League is talking of the Muhammadan volunteers from India ready to go to Tripoli.

MASHRIQ, 21st May 1912.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

23. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 21st May 1912 (received on the 25th May), repudiates the suggestion that the Muhammadan world is preparing for a crusade and is actuated by anti-Christian fanaticism, and says that they are only moved by sympathy for the sufferings of their co-religionists.

Referring to Mr. Montagu's speech, the editor says that the Muhammadans are still weak and backward, and that they require special privileges to help them to raise themselves to the level of the other communities in the country, and urges that Government should try to ascertain the true feelings of the different communities and should keep itself in close touch with local affairs in order to render help to the different sections of the population. He remarks that Mr. Montagu's attack on the homogeneity of Indian Muhammadans has deeply offended Muslim sentiment, and he ridicules the statement made by Mr. Montagu that the interests of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal had been sufficiently safeguarded, and that they should not demand anything more. He reminds Government of its promise to safeguard Muhammadan interests, and observes that any attempt to shirk its performance will cause great unrest in the Muhammadan community.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

24. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th May 1912, reiterates its protest against the cry raised by the Muhammadans that the statement by the Hon'ble Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons was "an attack on Muslim unity," and asserts that Indian Muhammadans cannot be considered as one nation on account of their common religion any more than the Christian Powers of Europe and America can be considered one nation because they all profess Christianity.

The editor says that there is no unity of the kind pretended by the Muslim League, and he reproduces the assertion made in the Indian Social Reformer (Bombay) in reply to the statements of the Burma Provincial Muslim League that there was little social or religious homogeneity among the Indian Muhammadans as there were great social differences between the Khojahs, Borahs, Moplahs, Labhais and other castes, and that the religious differences among the different sects were so acute as to lead occasionally to violent outbreaks.

With regard to political rights, the opinion of the Indian Social Reformer is endorsed that as political rights were the gift of Government they were not dependent on the structure of the community, and that Muhammadans should not grumble if after having presumed too much on the temporary anxieties of the men in authority during recent years, they should now find themselves hoisted with their own petard.

ABHYUDAYA, 26th May 1912.

The Hindu-Muhammadan question in the Kashmir State.

25. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 26th May 1912, discusses the resolutions passed by the Muhammadans of Kashmir at their recent conference, and remarks that they were marked with a spirit of animosity towards the Hindus, and made groundless charges against the State of being partial to its Hindu subjects. The editor says that the reply of the British Resident to the resolution was fair and satisfactory, in that it refuted the allegations as baseless and assured the Muhammadans that the State was prepared to give them a grant-in-aid if they opened any educational institution. He observes that such a hostile and selfish attitude on the part of the Muhammadans can do no good to the country and that it will always stand in the way of realizing the ideal of a united nation in India.

Civilian judges in India.

26. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 24th May 1912, refers to an article contributed by Mr. H. Batty to the East and West (Bombay) on the subject of the selection and training of members of the Indian Civil Service for judicial duties, and expresses agreement with his views that a very large proportion of the failures must be due to something being radically wrong in the system which placed in the "hands of raw recruits dangerous weapons of complicated mechanism which they do not understand."

The editor expresses surprise at the fact that while seven or eight years' training is considered necessary for an executive officer, who has every facility for learning his work before he is considered fit for administrative duties, in the case of a judicial officer, who cannot get the least help either from his brother officials or from his subordinates, no such grounding is considered necessary. He remarks that it is altogether a mistake to think that seven or eight years of executive training is the best education in local law for district judges, and he expresses agreement with Mr. Batty that it is very difficult for an officer to study the many and various customs of the country, especially when he is not allowed to remain for any long period in any locality, and that an imperfect knowledge, instead of proving a help to young judicial officers, might prove a dangerous thing by giving them preconceived impressions. He expresses disagreement with the conclusion of the writer that an executive training was not useless to a judge, and contends that an executive training is prejudicial to the cultivation of that judicial habit of mind which is not swayed by extraneous circumstances and considerations. He states that it is for this reason and also with a view to securing for the service men thoroughly versed in the technicalities and intricacies of the law, that he advocates the recruitment of the higher judiciary from the Indian bar. He points out that Indian Judges of the High Court have been very successful in the discharge of their duties, and expresses regret that are so few of them while the district judgeships are almost a close preserve of the Indian Civil Service.

He urges that, though some improvement might be effected by the means advocated by Mr. Batty for the better training of the members of the Indian Civil Service for the judicial line, the true solution of the difficulty consisted in making trained members of the bar eligible for judgeships.

LEADER, 24th May 1912.

Perjury in India and England.

27. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 24th May 1912, remarks that in view of the constant aspersions cast on the veracity of Indian witnesses, it is interesting to note the extent to which perjury prevails in England, and quotes a portion of a recent judgment of His Honour Judge Edge, of the Clerkenwell County Court, in which he said that the increase of perjury was so alarming as to demand immediate public attention, and that the prevalence of false swearing had become so remarkable that it was impossible to do justice between parties, and suggested that the legislature should give greater powers to judges for checking perjury.

LEADER, 29th May 1912.

28. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, expresses gratification at a recent Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court, by which it was laid down that, though in a case for enforcement of a mortgage of joint family property it was desirable to have all co-parceners before the court, yet no suit ought to be dismissed because some of the junior co-parceners have not been impleaded, and that the question was not one of procedure but of substantive law, and under the Hindu law the father or manager represented the family and might sue or be sued as such. The editor states that the Allahabad High Court used to hold previously that non-joinder was fatal and that a suit ought to be dismissed on that ground, and he expresses satisfaction that the mischief done by the Full Bench case of Bhawani Prasad versus Kallu will now be remedied, and that in future the substantive rules of Hindu law will not be made to give way to the rules of procedure.

ADVOCATE, 23rd May 1912.

29. Commenting on the resolution which the Finance Department of the Government of India has recently issued on the future financial relations between the Imperial and Provincial Governments, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 23rd May 1912, traces the history of the gradual growth of provincial financial autonomy from 1870 to 1911, and observes that the step which the Government of India have now taken is decidedly a step in advance in the evolution of the system of settlements, in that it frees the Local Governments to a greater extent than before from the leading strings of the Government of India, and confers greater responsibility and independence upon them. He argues that the Government of India would have been better advised if, instead of retaining the present demoralizing system of virtually allocating the provincial revenues, it had adopted the more logical system according to which the Provincial Governments retained all their revenues and made a grant towards Imperial expenditure. He ridicules the objection of the Decentralization Commission that such a grant towards Imperial expenditure would be more in the character of a tribute paid by the Local Governments to an outside administration, and points out that such an argument does not carry much weight in view of the relations between the Local and Imperial Governments. He expresses the opinion that the grant of financial autonomy to Local Governments, if it is to be real, must include the grant of financial control over such Governments to the Provincial Legislative Councils. In concluding the article he entertains the hope that the present policy of permanent settlement will be but a prelude to the vesting of the control of the provincial finance in the Provincial Governments controlled by the Provincial Legislative Councils in which the non-official members will have a more potent voice in the affairs of the country, and urges that in such circumstances it will be all the more necessary for the Provincial Governments to retain all their revenues and to make contributions towards Imperial expenditure.

The editor points out that the present policy of Government towards separate electorates is calculated to injure the interests of those Muhammadans who have not joined the Congress, and he says that when the Muhammadans fail to secure seats in municipal and district boards it is almost impossible for them to gain election to the Legislative Councils. He refers to the article in the Leader supporting the election of Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath and Babu Prithwi Pal Singh in place of the Hon'ble Thakur Kushalpal Singh and the Raja Sahib of Jehangirabad, on the ground that the former were both congressman, and points out that the paper did not like to support the candidature of some Muhammadan congressman. He asks Government to show consideration for the claims of the Muhammadans.

32. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), says that epidemics occur which cause considerable mortality among the inhabitants of the country for want of adequate expenditure on sanitary measures, and remarks that such a state of affairs reflects discredit on the municipal commissioners who are mostly Indians. The editor expresses surprise that the municipal commissioners show so much zeal for the erection of slaughter houses, but take no practical steps to improve the sanitary condition of the places where their electors live.

34. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th May 1912, expresses appreciation of the government resolution announcing the reorganization of the Sanitary Department throughout the provinces, and the desire on the part of the Government to have a well-equipped sanitary staff. The editor expresses gratification at the opening up of the posts of Deputy Sanitary Commissioners to independent medical men and men possessing diplomas in public health, and entertains the hope that this arrangement will open out a number of careers of useful public work to young Indian medical graduates. He commends the action of the Government of India in advising the Local Government to make suitable arrangements for enabling Indian medical graduates to acquire necessary qualifications locally, and congratulates it on initiating a policy which has still greater potentialities for ameliorating the condition of the masses.

35. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that the public interests suffer owing to the disinclination on the part of the municipal members to look after municipal affairs. He remarks that the system of election of members is faulty, and that the present constitution of the municipalities and the provisions of the Municipal Act are not calculated to strengthen the sense of responsibility in those who take part in municipal administration. He points out that the majority of municipal members belong to the lawyer class, and says that they cannot spare time from their business to devote to the supervision of sanitary and conservancy arrangements, with the result that they become mere dummies in the hands of municipal secretaries. He expresses surprise that the municipal secretaries are gaining good remarks for their services in spite of the constantly increasing number of complaints about municipal affairs, and suggests that municipal secretaries should be required to obtain weekly or monthly certificates about the satisfactory condition of sanitary, conservancy and lighting arrangements from the head of each muhalla.

The Sultanpur Municipality.

He invites attention to the condition of the Sultanpur Municipality, where he states the chairman lives at a distance of twelve miles from head quarters, the vice-chairman is a busy lawyer, and the secretary has left the public at the mercy of a jamadar. He complains of the bad condition of the streets and of the defective lighting arrangements, and asks the municipal commissioners and vice-chairman to improve the present state of affairs by giving more attention to the work.

He expresses the opinion that the grant of financial autonomy to Local Governments, if it is to be real, must include the grant of financial control over such Governments to the Provincial Legislative Councils. In concluding the article he entertains the hope that the present policy of permanent settlement will be but a prelude to the vesting of the control of the provincial finance in the Provincial Governments controlled by the Provincial Legislative Councils in which the non-official members will have a more potent voice in the affairs of the country, and urges that in such circumstances it will be all the more necessary for the Provincial Governments to retain all their revenues and to make contributions towards Imperial expenditure.

MASHRIQ, 21st May 1912.

31. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 21st May 1912 (received on the 25th May), invites the attention of Government to a note that appeared in the Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th May 1912, in which it was suggested that the mixed electorate should return a congressman to the council, and remarks that it is now impossible for a non-congressman to secure election through the mixed electorates. The editor points out that the present policy of Government towards separate electorates is calculated to injure the interests of those Muhammadans who have not joined the Congress, and he says that when the Muhammadans fail to secure seats in municipal and district boards it is almost impossible for them to gain election to the Legislative Councils. He refers to the article in the Leader supporting the election of Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath and Babu Prithwi Pal Singh in place of the Hon'ble Thakur Kushalpal Singh and the Raja Sahib of Jehangirabad, on the ground that the former were both congressman, and points out that the paper did not like to support the candidature of some Muhammadan congressman. He asks Government to show consideration for the claims of the Muhammadans.

32. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), says that epidemics occur which cause considerable mortality among the inhabitants of the country for want of adequate expenditure on sanitary measures, and remarks that such a state of affairs reflects discredit on the municipal commissioners who are mostly Indians. The editor expresses surprise that the municipal commissioners show so much zeal for the erection of slaughter houses, but take no practical steps to improve the sanitary condition of the places where their electors live.

34. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th May 1912, expresses appreciation of the government resolution announcing the reorganization of the Sanitary Department throughout the provinces, and the desire on the part of the Government to have a well-equipped sanitary staff. The editor expresses gratification at the opening up of the posts of Deputy Sanitary Commissioners to independent medical men and men possessing diplomas in public health, and entertains the hope that this arrangement will open out a number of careers of useful public work to young Indian medical graduates. He commends the action of the Government of India in advising the Local Government to make suitable arrangements for enabling Indian medical graduates to acquire necessary qualifications locally, and congratulates it on initiating a policy which has still greater potentialities for ameliorating the condition of the masses.

35. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that the public interests suffer owing to the disinclination on the part of the municipal members to look after municipal affairs. He remarks that the system of election of members is faulty, and that the present constitution of the municipalities and the provisions of the Municipal Act are not calculated to strengthen the sense of responsibility in those who take part in municipal administration. He points out that the majority of municipal members belong to the lawyer class, and says that they cannot spare time from their business to devote to the supervision of sanitary and conservancy arrangements, with the result that they become mere dummies in the hands of municipal secretaries. He expresses surprise that the municipal secretaries are gaining good remarks for their services in spite of the constantly increasing number of complaints about municipal affairs, and suggests that municipal secretaries should be required to obtain weekly or monthly certificates about the satisfactory condition of sanitary, conservancy and lighting arrangements from the head of each muhalla.

The Sultanpur Municipality.

He invites attention to the condition of the Sultanpur Municipality, where he states the chairman lives at a distance of twelve miles from head quarters, the vice-chairman is a busy lawyer, and the secretary has left the public at the mercy of a jamadar. He complains of the bad condition of the streets and of the defective lighting arrangements, and asks the municipal commissioners and vice-chairman to improve the present state of affairs by giving more attention to the work.

The editor suggests that the present Urdu course should be replaced by a new course containing standard works in prose and poetry.

With regard to the Urdu course in English schools, he urges the necessity for including Persian books in the course, and says that the inclusion of treatises on morality in Persian would kill the growth of seditious ideas in the minds of schoolboys.

The editor urges that the Muhammadans should start at least one high school with hostels in each division of the province, and expresses regret that the work of the Islamia High School, Etawah, is suffering for want of funds. He appeals to Muhammadans to give every help to the institution.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 22nd May 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

44. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article on the proposed Muslim University and its constitution to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), in which he begins by saying that his continued illness has rendered him quite unfit to carry on for any length of time the duties of the secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and states that the mental strain of the work in connection with the University scheme brought on an attack of paralysis, from the effects of which he has not yet completely recovered.

He expresses regret that the time has now arrived when he should cease for good taking any part in discussing the constitution of the proposed University, and says that while dissociating himself from the membership of the Muslim University constitution committee, he felt bound to express his opinion about the regulations of the University forcibly and fearlessly.

He complains that from the very beginning the members of the committee, who were appointed to draft the regulations, have shown more consideration for the interests of the staff than for those of the community, and that though the University constitution has undergone several alterations after considerable discussion, it still contains important defects in view of the interests of the community involved in it. He refers to the draft regulations recently published which will be discussed by the members of the constitution committee on the 2nd of June at Lucknow, and remarks that, if unfortunately the draft regulations be approved without any alterations, he would emphatically urge the Muhammadans to refuse at once to accept a University which, according to the proposed regulations, wholly deprives them of the liberties which they enjoy at present in controlling the affairs of the Aligarh College.

He expresses appreciation of the zeal and interest shown by the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad in the work of the Muslim University, and urges his co-religionists to repose complete confidence in him and to help him in the work of the University in every possible way.

He apologizes to those whom he may have offended by the bold declaration of his opinion, and says that, seeing that the interests of his community were in danger, he, as one of its representatives, was in duty bound to give publication to his views on the subject, and to warn his co-religionists of the impending danger.

He observes that, as far as Government is concerned, no fear whatever of refusal to grant a charter for the Muslim University need be entertained, but that the difficulty lies with those who drafted the regulations and constitution of the University, and he remarks that if this difficulty be overcome the task of establishing the University will become quite easy.

With regard to the question of affiliation to the University of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, he remarks that Government could not possibly deny the University the right of affiliation, seeing that provision has already been made in the constitution to the effect that before the affiliation of any college to the Muslim University the consent of the Governor General must be obtained, and that the college which it is proposed to affiliate should be conducted on the model of the Aligarh College and adopt the residential system. He goes on to say that, even if the question of affiliation be not properly settled at present with the Government of India, it will be discussed in the Imperial Legislative Council, and he expresses the hope that the Hon'ble members will vote in favour of granting the right of affiliation to the Muslim University.

In conclusion he urges the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and the members of the University constitution committee to be on the best of terms, and to remember that their interests are identical, and he asks the trustees of the college to support and uphold the decision arrived at by the constitution committee.

45. Al Khalil (Bijnor), of the 24th May 1912 (received on the 27th May), takes exception to the opinion expressed by the Secretary of State for India that no college besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, should be affiliated to the proposed Muslim University. AL KHALIL, 24th May 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor asks the organizers of the university scheme not to accept a charter for the University in case the power to affiliate colleges other than the Aligarh College be not given, and advises them to spend the sum collected for the proposed University in spreading popular education amongst the Muhammadans throughout India.

He says that the object of establishing a University at Aligarh was to gradually enlarge the scope of the University throughout India, and that this cannot be achieved by a University having a limited scope of work, and he asks the leaders of the Muhammadan community to arrive at a final settlement about the establishment of a University after carefully considering the advantages and disadvantages which may result from a University with a limited sphere of influence.

QAISER-I-HIND, 23rd May 1912.

The Gurukul.

46. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 23rd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), publishes the second instalment of the contributed article entitled "The Gurukul" (vide Selections No. 21, paragraph 46), in which the writer reiterates his contention that the gurukul devotes greater attention to physical training than to intellectual education, and appeals to Hindus and Muhammadans to give serious attention to the advantages and disadvantages of this side of the institution. He discusses the questions whether the gurukul has been a success in the past and whether it is expected to prove a success in the future, and says that the success of an institution is generally estimated from the number of persons who assemble at its annual gathering and from the amount of subscriptions that are collected, and concedes that, judged by these standards, the gurukul has been a great success. He, however, denies that these two tests are the only true criteria of the success of an institution, and asserts that the success of an institution depends upon the extent to which it has accomplished its object, and also upon the extent to which the public approves of such accomplishment. He acknowledges that the Hindu public has received the two graduates of the gurukul most enthusiastically, but attaches little weight to its opinion, seeing that it might have been misled by a natural desire to extol its own work. He says that it should be considered whether these graduates have received proper training physically and intellectually, and remarks that they do not seem to have developed any such special physical qualities that they can aspire to the fame of Bhishma and Arjuna. He does not commend their intellectual attainments, and deplores their ignorance of the religious literatures of other faiths. He attributes this exclusion of the study of other religions from the curriculum of the gurukul to the fear that the Arya youths might come under the liberalizing influence of other religions and so might give up their opposition to other faiths. He expresses appreciation of the moral character of the gurukul graduates, and remarks that, in spite of all its defects, the gurukul deserves the highest praise for its good influence on the character of its students.

LEADER, 29th May 1912.

The Allahabad University examination results.

47. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, complains of the unreasonably long time that the Allahabad University takes to publish the results of its annual examinations, and expresses the hope that the University authorities will show some regard for the anxieties of students and their guardians by shortening, as far as possible, the time taken over the publication of the results. The editor suggests that the Allahabad University should follow the example of the Bombay University, and should publish beforehand the dates on which the results would be published. He points out that if the authorities wait for the re-examination of the intermediate class candidates at the Nagpur centre to be finished, the publication of the results will be delayed by about a month, and urges that the results of the Nagpur centre alone should be held over, and that the results of all the other centres should be published without any delay. He expresses the hope that with able and sympathetic Indian Fellows in influential and responsible positions in the University it would not be impossible to bring about these desirable changes in the present practice.

49. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 15th May 1912 (received on the 25th May), invites attention to the habit of gambling in connection with cotton and opium sales which is so extensively practised at Calcutta and in the important cities of the United Provinces, and asks Government to adopt stringent measures for its suppression in order to save people from ruin.

50. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 25th May), expresses regret that Muhammadans as a body refrained in the beginning from taking part in the swadeshi movement, and notes with satisfaction that they have now begun to realize its importance and benefits.

The revival of indigenous arts and industries.

The editor expresses the hope that they will change their policy of indifference to the swadeshi movement, and after describing the advantages of using indigenous articles he observes that, in order to increase the wealth of a country, it is essential that people should patronize and encourage indigenous arts and industries.

He describes the administration of the East India Company as having greatly hindered Indian arts and industries, and attributes the growing poverty of India to the free trade policy adopted by the British Government.

He observes that as long as the industrial condition of a country is not improved the imposition of protective duties on imported articles is most essential for the good of the country, and remarks that it is useless to expect that Government will impose protective duties on Indian imports in order to protect the indigenous industries.

He urges both Hindus and Muhammadans to endeavour to improve the material condition of their country by encouraging the swadeshi movement.

51. In connection with the proposed census of cattle the Shubh Chintak (Allahabad), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 25th May), suggests that a census may also be taken of wells and tanks in every village throughout the country, noting how many of them are serviceable.

52. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 23rd May 1912, commends the efforts made by both the Government and the people to relieve distress and save both cattle and men in Gujrat and Kathiawar, and publishes, by way of contrast, an account of the appalling famine in Russia from the pen of Prince Kropatkin, which describes the cruel indifference of the Russian government and says that, from fear of political danger, it does not allow of private charity being extended for the help of the many victims of starvation.

53. Referring to the government resolution on jail manufactures and their effects on private industries, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th May 1912 (received on the 25th May), suggests that persons who have any grievance regarding the injurious effects of jail manufactures on private industries should carefully ascertain and make out specific cases and then present them to the Local Governments for redress. The editor remarks that the difficulty arising out of the competition of jail manufactures with private industries could be easily solved if Government employed the prisoners on buildings, roads, and in fields and gardens, with the result that while a very large number of men could be thus employed on healthy work, the punishment would be more severe and the question of competition would be satisfactorily settled.

He goes on to suggest that if the bank authorities fail to allay the public suspicion Government should, in the interests of the customers of the bank, have the affairs of the bank thoroughly scrutinized.

The editor remarks that it shows that they are wanted nowhere, not because they are ignorant and incapable but because they are able, industrious and obedient, and because they do more work on lower wages and cannot fight for their rights.

ADVOCATE, 26th May 1912.

57. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th May 1912, discusses the ever-increasing scarcity of servants, and says that plague has affected no class of people more severely than the class from which domestic servants are recruited, and that the scarcity in some towns and villages is due to this cause. The editor suggests as a remedy the introduction of labour-saving appliances, and says that every large town should be furnished with electric power, and that enterprising people should come forward to start industries that may be worked with such power. He advocates the introduction of water works in towns which get their supply of water from the river or a limited number of wells. He suggests that servants should not be treated in the same manner as they were treated a decade ago, seeing that they cannot now be maltreated and abused with impunity, and says that, in view of the fact that many of them now do not allow the female members of their families to serve as maid servants, the higher castes should also protect the honour of their servants' womankind. He states that the most difficult part of the domestic work in a Hindu household is the work in the kitchen, and suggests that the depressed classes should be encouraged and sufficiently raised in the social scale so that people who are not very strict in caste regulations might employ them for this work. He advises the Arya Samaj to divert its energies from the shuddhi work, and to render a great service to the community by confining its energies to the raising of the depressed classes. He urges that the co-operative system should be introduced extensively and that young men should be taught to be less dependent on servants.

Scarcity of labour.

He concludes with the remark that the easiest solution of the servant difficulty lies in a reorganization of the social forces, and in taking steps to reclaim the people who are known as untouchables.

58. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 29th May), expresses approval of the action of the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy in proposing to introduce a bill in the Imperial Legislative Council for the protection of minor girls, and remarks that if the bill be passed it will prevent many girls, who are dedicated to temples in Deccan and Orissa, from leading immoral lives. The editor expresses doubt as to whether the measure will receive support of the orthodox section of the people, and suggests that with this object in view public opinion be trained before any legislation on the subject is undertaken.

60. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th May 1912, says that much loss and inconvenience is caused to passengers and traders owing to ambiguous nomenclature of the three railway stations in Muttra, and suggests that this might be prevented by naming the junction station on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway line as Muttra Cantonment Junction, that on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway line as Muttra City or Holi Darwaza station and the present Muttra city station as Masani station. The editor also suggests that the railway receipts and forwarding notes for Agra should have the name of particular stations of the locality specified on them, seeing that there are about eight stations in that city and people cannot otherwise know which station they should go to for taking delivery of goods. ARYA MITRA, 24th May 1912.

61. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th May 1912, refers to the statement by a Simla correspondent about the future administration of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and remarks that it deserves serious attention in case the information be supplied by the Railway Board. The editor says that the East Indian Railway Company still desires to take up the lease of the line, and that the Calcutta merchants consider the change so important as to demand it as a compensation for the transfer of the Capital. He suggests that the Railway Board should be immediately asked to place all information on the subject in the hands of the Indian non-trading public, in order that they may be able to express their opinion about it. He also urges that the Government of India should be moved that no decision on a matter like this be arrived at without consulting the Local Government, which should examine the matter entirely from the standpoint of the people of the United Provinces. LEADER, 26th May 1912.

Grievances of the Indian employés on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

He also complains of the travelling ticket collectors who disregard all rules and regulations and put passengers to trouble, and remarks that now that they have grievances of their own they will better appreciate the grievances of other people.

63. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the mismanagement of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway in failing to supply drinking water during this hot weather, and points out that it is not surprising that travellers desire that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway should be amalgamated with the East Indian Railway. The cow-protection movement.

that if killing an animal be a sin the Hindus should also refrain from killing other animals besides the cow, and contends that the benefits which are said to accrue to mankind from the cow are all imaginary. He says that the Hindus are trying to mislead Government by impressing upon it that the existence of the cow is most essential for agriculture, and points out that if the Hindus really believe in what they profess, they should prove their sincerity by making proper arrangements for the improvement of the breed of the cow and by opening gaushalas and by providing extensive grazing lands. He remarks that the cow-protection movement is animated solely by religious prejudice, and he concludes by saying that it is quite unreasonable to expect those who eat beef to give up their food, and to revere the cow, and he observes that though the Hindus are welcome to any unreasonable beliefs that they may choose to hold they have no right to force their views on others.

SAHIFA, 19th May 1912.

65. A correspondent, who signs himself "MUHAMMAD HUSAIN," contributes an article to the Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th May 1912 (received on the 27th May), in which he endeavours to prove that the Hindus are more prejudiced than the Muhammadans, and that they are responsible for the strained relations between the two communities.

He also blames the Hindus for being ungrateful to their past and present rulers, and challenges them to give any instance of Muhammadans having been ungrateful to their benefactors.

MUSAFIR, 24th May 1912.

Discrepancies in the Qoran.

66. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 24th May 1912 (received on the 29th May), publishes an article entitled "Discrepancies in the Qoran and the knowledge of the writer of the Qoran" in continuation of a series of articles on the subject published in previous issues of the paper, and after contrasting the verses which enjoin Muhammadans to practise strict abstinence and subsequently permit its relaxation during the month of Ramzan, remarks that the writer of the Qoran could not foresee that the rules enjoined by him on his followers would not be obeyed, and had to remedy his mistake in order to meet the wishes of the Arabs. The editor contends that it is clear from this fact that the writer of the Qoran was an ordinary human being, with the usual human failings, and he goes on to say that educated Muhammadans have begun to realize that the Qoran is not a divine production, and he expresses the hope that some enlightened Muhammadan will come forward and earn the gratitude of the civilized world by convincing his co-religionists of the human origin of the book.

The missing verses from the Qoran.

67. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 24th May 1912 (received on the 29th May), says that out of the 17,000 original verses of the Qoran only 6,000 are to be found in the present edition of the book and that 11,000 are missing.

The editor observes that it is possible that the missing verses may be in favour of many actions which are deemed sinful by Muhammadans, and adds that they may also have amended or superseded the present verses. He expresses surprise that God did not reveal these 11,000 verses again after they had been destroyed by human agency, and deals with the suggestion that God might not have thought fit to reveal these verses again on the ground that they were not suitable by stating that God must then be a being who was always changing his ideas about the suitability or unsuitability of his revelations. He remarks that some of these missing verses have been discovered, and that it has been acknowledged by religious leaders that they are of the Qoran. He quotes the opinions of Shia and Sunni religious leaders in support of his statement about the 11,000 missing verses of the Qoran, and promises to publish a list of those which he has been able to discover in some future issue of the paper.

The Caste System.

68. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th May 1912, reviews the book entitled The Caste System written by Mr. Ganga Prasad, M.R.A.S., Deputy Collector, Deoria, who presided over the last session of the social conference held at Cawnpore, and congratulates Mr. Ganga Prasad on his success in proving, by means of quotations from authoritative shastras, that there is no religious sanction for many present-day beliefs and practices, which have wrought infinite mischief to the community. The editor describes how Mr. Ganga Prasad has demonstrated from most important Hindu scriptures that caste is not an ancient institution, and that, though there were no hereditary castes among the early Aryas, and though Brahmans and Sudras used to inter-marry during the Vedic age, hereditary castes have formed in the process of time, and that fresh ones are still forming. He contends that there is nothing divine or religious in caste, and points out that difference of locality, customs and occupations have as much to do with the formation of castes as those of race and religious belief. He expresses agreement with Mr. Ganga Prasad that the selfishness of the priestly class of the Puranic age was also a factor in bringing about the present state of the caste system and supports Mr. Ganga Prasad's appeal for emancipation from it.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

69. One Durga Dat Pande writes in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May 1912, to say that people have been much alarmed in Dhania Kot and Pahar Kota in the Naini Tal district owing to a man-eating tiger having killed several persons there, and he asks the district authorities to arrange to have it killed before there is any more loss of human life.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), remarks that the efforts of the European Powers to bring about a mediation between Turkey and Italy are inopportune, seeing that Italy has not foregone her declaration of annexation of Tripoli, which she has not yet conquered, and that she is extending her military operations to Turkish possessions in Europe, in spite of the pledges given by her at the beginning of the war. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

The editor says that the European Powers cannot be credited with humanitarian motives, for in that case they would have exerted their influence at the beginning of the war to effect a reconciliation, especially when repeated appeals were made to them by the Turks and by Muhammadans all over the world to stop the war.

He says that the recent activity of Italy has done considerable injury to European trade and has caused loss to the European Powers, which is the reason for their anxiety to effect the cessation of hostilities.

He advises the Powers to bring pressure to bear upon the Italians to restrict the campaign to Tripoli, instead of asking Turkey to make peace.

He remarks that, in view of the repeated assurances of the British Government of its regard for the feelings of the Muhammadans, it will not be too much to expect that it will now compel the Italians to put a stop to this disgraceful war.

2. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 31st May 1912 (received on the 4th June), remarks that the failure of the constitutional government of Turkey indicates that the young Turk politicians have not sufficient experience to carry on the administration of the country, and that the constant encroachments on Turkish possessions constitute a serious menace to her integrity. The editor says that Turkey was never in such a deplorable condition during Sultan Abdul Hamid's reign, and he suggests that the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid should either be restored to the throne or appointed as chief minister of the state and consulted on all matters relating to the administration of the country, and that the experienced politicians of the old régime should also be brought back to power. OUDH AKHBAR, 31st May 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

3. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), expresses approval of the representation of the London branch of the All-India Muslim League with regard to the gravity of the situation arising from the recent invasion of the Dardanelles by the Italians, and says that the Government of India should show consideration for the feelings of its Muhammadan subjects, who have been seriously perturbed at the unwarranted action of the Italians as well as at the atrocities committed by the Russian troops in Meshed. The editor says that the Muhammadans have the fullest confidence in the honesty and sense of justice of the British Government, and he expresses the hope that it will take the action which the situation demands as otherwise their leaders cannot be held responsible for the future conduct of the Muhammadans. MUSLIM GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

The Dardanelles question and the Muhammadans.

4. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), remarks that a letter was recently sent by a Hindu domiciled in Canada to Messrs. Thomas Cook and Son asking them to send his son to Canada, and that the firm replied that they could not do so as the emigration laws had become very stringent. The editor remarks that this case will show how unjustly Indians in Canada are treated, and he asks the British Government to see that Indian subjects of the King-Emperor are not insulted in any part of the Empire. He remarks that every country is justified in refusing admission to foreigners when their presence is calculated to cause any loss to its own inhabitants, and says that it is on this principle that Canada and other British Colonies are seeking to keep their territories clear of Indians. He urges that such treatment should not have the effect of making Indians bitter against those who are injuring them, but that they should adopt similar measures to prevent the admission into India of such British colonials. He ABHYUDAYA, 30th May 1912.

insists on the necessity for Indians to preserve their self-respect, as otherwise they will be insulted and maltreated everywhere they go.

ABHYUDAYA, 2nd June 1912.

Relics of Indian civilization in Central Asia.

5. Referring to the discovery of relics of Indian (sic) civilization in Central Asia by Dr. Stein, a correspondent, who signs himself "VARMA," writes to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 2nd June 1912, urging that such relics should not be kept in museums in England, but should be sent back to India, in view of the fact that this country (sic) bore the cost of Dr. Stein's expetition of exploration in Central Asia. He also expresses gratification that these discoveries establish beyond doubt the reality of the civilization of ancient India, and dispose of the contention of western scholars and historians that the early inhabitants of India borrowed much from their contemporaries, the Greeks and Romans, in the matter of fine arts.

COSMOPOLITAN, 26th May 1912.

The cultivation of a national spirit in India.

6. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 26th May 1912, has an article entitled "Wanted common platforms of work," in which the editor urges the need for encouraging a national instead of a sectional spirit among the various communities in India.

With regard to education he asserts that denominational academies may be useful in many ways, but that they do not secure the common good of all sections of the community. He urges the leaders of the people to organize co-operative measures in which Indians of all creeds and classes could work together for the education of the masses. Among other schemes he suggests the opening of picture galleries and museums, the instruction of the poor in the elements of hygiene through the medium of "Bands of Health," the establishment of societies for giving children in towns a holiday in the country, and the organization of temperance work in the country.

DEHATI, May 1912.

Hindus and Muhammadans in the public service in the Punjab.

7. The Dehati (Benares), for May 1912 (received on the 7th June), complains that although the number of educated Hindus in the Punjab is more than twice that of educated Muhammadans, Hindus do not secure so many posts in the public service as Muhammadans, and the editor asks the Government to redress the grievance.

MASHRIQ, 28th May 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

8. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 28th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), refers to the article criticising Sir John Hewett's appeal for unity between Hindus and Muhammadans, which appeared in the Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th May 1912 (vide Selections No. 20, paragraph 26), and asks Government not to be deceived by the views expressed in the paper. The editor expresses regret that the Tribune (Lahore) and the Leader, instead of commending Sir John Hewett's well-meant advice, should have ascribed to his administration the responsibility for the present tension of feeling between the two communities, and he contests the propriety of the charge of partiality towards Muhammadans which the Tribune has preferred against European officials. He says that as long as Hindus try to encroach upon the rights of Muhammadans, so long will it be the duty of Government to protect the interests of the weaker community by granting it special and separate privileges. He expresses surprise at the opposition on the part of the Hindus to the granting of separate electorates to Muhammadans, and contends that no possible injury could result to the Hindus from their introduction.

He states that the Hindus continue agitating against separate electorates because they think that Government will finally be compelled to yield to their agitation, and he remarks that Government and its officials would be very foolish to be deceived by the Hindu agitators. He refuses to concede that Muhammadans are given more posts than Hindus, and insists that the former should be given as many posts as the latter. He says that peaceful relations cannot be established between the two communities so long as they are not given equal rights, and that if Lord Hardinge will not devise means for the grant of equal rights to the two communities, the present tension of feeling will continue to increase and will cause infinite trouble both to the people and to Government.

How to create public opinion amongst the Muhammadans.

9. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), publishes an article entitled "How to create public opinion amongst the Muhammadans."

contributed by "AN EDUCATED LIBERAL MUHAMMADAN," in which the writer attributes the backwardness of the Muhammadans to the fact that they have no facility for forming public opinion on any subject, which is due to their having no common ideals. He urges the Muhammadans to commence by agreeing as to the general requirements of the community, and then to form a strong group of earnest workers, who would be inspired with self-sacrifice and moral courage, and who would regard it to be the chief object of their lives to do some national work.

He suggests that this group should be divided into two sections, one of which would devote itself to the study of all the details of public questions in order to make them known to the community at large, while the second group would devote itself to the work of journalism.

The writer also proposes that young men should be sent to Japan, America, Germany, Turkey and England to learn politics, and he particularly insists on the need for encouraging the use of Urdu as being essential for the establishment of real unity among Muhammadans.

The future policy of the Muslim League.

10. A correspondent, who signs himself "KHWAJA ABDUL SHAKUR OF HAZRATGUNJ, LUCKNOW," contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), in which he urges the members of the Muslim League to effect radical reforms in the constitution of the League, and warns them that, if they do not do so, the Muhammadan community as a body will dissociate itself from the League, and proclaim to the world that it consists only of a body of taluqdars, of sycophants and others who only seek self-aggrandizement.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

11. A correspondent, who signs himself "ABDUL BARI FROM MALIHABAD," contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), in which he expresses satisfaction at the many protests made by the Muhammadans throughout India against the allegation of Mr. Montagu that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal had no connection with the Muhammadans of other parts of India, and says that Mr. Montagu must have now realized his mistake.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

He expresses regret that Hindu newspapers should have supported Mr. Montagu's contention, and he asserts that Muhammadans of other parts of India necessarily have sympathy with their brethren in Eastern Bengal, especially when their sympathies extend to their co-religionists in Tripoli, Turkey and China. He takes exception to the passage of the recently published letter by Mr. Wazir Hasan in which reference was made to the growing influence of the Hindus in India, and to the need for the Muhammadans to support and maintain British supremacy. The writer deprecates the use of such insinuations as being likely to wound the feelings of the Hindus and urges that they be avoided in future.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

12. The Shubh Chintak (Allahabad), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), says that the statement made by Mr. Montagu about the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal is supported by historical evidence, and expresses regret that the Muhammadans should have used intemperate language in their protest against it. The editor observes that Muhammadans should show their gratitude to Government for the special privileges which it has accorded to them, and should qualify themselves to take full advantage of them. He also advises the Hindus and the Muhammadans as to the necessity for working together for the good of the country, and expresses the hope that the advice given by His Honour Sir John Hewett at the last meeting of the United Provinces Legislative Council will not be lost upon the leaders of both the communities.

SHUBH CHINTAK, 29th May 1912.

Mr. Montagu and the Muhammadans.

13. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), states that Mr. Montagu was correct in his assertion, on the occasion of the second reading of the Government of India Bill in the Parliament, that Indian Muhammadans were not a homogeneous people, that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal were descendants of Hindu converts, that, excepting their religion, they had little or no connection with Muhammadans outside the provinces. The editor says that not long ago Mr. Mazhar-ul-Haq contributed some articles to the

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 29th May 1912.

Modern Behar on Hindu-Muhammadan unity in which he demonstrated that a large number of the Muhammadans of the present day were descendants of Hindus who were converted to Islam centuries ago. He points out that the Muhammadans of Bengal speak Bengali also, which is the mother tongue of the Hindus of that province, and remarks that in these circumstances the remonstrances of the Muhammadans with regard to Mr. Montagu's statement are unjustifiable and uncalled for.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

The Indian National Congress.

14. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), publishes an article contributed by "AN EDUCATED LIBERAL MUHAMMADAN" in which he describes how the Indian National Congress came into existence, quotes the views of several important persons about the aims and objects of the Congress. He remarks regarding the success of the Indian National Congress, in surviving so many vicissitudes of criticism, attack and vilification, and says that it is guarantee of the future progress of India. He states that, though the majority of Muhammadans have kept themselves aloof from it, they were never opposed to its principles but only refrained from joining it for particular reasons.

He asserts that the All-India Muslim League is founded on the same principles as the Indian National Congress, but expresses regret that for want of capable workers the League has not been able to do any useful work. He states that his object in writing about the Indian National Congress is only to call the attention of the Muhammadans to the ability of its members and to commend its constitution and regulations.

ANAND, 30th May 1912.

The Congress Reception Committee.

15. Referring to the report that the Reception Committee of the next Indian National Congress has no Bengali member, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), expresses surprise that while the Hindus and Muhammadans of Behar can co-operate for promoting their common interests the Hindus of Behar and Bengal should be at variance with each other. The editor enquires why the Bengalis should be opposed to the proposal of the Beharis for a separate High Court and a University for their province. He observes that the question as to whether the Bengalis were not invited to join the committee or did not join it of their own accord is one of public interest, which should be made clear by a public announcement.

LEADER, 30th May 1912.

The working of the Press Act.

16. Referring to Lord Crewe's reply to the protest of the Calcutta Anglo-Indian press, made through the Institute of Journalists, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912, remarks that it now appears that in the opinion of the legal adviser of the Secretary of State besides the offence of sedition the press law also will have within its purview any words spoken or written which may bring Government into contempt, and that an established character for loyalty of any paper will not secure immunity from it for any words written or spoken which may have the above effect. The editor refers to a statement said to have been published in the Bengalee (Calcutta) to the effect that one Calcutta Anglo-Indian paper had actually charged the Government of India with having brought about the changes from corrupt motives, and points out that, under the new interpretation of the scope of the law, the above expression would be quite enough to bring the paper within the purview of the law. He remarks that many Anglo-Indian papers supported the Press Act at the time that it was passed, and expresses satisfaction that these journalists have now begun to realize the danger to the liberty of the press resulting from the existence of a press law which admits of such a free interpretation. He expresses the conviction that the Indian press as a body would be quite willing to co-operate with Anglo-Indian journalists in securing the removal of these obvious risks to the liberty of the press.

Lord Crewe and the Anglo-Indian press.

17. Referring to Lord Crewe's reply to the protest of the Calcutta Anglo-Indian press which was made through the Institute of Journalists, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd June 1912, expresses satisfaction at the clear pronouncement made by the Secretary of State that "no newspaper in British India can, on the ground of its general views and sympathies, regard itself beyond the reach of the statutory limitation" imposed by the press law in India.

The editor, however, takes exception to the statement made by Lord Crewe that the scope and purposes of the Indian Press Act "are not confined to the suppression of sedition and treasonable conspiracy," and remarks that the all-comprehensive scope of the Indian Press Act constitutes a constant menace to the liberty of both the Indian and Anglo-Indian press in India. He reminds his readers of the support given by the Anglo-Indian press to the Indian Press Act at its inception, and points out that now that the Anglo-Indian papers find that Government means to apply the provisions of the Act equally to Anglo-Indians and Indians, they have adopted a hostile attitude and are making every effort for its annulment. He goes on to say that though Anglo-Indian journalists have been so ready to cast aspersions on Indian loyalty, they have now realized that their own position is not impregnable, and he expresses the hope that they will see the wisdom of combining with the Indian section of the press in an agitation to have the Press Act repealed, seeing that the clouds of discontent have now cleared away from the Indian sky and the measure is calculated to injure public interests by curtailing the independence and liberty of the press and by stifling honest expression of opinion.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912, suggests that efficiency and economy would be secured by the abolition of the Railway Board and that one Member of Council, with the help of a Secretary, would be able to perform satisfactorily all the duties at present performed by four persons, which would do away with the inconvenient system of dual control by the Railway Board and the Hon'ble Member in charge of railway affairs.

Suggested rearrangement of the Government of India departments.

The editor expresses disagreement with the views expressed in the News of India (Simla) regarding the reconstitution of the Department of Commerce and Industry, and remarks that while the emoluments of the Commerce and Industry Member are not sufficiently high to attract commercial men of high qualifications, at the same time it is not necessary that that officer should be chosen on account of his commercial qualifications.

He urges the transfer of the department of administration of justice from the portfolio of the Home Member to that of the Law Member, and says that the Government of India will have the support of public opinion in placing the High Courts under the control of the Imperial Government.

19. The Rajput (Agra), of the 31st May 1912 (received on the 6th June), says that it is the religious obligation of Rajputs to become soldiers, and appeals to Government to enable Rajputs to perform the duties enjoined on them by their religion by enlisting them in larger numbers in the Army. The editor remarks that ancient Hindu history is replete with instances of bravery exhibited by Rajputs, and reminds Government that, even during the Muhammadan period, Rajputs were allowed great scope for the exercise of their military talents. He refers to many of the deeds of valour performed by Rajputs in Indian and foreign wars during the British period, and expresses regret that the military profession is becoming unpopular among Rajputs, and that they are now not being recruited for the Army in as large numbers as they ought to be. He remarks that, apart from the Dogras, there are only 15,136 Rajputs in the infantry and 1,632 in the cavalry, and he suggests that the Kshattriya Mahasabha should ask the Nicholson Committee to consider the question of the larger recruitment of Rajputs. He expresses regret that Lord Curzon's proposal that Indian princes, who had received a military education, should be admitted to the higher ranks of the Army has not yet assumed a practical shape, and urges Government to give up the present policy of distrust and to open the commissioned ranks of the Army for Rajputs. He points out that Government is making a great mistake in allowing the martial spirit of the rajas to die out, and he urges Government to utilize the warlike elements in India to organize a powerful and up-to-date Army which would be second to none in the world.

RAJPUT, 31st May 1912.

Rajputs in the Indian Army.

20. Referring to Sir William Plowden's remarks at a recent meeting of the East Indian Association in support of the claims of Indians for appointment in the higher ranks of the Police Department, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 2nd June 1912, says that, although his statement is correct, the mistrust and partiality of the bureaucracy will allow nothing to be done for Indians in this direction.

RAHBAR, 28th May 1912.

Hindus in Afghanistan.

21. Referring to a report about the forcible conversion and marriage of a Hindu woman by a Muhammadan at Kabul, said to have been published in the Punjabee (Lahore), the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th May 1912 (received on the 6th June), complains that the number of such outrages on Hindu females is increasing in Afghanistan, and that His Majesty Amir Habib-ullah Khan has proclaimed a jehad (or holy war) in Khost. The editor reminds the British Government that when the late Amir Abdur Rahman Khan wanted to convert the Hindus of Khost and Kafristan by force and began to practise all sorts of tyrannies over them, Lord Dufferin remonstrated with him on behalf of the Hindus, with the result that Amir Abdur Rahman had to withdraw his unjust orders.

He says that the British Government is the only helper of the Hindus, and appeals to it to protect them from Muhammadan oppression.

ADVOCATE, 30th May 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

22. Referring to the comments made by the Comrade (Calcutta) on the Hoti Mardan case and to the report that Sir George Roos Keppel had expressed his annoyance at the action of that paper, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912, expresses regret at the attitude ofSir George Roos Keppel with regard to newspaper criticism, and says that a communication on the subject has been received from the leading Hindus of Peshawar protesting against the attempt to make Sir George responsible for the case of the Khan of Hoti Mardan. The editor remarks that, with the exception of the Comrade, the entire Muhammadan press has refrained from discussing the Khan's case, and he asks the Frontier Government to take immediate steps to contradict the very serious allegations made by the Khan of Hoti Mardan in the pamphlet which he has published.

Capital punishment in India.

23. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd June 1912, refers to an article by Sir Henry Cotton which has been included in the annual report of the Society for the Abolition of Capital Punishment for 1911-12, and says that the statement of Sir Henry that a large proportion of the capital sentences passed in India are ultimately modified, proves the necessity for an improvement in the recruitment of the judiciary, and for the separation of judicial and executive functions. The editor expresses gratification that the Under Secretary of Sate for India has promised a return showing the number of death sentences which have been revised or reversed by the highest judicial authority or by the executive government in each province, and expresses the hope that, after the publication of the return, due consideration will be given to the question.

24. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), expresses satisfaction at the order issued by the Calcutta police requiring performances in theatres to be stopped at 1 a.m., and suggests that something should be done to stop noises of revelry in the houses of public women after a certain hour at night.

LEADER, 31st May 1912.

Police reform.

25. The following is from the Leader (Allahabad), of the 31st May 1912:—

"Sir,—I have read with much interest Mr. D. E. Wacha's letters on police reform. Under existing conditions it is foolish to anticipate any reform. So long as officials, especially the police, are treated as though they were above the law, reform is impossible.

High government officials assume that dishonesty among European officials as a class is impossible, especially among the gazetted ranks; this assumption deceives no one, and would not be possible, if those in authority would hold open and independent enquiries, at government expense, into the complaints made against officials. When a non-official is charged with an offence, say a bank manager or employé of a firm, prompt and public enquiry follows, whereas a complaint against an official, owing to the mental attitude of other officials, receives scant attention, and if an enquiry is made, it is a hole-and-corner proceeding, and officialdom is satisfied that what was done was done with the best intentions and in good faith.

Reform in the police and the executive can only follow the recognition by officials that the passing of an examination for the gazetted grades of the public services does not exempt the successful candidate from the frailties of human nature. Race prejudice blinds people when they believe that Indians are one bit less honest than white men, but those who are in a position to know do not believe this. The white official will always spare another white official; if he be a subordinate official and doing a bit on his own account, he may be punished, to accentuate by contrast the honesty of the gazetted official; but if a gazetted official is caught tripping, no one in authority is prepared to believe that he could be guilty, his gazetted appointment is held to sufficiently guarantee his impeccability.

26. Referring to the proposal of the Bombay Improvement Trust to entrust the task of constructing decent and sanitary buildings for Europeans to a syndicate composed of Europeans who would be content with a return of 5 per cent., the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912, remarks that the results of the experiment will be watched with keen interest all over the country. ADVOCATE, 30th May 1912.

The editor asserts that in large towns there is a great deal of capital lying idle and there are people who are quite willing to invest at 4 or 5 per cent. on landed property, at the same time he remarks that the problem of housing is a very difficult one, and that it will be solved not through the help of capitalists but with the aid of people who combine business with philanthropy.

He advocates the formation of building societies in all the large towns, which will enable the poorer people to build decent and sanitary houses for themselves, and he expresses the hope that municipal corporations and trust improvement committees will render every help to such societies in acquiring land.

Village roads.

27. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 31st May 1912 (received on the 1st June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the bad condition of the unmetalled village roads, which causes great inconvenience to persons travelling on bullock carts or on ekkas. HINDUSTANI, 31st May 1912.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and suggests that, in order to keep the roads in a better condition, a tax at the rate of one rupee per bullock cart and two rupees per ekka should be levied on the carts and ekkas using the roads, and that the sum thus realized should be spent in repairing them.

He also suggests that the duty of seeing that the roads are in good condition should be entrusted to village chaukidars, patwaris, mukhias and zamindars, and that tahsil officers, when they go out into camp, should be required to see that the roads are in good condition.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), again refers to the shortage of the water supply at Allahabad, and says that people are put to much inconvenience for want of water in the middle of the day. The editor says that there are various rumours about a further reduction of the water supply and that people in the city are discussing the advisability of paying the water rate. He says that the situation has produced uneasiness among the people, and suggests that the municipality should reassure the public.

The water supply at Allahabad.

32. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 1st June 1912, expresses satisfaction at the assurance given by the chairman of the Allahabad municipal board that the water supply would become normal in a week's time, and says that there is no foundation for the widespread rumour that the water supply would be stopped altogether from the 1st of June. The editor expresses approval of the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya's action in asking for a searching enquiry into the real causes of the present state of things, and observes that some of the present distress could easily have been avoided by more efficient supervision. He refers to the complaints made about the board by the Commissioner of the Allahabad division, and says that it is difficult to fix responsibility on any one person in a corporate concern. He expresses satisfaction that the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya's motion asking for the immediate opening of paonsalas was accepted, and urges the municipal board to make early arrangements for increasing the water supply.

ABHYUDAYA, 2nd June 1912.

The Allahabad Municipality.

33. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 2nd June 1912, says that there are complaints of malpractices on the part of the employés at the octroi posts at Baluaghat and the Jumna railway bridge. He invites the attention of the municipal authorities to the matter, and expresses the hope that they will take steps to prevent such abuses.

(e)—Education.

The present system of education.

34. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), complains that the object and ideal of the present system of education is to secure a livelihood preferably by service under Government, and remarks that such a state of affairs is having a bad effect upon the country. The editor observes that the present needs of the country demand that educated men should take to industry and trade, so that the people should not have to depend upon foreigners even for articles of daily use. He says that young men could easily become traders and artizans if industrial and technical education were imparted through their mother tongue, and that it remains to be seen whether the Hindu and Muhammadan universities will meet this long-felt want of the people.

ABHYUDAYA, 30th May 1912.

The proposed Dacca University.

35. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), expresses approval of the recent resolution issued by the Bengal Government in connection with the Dacca University scheme, and says that it should disarm the opposition of the Bengali press to the scheme.

The editor expresses the hope that the committee appointed by the Bengal Government will, after due consideration of the needs and requirements of the province, draw up such a scheme as may commend itself even to other provinces.

QAISER-I-HIND, 30th May 1912.

The Gurukul.

36. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), publishes the third instalment of the contributed article entitled "The Gurukul" (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 45), in which the writer says that the graduates of the gurukul can either devote their lives to their alma mater or go out into the world as preachers and philanthropists, and asserts that in the latter capacity they will have to cultivate love for their fellow men. He concedes that the speeches delivered by the two graduates of the gurukul at Kangri and Lahore were calm and dispassionate pronouncements, but contends that the true nature of a man is only indicated when he is under the influence of some passion. He says that these graduates have written some articles to certain Arya papers which would show that they are not free from the influence of prejudice and anger. He expresses apprehension as to the results that will follow in case these graduates develop into militant preachers, and says that the creation of a militant spirit will be fatal to the interests of the country. He concludes by expressing the opinion that the present system of education followed in the gurukul has proved injurious to the country, and he asserts that only a radical change in its present methods can make the gurukul a useful institution in future. He urges Arya Samajists to give serious consideration to the gurukul programme, and appeals to them not to complicate the present situation by giving an impetus to the forces of religious hatred and fanaticism. He suggests that, in case the Arya Samajists do not find it expedient to give up their present programme, they should be frank and candid in their professions on the ground that any deception is bound to exercise a baneful influence on the character of the students.

37. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 31st May 1912, publishes a note contributed by a correspondent referring to the Religious and Moral Education Conference recently held under the auspices of the Madras Government and to the failure of the efforts made to have a special conscience clause introduced into the code. The writer expresses the opinion that religious instruction on stereotyped lines is apt to become dogmatic and unscientific, and is not likely to be acceptable to the guardians of students, who belong to different shades of religious belief. He questions the desirability of imparting formal instruction to immature youths, and asserts that wholesome influences and noble and inspiring examples are more needed than teaching of copy book morality by mercenary teachers with weak characters.

He points out that there are a sufficient number of moral lessons in the ordinary text-books, and that the discipline undergone in school life is a sure foundation for a high character, and insists that there is no need for burdening the students with one more subject.

38. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 28th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), complains regarding the recent order requiring students who appear for a second time for the same examination to pay double fees, while those who fail twice have to pay treble fees or are liable to expulsion from the school, and remarks that in these provinces fresh obstacles are constantly being placed in the way of educational progress. The editor objects to such extensive powers being given to head masters of schools, and says they are likely to be abused on account of racial ill-feeling and prejudice.

The new rules regarding school fees.

MASHRIQ, 28th May 1912.

He points out that the new rules will entail great hardship upon the majority of students, who are children of poor and middle class parents, and expresses the hope that the Educational department will be induced to withdraw them.

39. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 1st June 1912, refers to the fact that some of the intermediate examination question papers leaked out, in spite of the strict secrecy observed by the Allahabad University, and remarks that there is little advantage gained by the University refusing to publish the names of examiners, when the names of examiners actually do not remain a secret. The editor says that, though the Allahabad University does not, like other Universities, countenance the publication of marks, and keeps all information about the examinations confidential, the evidence of Mr. Haythornthwaite, the Principal of St. John's College, Agra, before the Universities Commission showed that the actual working of the University was far from ideal. He condemns the practice of making professors examiners in the subjects which they teach, and remarks that as the names of examiners are not published, they may be tempted to take advantage of this anonymity to secure an unfair benefit for their own pupils. He refers to rumours to the effect that University questions were disclosed by one examiner to his students and that his pupils were bound by a vow of secrecy not to reveal them to any outsider, and as a concrete instance he publishes five questions on zoology which he said were set to the second year students at a test examination just before the last University examinations by the professor of zoology of a certain well-known college in the Central Provinces, and compares them with five almost identical questions in the last intermediate examination paper which it is said was set by the very same gentleman.

Allahabad University examinations.

He remarks that the average professor is probably quite honest, but that as the students of other colleges are presumably not aware of the identity of the examiner a dishonestly inclined professor can safely communicate his questions to his students without the risk of disagreeable questions being asked from his pupils by the students of other colleges.

He insists that the University Regulations call for early and careful revision, and expresses the opinion that, though originality is a good thing, it would be safer and wiser for the Allahabad University to follow the lead of older and more experienced Universities.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

40. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), refers to Nawab Mushtaq Husain's article on the proposed Muslim University, which appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 22nd May, and commends his straightforward and bold expression of views about the constitution of the proposed University. The editor urges the members of the University constitution committee to pay more consideration to the interests of the community than to their own personal aggrandizement, and says that, if Government be not prepared to grant the Muhammadans a University according to their ideals, they should follow the advice given by Nawab Mushtaq Husain, and refuse to accept a University which deprives them of the liberties which they enjoy at present. He asks them to utilize the amount collected for the establishment of the proposed Muslim University in spreading popular education amongst the Muhammadans.

The proposed Muslim University.

41. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), in the issue of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), refers to an editorial note of the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 22nd May 1912, entitled "The Muslim University and public opinion," in which it was stated that Muhammadans would never accept a University if its affairs be largely controlled by non-Muslims, and he expresses agreement with the views of the paper. He remarks that the proposed constitution of the Muslim University is detrimental to the interests of the community, and that public opinion is opposed to it.

The editor says that it is the desire of the Muhammadans that the proposed Muslim University should be a national University, and that if this be not possible there is no need for a University at all.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

42. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st June 1912, refers to Nawab Mushtaq Husain's letter which appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 22nd May 1912 (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 44), on the constitution of the proposed Muslim University, and remarks that since Nawab Mushtaq Husain has dissociated himself from the University constitution committee it is the duty of the Muhammadans to see that no defect is allowed to remain in the proposed Muslim University constitution.

The editor says that his co-religionists would never accept a University which would deprive them of the liberties which they at present enjoy in controlling the affairs of the Aligarh College.

He asks the committee to publish an Urdu translation of the constitution and to invite public discussion on it. He observes that if the committee finally approve of the constitution without consulting the Muhammadan public it will be guilty of breach of faith and the community will never accept its decision.

COSMOPOLITAN, 26th May 1912.

Retreats for pensioners.

43. Babu Mangu Mal, retired Postmaster, Delhi, writes to the Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 26th May 1912, to say that it is a general complaint amongst the Indians that, when they retire from service they find life very dull, while with Englishmen the case is quite the reverse. He suggests the institution of a sort of residential club at Dehra Dun or elsewhere, for the convenience of those who have given the best portion of their lives to the service of their country.

44. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 27th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), invites attention to the increased consumption of Japanese goods, especially silk, in India, and says that the Japanese traders are enabled to under-sell Indian silk goods because they are given a bounty by their Government.

BHARAT JIWAN, 27th May 1912.

Japanese goods in India.

The editor suggests that the Government of India should impose a heavy duty on Japanese goods for the protection of indigenous industries.

45. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), publishes the second instalment of the article entitled "The revival of indigenous arts and industries" (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 50), in which the editor says that Indian capital and skill will not be forthcoming for any enterprise until they are assured of adequate public support, and asks the people to use country-made goods even at a sacrifice. He remarks that the support given to the swadeshi movement by Government has clearly demonstrated that it is not opposed to the movement, and he urges educated Indians to proclaim the importance and benefits of using country-made goods to the masses. He recommends the formation of associations for the encouragement of indigenous industries, and says that public-spirited men should devote their time to this work, and that the swadeshi mills should help these associations with funds. With regard to the question of meeting the demand for Indian-made goods, he emphasizes the need for technical education and an adequate supply of capital, and expresses regret that educated Indians cannot utilize their industrial training for want of capital to start big concerns. He advocates the encouragement of small industries requiring a limited capital as best suited to the requirements of India, and refers to the advantage which India has over other countries in the matter of abundance and cheapness of raw materials. He says that, in order to maintain this advantage, it is necessary to resort to improved methods of agriculture, and expresses the opinion that the propagation of the swadeshi movement, the improvement of the quality and quantity of indigenous manufactures, and the provision of means for the production of cheap and abundant raw materials are equally important for its success. He deplores the indifference of the Muhammadans towards the movement, and points out that Muhammadan artizans and Muhammadan capitalists, who are prohibited by their religion from lending money on interest, would derive greater benefit from the success of the swadeshi movement.

The revival of indigenous arts and industries.

46. In a lengthy article the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), discusses the position of the depressed classes in the social and political life of the country, and urges the Hindus to treat them better and to improve their condition by spreading education among them. The editor points out that if the Hindus remain indifferent to this question, the depressed classes will sever all connection with them and regard them with enmity.

Elevation of the depressed classes.

47. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), says that it has been generally observed that criminals released from jails after the expiry of their sentence do not refrain from committing crime again, which shows that the present form of punishment has no deterrent effect upon them, and the editor urges that, in order to make punishment effectual, Government should introduce in jails some measures calculated to cure them of their criminal habits.

The need for reforming criminals in jails.

48. Commenting on the government resolution on the report of the prison administration of Burma for the year 1911, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912, remarks that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Burma was quite right in thinking that good results would follow if the Deputy Commissioners or the magistrates of districts to which juvenile prisoners return were to lend a helping hand to them.

Juvenile prisoners.

The editor says that Deputy Commissioners or magistrates should not place any reliance in this important work on their police underlings, and he urges that, as suggested by the Inspector General of Prisons, public-spirited citizens should come forward to help these unfortunate people through the agency of properly organized institutions.

LEADER, 30th May 1912.

The Provincial Service.

49. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that the recommendation made by the Public Service Commission to the effect that one-sixth of the higher appointments should be reserved for the members of the Provincial Service has not yet been carried into effect, and suggests that vacancies in higher appointments should now be filled in such a manner that the assigned proportion be soon completed. He urges the need for raising the proportion of higher appointments to be reserved to the officers of the Provincial Service, and, with regard to their grievances in the matter of salary, he points out that, while the wages of labourers have nearly doubled during the last fifty years and while the prices of all necessaries of life have increased considerably, the pay of deputy collectors has remained the same. He contrasts the salaries of joint magistrates with those of deputy collectors or munsifs, who are required to perform equally responsible and arduous duties, and he expresses dissatisfaction at the slowness of promotion in the Provincial Service. He also suggests the introduction of a system of "timescale" pay. Among other invidious distinctions between the Imperial and Provincial services he mentions that if a member of the Imperial Service is granted even short leave temporary promotions are made in the ranks of the service, while no such promotions are given in the event of a member of the Provincial Service proceeding on the longest leave allowed under the rules. He also invites attention to the fact that while an assistant superintendent of police drawing Rs. 300 per mensem is entitled to first class allowances, deputy collectors getting Rs. 400 monthly are given only second class allowances. He asks Government to abolish this differential treatment, to remove the badge and stamp of inferiority and to improve the prospects of the Provincial Service.

Foreign State Technical scholarships.

50. Referring to the rumoured intention of the Secretary of State for India to appoint a committee under the presidency of Sir Theodore Morrison and with Sir K. G. Gupta as one of its members to enquire how far the cause of Indian industrial development could be advanced by the system of State Technical scholarships tenable in Europe, and to determine the difficulties experienced by Indian technical students in learning practical work in British factories and workshops, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912, expresses satisfaction at the constitution of the committee, and insists that no hasty action should be taken in the matter without fully consulting Indian public opinion and the Government of India on the subject.

The editor contends that for many years to come it will be necessary for young Indians to go to Europe, America and Japan to learn some particular industry even after technological institutes have been opened in India, and he expresses the hope that the present enquiry will result in increased facilities being afforded to Indian youths for acquiring practical knowledge in factories and workshops. He condemns the present attitude of jealousy of the British manufacturers and factory owners, and entertains the hope that it will give way to a more liberal attitude of enlightened self-interest. He points out that if British manufacturers do not change their present illiberal attitude towards Indian students, Indians will have strong inducement to go for their requirements of machinery and manufactures to the countries where these young men are more kindly treated and where they receive their technical knowledge.

Rain forecast, 1912.

51. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912, publishes the following:—

"Mr. Saroda Prasad Sanyal sends us the following forecast of the dates on which he predicts Allahabad will have copious rainfall:—

On or about—
June ...	5th, 19th.	August ...	4th, 9th, 12th, 17th.
July ...	4th, 19th.	September ...	1st, 7th, 11th, 21st.
		October ...	1st, 6th, 10th.

N.B.—In the forecast for 1911 all the dates mentioned in it were found to be correct, except July 22."

52. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), contains a criticism of the gazetteer of the Almora district contributed by a correspondent who signs himself "BHARADWAJ." He says that it is full of incorrect statements, and that its contents have caused much resentment among the inhabitants of Kumaun. He remarks that Mr. Walton, the writer of the gazetteer, is wrong in asserting that hillmen worship ghosts and he also says that Shiva is not a Vedic god. He notes that Pant, Pande and Tewari are names of the highest classes of people in the district, but that no mention is made of them in the gazetteer, and that no detailed account of Vaishyas is given. He says that the Joshis of Cheena Khan are the descendants of Narpati Joshi and not of Chandramani Joshi as stated in the gazetteer.

The Almora district gazetteer.

In conclusion he remarks that Mr. Walton appears to have blindly accepted the statements of ignorant people, and that he did not take sufficient pains to have them verified.

V.—LEGISLATION.

53. In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 58), the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), suggests that some provision should also be made in the legislation proposed for the protection of women and minor girls against the practice prevalent in the United Provinces and the Punjab of giving away one's wife to a panda in a holy place and then buying her back on payment of some nominal price. The editor remarks that the bill will do a great deal of good if it checks the traffic in women and secures protection for minor girls.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 29th May 1912.

The proposed legislation for the protection of women and minor girls.

VI.—RAILWAY.

54. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd June 1912, complains of the serious inconvenience caused to traders by the shortage of wagons on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and says that there is not much prospect of the grain stocked at railway stations being sent away before the commencement of the monsoon. The editor states that the traders cannot store grain in their godowns for want of room, and that in their anxiety to fulfil their contracts they are ready to make any sacrifice to secure the despatch of their goods at the earliest possible opportunity, with the result that it places the station staff in a position of great temptation. He urges traders to defeat the designs of the railway staff by combining among themselves, and he expresses the opinion that any increase of rolling stock alone would not be sufficient to remove the congestion of traffic. He says that the people ought to be able to store their grain and export it, when they find it profitable, and in this connection he points out that owing to the existence of octroi duty in these provinces no trader finds it worth while to hold large stocks of grain for many months and thus sell it when most convenient. He contends that so long as the octroi taxation is not abolished the present abnormal demand for wagons will continue.

The shortage of wagons.

With regard to the construction of elevators, he says that they will prove successful in the United Provinces only when the trader has freedom of action and has not to run between the railway station and the municipal office for refund of the octroi tax. He therefore urges the Government of India to decide the question of the abolition of octroi, and he notes with gratification that Lord Crewe has agreed to receive a deputation from the East India section of the London Chamber of Commerce about the administration of Indian State railways with particular reference to the shortage of wagons.

55. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 2nd June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that the booking clerk and the luggage clerk at the Shahjahanpur railway station neglect their duty and cause great inconvenience to passengers.

LEADER, 2nd June 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

56. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 3rd June 1912, publishes a petition signed by some prominent inhabitants of Manakpur and Gotni suggesting that the present Kara station on the Allahabad-Rae Bareli section of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway be given the name of Alinagi, or Chaukayarpur or Gotni or Gotni Manikpur, in view of the fact that the town of Kara is five miles off and can only be reached by crossing the Ganges. He also suggests that a waiting room should be provided at the station for Indian women.

A complaint about the post office at Badri Nath.

57. One Mahidhar Dimri Sharma, writing from Badri Nath in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), complains of the inconvenience caused to pilgrims to Badri Nath by the opening of a post office there every fifth or sixth day, and he says that the delivery of letters and telegrams is very irregular and unsatisfactory. The editor invites the attention of the postal authorities to the matter.

KALWAR MITRA, May 1912.

Worship of Muhammadan saints by Kalwars.

58. The Kalwar Mitra (Allahabad), for the month of May 1912 (received on the 4th June), publishes a poem denouncing the worship of the Muhammadan ghazis or saints by Kalwars. The following passages occur in the poem:—

"O Kalwars, why do you worship Ghazi Mian.
You disgrace Hinduism by worshipping Muhammadan saints."

* * * * * * *

"When you stand under the banner (of the ghazi)
You at once begin to shake your heads
And make your eyes red (in a religious fit)."

* * * * * * *

"When we are called pure and undefiled Hindus
And do not partake of food touched by Muhammadans,
Why should we make offerings of sweets (to Muhammadan saints)."

* * * * * * *

"We (Hindus) are inhabitants of India,
The camel-tenders of Arabia (Muhammadans),
What have we to do with them?"

* * * * * * *

"They (Hindus) put on green clothes during the Muharram,
As if their own grand-mother has died,
And beat their breasts with grief."

* * * * * * *

"While alive they (ghazis) desecrated the religion (of the Hindus).
After their death they (ghazis) get themselves worshipped by the Hindus.
By misleading the ignorant folk (Hindus)."

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 29th May 1912.

The alleged conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity.

59. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 1st June), refers to the alleged conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity by the lady doctor of the Mission Hospital at Benares, where the girl was sent for treatment, and advises that young girls should never be sent to mission hospitals.

The editor takes exception to the fact that when the grand-father of the girl applied to the District Magistrate of Benares for the delivery of the girl he took no action on the application, and only gave him permission to file a suit under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and invites the attention of Government to the matter.

Objectionable religious controversies.

60. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 29th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), says that it has always advised Arya Samajists to refrain from making any attacks on other religions, and that all impartial critics will admit that no such charge can be made against the Arya Samaj. The editor remarks that they have to criticise strongly other faiths in self-defence and in answer to attacks made on the Vedic religion by the followers of other religions. By way of illustration he states, on the authority of the Behar Bandhu (Patna), that one Maulvi Qutb-ud-din of Delhi recently went to Patna and attacked the Vedic faith there in his discources on Islam challenging the Arya Samajists to refute his criticisms.

He points out that it was then that the local Arya Samajists had to send for Pandit Bhoj Dat of Agra to meet the maulvi in a religious controversy to answer his charges on the Vedic religion, which was however prevented by the District Magistrate issuing an order under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, requiring both the maulvi and the pandit to deliver no speeches in the town for two months.

ANAND, 30th May 1912.

61. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 4th June), expresses regret that the cause of social reform has made little progress in this country, and remarks that unless the people seek the aid of the State in this connection they cannot succeed in removing their social defects.

Social reform and legislation.

LEADER, 2nd June 1912.

62. Commenting on the Welsh Disestablishment Bill introduced in the House of Commons, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 2nd June 1912, remarks that all parties (sic) seem to agree about disestablishment and that it is only disendowment that is objected to.

State-aided Christianity in India.

The editor goes on to refer to what he calls state-aided Christianity in India and says: "We find that exactly on the same principles the State should refuse to have any connection with the Christian church organizations here. In the budget of the current year we find a provision of nineteen lakhs made under the head 'Ecclesiastical.' If the principles of the Welsh Bill were to be applied here this provision must cease to find a place in the budget. An English correspondent representing the Church Times at the Coronation Darbar thinks that the Anglican clergy ought to be freed from State control. In three out of the ten dioceses, it appears the bishop's stipend is paid entirely out of Indian revenues by the State. As regards the general question of establishment, apart from the bishops, Government, says the correspondent, in addition to maintaining a staff of about 190 or 180 chaplains, has contributed thousands of pounds towards the erection of churches all over the land, has made cemeteries in every place, and spends large sums over them for keeping them in repairs. A reorganization of this system seems to be necessary, and it appears necessary that the Government should withdraw all State aid, direct or indirect, to the Christian church. The Christian community in India is wealthy and ought to be able to make provision for its own spiritual needs and maintain its own hierachy of ecclesiastical officials. It is highly unjust that moneys raised from Hindus and Moslems should be devoted to the maintenance of organizations of alien faith."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), refers to the situation in Morocco, and remarks that the rising of the Moors is due to their dislike of the methods attributed to France of spreading civilization in the country at the point of the bayonet. AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

The situation in Morocco.

The editor expresses his sympathy with the Moors, and says that he would gladly to see every Muhammadan man, woman or child in Morocco killed before the dominion of France or Spain is established over the country.

2. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), has the following:— AL MUSHIR, 4th June 1912.

The desecration of Meshed.

"Every person whose heart is full of religious fervour knows the reverence in which houses of worship and sacred places are held. The respect shown to sacred buildings and places of worship is chiefly due to the consideration for the religious feelings (of the people), and therefore during wars and other disturbances the need is recognized for preserving from harm all religious monuments. It is, however, a matter for regret that the weakness of Islam and the decline of the various Muhammadan kingdoms have blunted all such feelings of respect which non-Muslim nations used to have, and the Muhammadans are deeply distressed at the desecration of religious places perpetrated by some of those Powers during the present period of disastrous oppression. The atrocities which the wicked and cruel Russians committed at holy Meshed on the 30th March cannot be tolerated by any true and sympathetic Muhammadan. What indignity that holy Meshed, where saints like Imam Raza lie buried, and which is venerated by the whole Muslim world, should be bombarded by the sacrilegious and cowardly Russians. What humiliation that the holy shrine so greatly respected by an important sect of the Muhammadan community, and in which lies entombed the grand-child of the Prophet Muhammad (on whom be peace), should be destroyed by the cruel Russians.

Is there any Muhammadan who will not be deeply distressed to hear of this outrage? Will not they all give way to tears? Will not every Muslim heart be agitated with grief?

O Muhammadans! this is an incident from which we should take warning. No greater calamity than this can befall us or our religion. If the slightest religious fervour remains in us, and if we wish to preserve our religious existence, we should reform our conduct and make religion our guide. If we do not do this God only knows what greater (sic) evils are likely to befall us.

Such an infamous outrage commands the indignation of every Muhammadan. That such an atrocity should have been perpetrated on the Muhammadans and the servants of Islam, and that such oppression should have been committed on the Muhammadans!

O heedless people! rise up if you have any courage. O ignorant people, give regard to your interests if you have still any warmth (for your religion). If you continue to sleep, the current of the policy of the foreign nations will sweep you away and end your existence.

Arise if you desire to live any longer, and observe the dictates of your religion so that God may have compassion on you, and the shadows of the British Government protect you and the rights of your brethren."

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th June 1912, says that the occupation of Persia by Russia will endanger the integrity of Turkey and Afghanistan, and expresses regret that the Muhammadans of India do not show sufficient sympathy with their co-religionists in other countries. The editor refers to the trouble at present brewing in Afghanistan and in Turkey, and he remarks that if these countries do not want to lose their independence they should help Persia. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th June 1912.

The situation in Persia.

He appeals to his co-religionists to realize the situation, and to cultivate fellow-feeling and sympathy among themselves. He reminds them of the methods by which the Muhammadans attained renown and glory in the past, and urges them to follow the precepts of their religion, as it was the neglect of their religion that had brought them into their present unfortunate condition.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th June 1912.

The situation in Persia.

4. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th June 1912, says that, though it was quite natural for the Persian Red Crescent Society to express its indignation at the desecration of the shrine at Meshed by the Russian troops, no useful purpose could be served by asking the British Government to provide against the recurrence of such outrages in Persia.

The editor ascribes the trouble which the Persians have recently suffered to their internal dissensions, and remarks that they should unite and present a united front to their aggressors in case they desire to improve their present condition.

The future of China.

5. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), discussing the future of China, remarks that if she succeed in overcoming her present difficulties, both financial and administrative, she is likely to shortly make very great progress, but that if they prove too great for her it will take a very long time before her prosperity is re-established.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 5th June 1912.

The boycott of Italian goods.

6. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), expresses regret that the Muhammadans of India have not vigorously boycotted Italian goods.

The editor urges his co-religionists to abominate and discard everything Italian, and he observes that Muhammadans should never buy anything made in Italy, seeing that the Italians are deadly enemies of the Turks, and that every Muhammadan is bound to sympathize with the latter in their present troubles.

OUDH AKHBAR, 9th June 1912.

The boycott of Italian and Russian goods.

7. A correspondent, who signs himself "BASHIR-UD-DIN AHMAD, MEDICAL PRACTITIONER, JEHANGIRABAD, DISTRICT BARA BANKI," contributes an article to the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 9th June 1912, in which he deplores the present strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, and says that it is a source of weakness and a disgrace to both the communities. He discusses at length the Italian excesses in Tripoli and the Russian atrocities in Persia, and describes the present pitiable condition of the Muhammadans. He urges the need for unity between Hindus and Muhammadans at this critical time, and suggests that, instead of sending volunteers to the seat of war or of organizing protest meetings, both Hindus and Muhammadans should make united efforts to effect a complete boycott of Italian and Russian goods. He asserts that if three hundred millions of Indians combine to wage a commercial war against Italy and Russia, they will be able to teach the Powers a good lesson, and he expresses the hope that the common boycott will strengthen the bonds of unity between Hindus and Muhammadans in future. He says that British rule is best suited for India, and he urges both Hindus and Muhammadans to take full advantage of its benign administration to promote the interests of their respective communities, and at the same time to realize their responsibilities as component parts of an united Indian nation.

The London branch of the All-India Muslim League and the Dardanelles question.

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), refers to the reply given by Lord Crewe to the representation made by the London branch of the All-India Muslim League to the Secretary of State for India asking him to prevent Italy from extending her military operations to Turkish possessions in Europe, and remarks that it is neither calculated to console the Muhammadans nor to remove their anxiety. The editor says that, though the Muhammadans of India are faithful and loyal to Government, no one can safely say how far they will be able to control themselves in case events like the desecration of Meshed and the forcing of the Dardanelles be repeated, and he asks the British Government to adopt a policy such as the Muhammadans have a right to expect from the greatest Muhammadan Power in the world.

The Italian-Turkish war.

9. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 9th June 1912, referring to the Italian-Turkish war says that, instead of gaining in military fame, statesmanship, political foresight, or in the matter of territory by her attack on Tripoli, Italy has lost in money, men and in reputation. The editor discusses the efforts made by Italy to bring about international interference in the progress of the war by creating compromising situations, and also her attempts to induce the European Powers to bring pressure to bear upon Turkey to cede Tripoli, and remarks that they have failed signally on account of the unreasonableness of her demands.

He suggests that the latest threat held out by Italy that she would strike much harder, if Turkey did not submit soon, shows that her economic condition will not permit of her carrying on this expensive war much longer. He contrasts the anxiety and nervousness displayed by Italy with the calmness and forbearance exhibited by Turkey, and points out that Turkey did nothing to prompt Italian aggression, and that she assumed the defensive only when the conduct of Italy left her no choice. He goes on to say that Italy would never have ventured on this perilous enterprise had she foreseen her economic difficulties, and, in support of his statements about the economic condition of Italy in 1911, he reproduces the assertion made by the Italian correspondent of the Economist (London), that government securities had fallen in value, that the year was one of huge losses for the staple Italian industries and that wheat had reached a famine price.

He expresses surprise at the conceit of the Italians in introducing a bill in the Italian Parliament authorizing the Government to create a ministry for the colonies in anticipation that the Turks would be defeated, and ridicules Italy's attempt to force Turkey to accept the decree of annexation by her operations in the Ægean Sea. He concludes with the remark that Italy can neither conclude the war for fear of popular displeasure nor prolong it for economic reasons.

10. The editor of the Trishul (Benares), in the issue of the 16th May 1912 (received on the 8th June), discusses the past greatness of India, the strength and intelligence which the people possessed, says that the arts and industries of the country provided for other countries of the world, in the same way that now India unfortunately is dependent upon them, and he remarks that the degeneration of the country is due to the influence of time. He expresses the hope that the awakening in the East and the rapid progress made in Japan, which has extended to China and India, will make the Hindus realize their present condition, and that they will prove once more to the world that they are in no way inferior to other nations, and that they are able to restore the lost glory of their ancestors.

The future of India.

11. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), refers to the report vouched for by the Indian Patriot (Madras), that the Collector of Tinnevelly sent State telegrams to his subordinates and ordered all offices to be closed in honour of the birth of his son, and that the treasury deputy collector, Mr. Anna Swamy, conveyed this order to all the treasuries by means of telegrams at Government expense. The editor ridicules the action of the Collector, and says that even the Governor of Madras does not decree a public holiday in this manner.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

The Collector of Tinnevelly.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th June 1912, says that the fact that the Bengal Government has not yet sent its report about the changes to be made in the Council Regulations shows that Lord Carmichael intends to consult every shade of public opinion in his presidency before coming to any conclusion. The editor supports the Bengal leaders in opposing the condition that any candidate for election from a division must have been in residence in that division, and also must have served on a municipality or a district board for three years.

He asks for its abolition that in view of the fact that no such condition is laid down in the United Provinces, and that the Muhammadan constituency and the European merchants are allowed to elect representatives without any such restriction. He expresses doubt as to whether the Government will do anything to satisfy the demand of the Bengal leaders for an adequate representation of middle class interests, and says that, as the people of the United Provinces are dissatisfied with the inadequate representation of the middle classes in their own provinces, they will watch the action of the Bengal Government in this matter with keen interest. He remarks that as non-official public opinion has not been consulted in the United Provinces, there is little hope of important changes here. He advises that the municipalities of Naini Tal, Almora and Garhwal should now be given the right of returning a representative to the Legislative Council, and expresses the hope that the districts now forming the Jhansi division will be allowed to continue to enjoy the privilege of returning a member to the Provincial Council.

ARYA MITRA, 8th June 1912.

The Press Act and the Anglo-Indian journals.

13. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th June 1912, says that the controversy raised by the Anglo-Indian papers with regard to the statement of Lord Crewe that they were as much liable to prosecution under the Press Act as the Indian papers is quite unjustifiable, and remarks that the object of legislature would be vitiated if a statute were not binding upon all people without distinction of race or creed, and that it is absolutely essential, in the interests of order and peace, that all people should obey the laws of the country.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

The Press Act and the Anglo-Indian journals.

14. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), referring to the agitation in the Anglo-Indian press with regard to Lord Crewe's statement that Anglo-Indian journalists are not exempt from the operation of the Press Act, says that their present indignation is due to the fact that they were under the impression that the Press Act was passed only to suppress Indian papers. The editor remarks that the reason for their having that impression was that their Indian contemporaries were constantly being punished for publishing inflammatory matter, while no action was taken, in spite of the representation of Indian public men, whenever any offending article appeared in an Anglo-Indian paper. He says that though he is not a supporter of the Press Act, it is satisfactory to note that Lord Crewe has declared the same law to be applicable to Indian and Anglo-Indian journals alike.

Indians in South Africa.

15. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), discusses the Emigration Bill which is being considered by the South African Union Assembly, and says that the fact that the colonials propose to apply the Australian educational test to regulate the entry of Indians into South Africa shows that they do not consider that they and the Indians are the subjects of the same Sovereign, nor that India is an integral part of the British Empire. The editor expresses apprehension that the Government of India may be satisfied with this concession, and that the Indian residents in South Africa may also be willing to accept it. He says that the disabilities of South African Indians cannot to allowed to remain for ever, and that unless distinctions based on colour are removed and the equality of mankind is recognized everywhere, Indians will not be contented and will go on working ceaselessly for the attainment of their full rights. He observes that no decision, which is not based on the equality of man, is final, and urges that a vigorous agitation be carried on for removing every disability encountered by the Indians in South Africa. The editor also suggests that Indians should not allow any South African to enter India unless he satisfies an educational test in Hindi. He admits that they have as yet no power to enforce such a restriction, but urges that if they agitate vigorously and create a strong public opinion on the subject in the country, Government cannot go against the entire population and will be forced to act according to its wishes. He remarks in conclusion that unless every Indian shows his determination not to allow his countrymen to be ill-treated in South Africa, and unless the colonials are made to understand that their unfair proceedings will provoke retaliation on the part of Indians, it is impossible to remove the unjust disabilities imposed upon the Indian residents in South Africa.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

16. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), expresses regret that a section of Muhammadans are constantly trying to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans, and points out that only recently the Muhammadans of Kashmir complained to the British Resident and charged the state with showing partiality to its Hindu subjects. The editor says that another instance of this uncharitable attitude of Muhammadans towards the Hindus is furnished by a correspondent of the Bengalee (Calcutta) who reports that the local Muhammadan anjuman of Darjeeling recently sought by every means at its disposal to stop the performance of a historical drama named the Kasia by a local Hindu theatrical company.

An Indian Muhammadan on his brethren.

ADVOCATE, 9th June 1912.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th June 1912, has the following :—

"AN INDIAN MUHAMMADAN ON HIS BRETHREN.

The Modern Review for June publishes an extract from a report of a conversation which a representative of the Paris Temps had with Mr. Abbas Tyabji, who is a Judge of the Baroda High Court. Mr. Abbas Tyabji said :—

'We have got the blindest of politicians. The Musalmans live with their eyes turned towards Constantinople, in regarding the Caliph not only as the commander of the believers, a rôle purely religious, but as a political leader of the world-wide revival towards which we all must work. The Utopia of this conception brings on our ruin, as it deprives us of the only necessary strength, which is the sense of nationality. English subjects, destined to submit to English rule, Indians by birth and tradition, forced to live and reside in India, members of a minority which cannot emancipate itself as the Hindu majority is very strong, we again accentuate our weakness by confounding the Ottoman cause with the Musalman faith. We are no nation, but one cannot live in the dreams of the past. Although working to maintain the Musalman traditions (Mr. Tyabji had one of the mosques of Baroda built with a Koranic school attached to it at his own expense) I have tried my best to make my co-religionists understand that they must be Indians first, because one cannot exist without a mother country, and that they must acquire English culture.'

We present the above to the preachers of the gospel of separatism. They should ponder over the observations made by Mr. Abbas Tyabji."

LEADER, 12th June 1912.

The Muslim League.

18. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th June 1912, publishes the third instalment of the contributed article entitled "The Muslim League" (vide Selections No. 20, paragraph 19), in which the writer says that before condemning any matter of policy or any measure of statesmanship determined by the Muslim League, which consists of the ablest and most experienced leaders of the community, its critics should realize their responsibility, and should not allow petty or personal interests to override the solemn functions of patriotism. He concedes that there is need for change in the constitution of the League, but points out that even the most moderate constitutional changes cannot be effected without careful deliberation. He expresses regret that very few replies have been received to the circular letter issued by the secretary of the League asking for suggestions to effect changes in the methods of the League. He contrasts the difficulty of the task that lies before the League, with those of the National Congress, and says that the Congress has been working for the last twenty-five years and has been supported by hundreds of educated Hindus who have been working with a fixed purpose, and who have been helped by a large number of daily and weekly journals and periodicals, while the Muslim League has been in existence for only five years, and during that period most of its time has been taken up in framing rules, establishing branches and in pushing forward the Muslim University movement. He asserts that the Muslim League has really been at work for only for a year and a half, and that during that period it has been successful in convincing Englishmen that Muhammadans are entitled to consideration at their hands. He contests the suggestion that the League is guided by a clique, and says that its officials, who are all men of high position, are assisted by a council of forty responsible Muhammadan leaders and by a large number of educated and enlightened members of the League. He expresses satisfaction at the national feeling and the respect shown for their leaders by Muhammadans during the recent Muslim University movement, and says that the existence of a due regard for leaders is essential for Muhammadan political life.

With regard to the suggestion that the proceedings of the League should be conducted in Urdu, he expresses the opinion that the English language should be preferred as being the best medium of communication with Government. Referring to the objection that the "annual meetings of the League are confined to its members only," he says that if every one were allowed to take part in its deliberations, it would be difficult to maintain a balance of interests, and he points out that in every civilized community the leaders alone conduct the deliberations of national assemblies. He appeals for more strenuous work on behalf of the League, and points out that success cannot be achieved by condemning and discarding past methods.

AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

Liberal and Conservative Muhammadans and the Muslim League.

19. A correspondent, who signs himself "NAZIR AHMED (ALIG)," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), in which he refers to a contributed article that appeared in the Zamindar (Lahore) of the 8th April explaining the meaning of the expression Hizbul Ahrar (Liberals) and Hizbul Mohafizin (Conservatives), and remarks that the definition of the terms and their application in the case of Muhammadans is most misleading.

He takes exception to the remarks of the correspondent in the same article to the effect that the Muslim League represents the views of Conservative Muhammadans, and observes that the League is the only representative and advanced institution of the Muhammadans which advocates Liberal principles.

He asks the writer to refrain from making such strictures on the League in future, and urges him not to follow men who do not understand politics.

LEADER, 6th June 1912.

Mr. Montagu and Indian Muhammadans.

20. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer refers to the protest of the Moslem (Poona) against the statement made by Mr. Montagu that the Muhammadans in India do not compose one race, and says that even the patience of Anglo-Indian newspapers, who had been hitherto encouraging Muhammadans to set up extravagant claims against the Hindus, has been exhausted by the vain and hollow pretensions of Muslim leaders. In support of his contention he reproduces the assertion made in the Madras Times that Mr. Montagu's opinion about Indian Muhammadans was borne out by the census figures, and reminds his readers that the British wrested India from the Sikhs and the Marhattas, who had already overcome the moribund Moghal power, and he ridicules the claim that the Muhammadan community constitute a strong bulwark against the rising tide of Hindu domination. He expresses the opinion that Anglo-Indians are now not such blind slaves to the policy of "divide and rule," and that the demand of impossible privileges by Muhammadans simply serves to create disgust, and he therefore advises Muhammadans to give up their inordinate desire for more and more rights and privileges.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 5th June 1912.

Mr. Montagu and Indian Muhammadans.

21. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), refers to an article which appeared in the Bombay Gazette under the heading "Imprudence of Mr. Montagu," in which the writer strongly objected to the statement made by Mr. Montagu that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal had no connection with the Muhammadans of the other parts of the world, and remarks that the views expressed by the writer in the Bombay Gazette are quite correct, seeing that the nationality of Muhammadans is based on their religion, and that the conception of a nation amongst the Muhammadans is quite different from that of the Europeans.

The editor says that the Muhammadans throughout the world regard one another as brethren belonging to one nationality, and in support of his contention he refers to the sympathy expressed by the Muhammadans of different countries for their suffering brethren in Tripoli and Persia.

In conclusion he enquires whether Mr. Montagu, by wounding the feelings of the Muhammadans, wished to cause resentment amongst them in the same way that Lord Curzon created indignation among the Bengalis by calling the Indians liars.

He expresses the hope that the British Government will ask Mr. Montagu to explain the propriety of such offensive remarks about the Muhammadans, and that he will be compelled to admit the inaccuracy of his statement.

He goes on to refer to the remarks of the Indian Social Reformer (Bombay) with regard to the protest of the Burma Muslim League against the pronouncement of Mr. Montagu about Indian Muhammadans and the grant of political rights to them, and observes that the difference of belief amongst the various sects of Muhammadans is not of much importance, and that the nationality of the Muhammadans is based on their religion. With regard to the grant of political rights to Muhammadans, he says that it does not depend on the generosity of Government, but on the political awakening amongst them.

ABHYUDAYA, 9th June 1912.

22. In an article entitled "Liberty" the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 9th June 1912 (received on the 13th June), says that liberty means complete freedom which may produce the greatest happiness and allow ample scope for the exercise of all the powers of man and make for prosperity and progress.

Liberty.

He contends that political freedom is a necessary constituent of true liberty, and defines complete political freedom as independence from the yoke of a foreign race.

He invites attention to the unhappy relations between capital and labour in the West, and urges Indians not to imitate western institutions.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 30th May 1912.

23. A correspondent, who signs himself "SHIVA GOVIND MISRA," contributes an article to the Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 10th June), in which he says that the present conditions in India show that Indians will be confronted with many troubles and sufferings in the future, which will reduce them to a most miserable plight if they be not prepared beforehand to overcome them. He observes that they should therefore cultivate the spirit of self-help in order that they may be able to withstand these sufferings and not succumb to them. He further says that if they become self-reliant they will also be able to remove their present defects.

With regard to honorary munsifs, the editor expresses the opinion that they should have a knowledge of law and rules, and with a view to avert judicial eccentricities, they should not be allowed to sit singly.

He goes on to remark that the experiment should be tried with care as it is capable of much public good, and suggests that the present anamolous practice of the Collector nominating the honorary munsifs should be discontinued, and that the District Judge should have the power to nominate, if necessary in consultation with the Collector.

LEADER, 6th June 1912.

25. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912, refers to a paper by Sir Henry Cotton which was included in the annual report of the Society for the Abolition of Capital Punishment, and says that the statement made by Sir Henry Cotton that a large proportion of the capital sentences passed in India are ultimately modified proves that death sentences are passed with a very light heart in India. The editor suggests the publication of a return showing the number of death sentences which have been revised or reversed by the highest judicial authority or by the executive government in each province, and that due consideration should be given to this important question.

LEADER, 5th June 1912.

26. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 5th June 1912, refers to the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Basu in the Imperial Legislative Council recommending an enquiry into police administration in India, and expresses satisfaction that the promise of gradual eradication of police malpractices made by Sir Reginald Craddock during the debate on the motion is being fulfilled, at any rate in the United Provinces, as is evident from the circular that recently appeared in the United Provinces Police Gazette on the subject of enquiry into cases of alleged misconduct on the part of the police. The editor expresses the hope that similar orders have been sent by the Government of India to other provinces.

With regard to Sir Reginald's appeal for more non-official sympathy and co-operation with the police, he assures Government that as soon as it gives tangible evidence of its desire to improve the police administration, public sympathy will be forthcoming. He goes on to say that when the police administration becomes more humane and less corrupt, and ceases to be the object of dread that it is at present, it will naturally evoke popular sympathy and support. He urges Indians to keep a sharp eye for cases of alleged misconduct on the part of the police towards the public or prisoners in their custody, and appeals to them to assist the authorities in their determination to stamp out police malpractices of this nature.

The Indian police.

27. With regard to the complaint that the police do not receive help from the public in tracing crimes, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), suggests that the Indian Evidence Act should be amended, and that magistrates should be given power to ascertain the true facts of a case and should not be bound by hard and fast rules of law, but should be authorized to convict accused persons if they are convinced of their guilt. The editor advises that the people should regard it as their duty to make over criminals to the police, that they should accustom themselves to giving evidence in law courts, that the police also should realize their responsibilities as public servants, and that all cases of oppression on the part of the police should be severely dealt with by the authorities.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th June 1912.

The appearance of yellow fever in the Madras presidency and the need for sanitary improvements.

28. Referring to the appearance of a new type of fever in certain parts of the Tinnevelly district in the Madras presidency and to the report of Captain Woodfield that it was caused by the unsatisfactory state of sanitation and water supply, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), says that these two evils are prevalent in all parts of the country, and urges that Government should take immediate measures for the improvement of sanitation and water supply and thereby save the people from becoming victims to a new epidemic. The editor expresses the hope that Lord Hardinge, who is so sympathetic a ruler, will give due consideration to this important matter.

The Gorakhpur Municipality.

29. In the course of "Gorakhpur notes" published in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th June 1912, complaining of the excessive fares amounting to Rs. 8 or more charged during the darbar by gariwalas for a gari to the Hoey Park and back, which is a distance of two miles only. The writer invites attention to the disgraceful condition of the roads and to the filthiness of various quarters of the city, and suggests that a special health officer should be appointed soon.

He says that there is general dissatisfaction with the municipal arrangements, and observes that, seeing that things are getting worse owing to a non-official head, the people would like to be restored to their former condition under an official chairman.

LEADER, 7th June 1912.

The Agra Municipality.

30. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 7th June 1912, publishes a letter from its Agra correspondent in which he protests against the levying of an additional tax of Rs. 40,000 on the city of Agra in order to improve the financial condition of the Agra Municipal Board, and says that the board can only get out of its present financial difficulties by reducing its expenditure. He advises the abolition of the posts of assistant secretary, assistant engineer, surveyor, assistant octroi superintendent and secretary-engineer should be abolished, and that an Indian secretary on Rs. 200 per month, a Roorkee upper subordinate engineer on Rs. 200 or Rs. 250 per month and a competent head clerk in place of the assistant secretary on Rs. 100 or Rs. 125 per month should be appointed. He urges that other sources of income besides that of direct taxation should be taken full advantage of.

31. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 9th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that though it has been notified by the chairman of the Allahabad Municipal Board that water would be supplied from 5 to 9 a.m. in the morning and from 5 to 8 p.m. in the evening, outlying places such as Daraganj and Baksi do not receive a regular supply during these hours. He urges that arrangements be made to give these quarters a continuous and regular supply for at least three hours in the morning and two hours in the evening.

LEADER, 9th June 1912.

The water supply at Allahabad.

32. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 8th June 1912, complains that the scarcity of water at Allahabad is now assuming alarming dimensions, and expresses regret that the opening of paonsalas is being delayed. The editor says that the water famine and the failure to open a sufficient number of paonsalas immediately is likely to cause intense suffering to the people in the hot month of June, and urges that something should be done very soon to relieve the sufferers.

LEADER, 8th June 1912.

The water supply at Allahabad.

33. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th June 1912, says that the indignation of the residents of Allahabad at the failure of the water supply at a time of the year when the supply of wells also fails is quite reasonable.

ADVOCATE, 6th June 1912.

The water supply at Allahabad.

The editor insists on a sifting enquiry being made into the matter, and enquires why the suggestion of the Sanitary Engineer about the repair of the existing engines was not attended to at once. He says that it should also be ascertained whether the staff of the water works department were to be blamed for the delay.

With regard to the attempt of the board to shift the responsibility on the water works committee, he contends that if the Sanitary Engineer's report had been laid before it and the members had not taken any action they were surely to be blamed. He urges that immediate measures be meanwhile taken to make the water supply normal.

34. With reference to the scarcity of water at Allahabad the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), expresses gratification that the municipality has passed the resolution for providing fifty paonsalas in the city, and suggests that old unserviceable wells should also be repaired to meet the wants of the people.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th June 1912.

The water supply at Allahabad.

The editor expresses regret that an independent committee was not entrusted with the task of enquiring into the causes which led to the present state of affairs. He says that the public had no cause for complaint against the former engineer, and asks as to how it is that suddenly the people have been confronted with all these difficulties.

He enquires whether this state of things has not been brought about as a result of personal squabbles and strifes, and suggests that a sifting enquiry be made to fix the responsibility on the right person.

35. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 13th June 1912, reviews the first annual report of the "Distressed Indian Students' Aid Committee" for the year ending 31st December 1911, and commends the efforts of the committee to prevent cases occurring of Indian youths in England being demoralized instead of improved in character, whether owing as a result of imperfect education or of insufficient pecuniary resources. The editor says that the committee is quite justified in appealing to parents and friends not to send any one for education in England unless full provision is made for his expenses. He expresses the hope that every possible assistance, pecuniary and otherwise, will be offered to the committee by generous persons in India as well as in England for the promotion of its objects.

36. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 9th June 1912 (received on the 13th June), expresses regret that students who have passed the vernacular middle examination cannot understand even ordinary newspaper Hindi, and deplores that the United Provinces government has been neglecting Hindi education during the last twenty-five years. The editor complains that the standard of education in Hindi, Indian history and various other subjects has been lowered, and he urges Government to give its attention to this important matter.

MASHRIQ, 4th June 1912.

The Cawnpore Technological Institute.

37. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), says that the Cawnpore Technological Institute would do much more useful work if, instead of teaching too many subjects, it were to confine its attention to one or two important subjects like tanning or dyeing.

The editor suggests that a magazine dealing with recent inventions be issued from the institute.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

The place of education in the regeneration of India.

38. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), says that, as the goal of all the various activities of Indians, including social and political reforms, is the regeneration of the country, it is surprising that they have made so little progress towards the attainment of their object.

The editor points out that it is absolutely necessary in order that the leaders of the country may be successful in carrying out social and political reforms that they should be supported by the masses, and he remarks that they should therefore bestow all their attention and energy for the present upon the extension of education among the people, in order to awaken them to a consciousness of their miserable condition, and impress upon them the need for improving it.

In conclusion he says that if the education of the masses is neglected all attempts at the regeneration of the country are bound to prove abortive and unsuccessful.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

The place of moral instruction in education.

39. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), says that moral instruction should occupy the first place in any scheme of education, seeing that character is the most important factor in the success of life. The editor deplores that at present the ideal of education has become so degraded that even educated persons do not realize the importance of good moral character, and points out that this defect has now deprived the Indians of that keenness of intellect which they once possessed. He says that there is no education worth the name which does not include moral instruction and that the reason why Indians have so far made no substantial progress in spite of the large number of reformers is that the development of character has been neglected. He deprecates the tendency of present-day education to do everything for the sake of show, and he counsels the encouragement of that education which fits a man for unselfish service of his brethren.

The raising of school fees.

40. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the raising of fees in government schools, the imposition of double fees on the students who fail in their annual examinations and the restriction of the number of students in every school class, and remarks that all these restrictions appear to have been devised to check higher education amongst Indians. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and observes that much dissatisfaction prevails against the decision of the Department of Public Instruction about the raising of fees in government schools.

The editor says that the British Government never desired to prevent its subjects from acquiring higher education, and expresses regret that the action of some of its officers leads people to infer that Government itself is opposed to higher education. He complains that the Indian Fellows of the University do not discharge their duties properly, and that there is probably no non-official member on the syndicate who properly represents the people.

The raising of school fees.

41. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), takes exception to the raising of fees in government schools, and remarks that the lower and middle class people in the province will now find it very difficult to educate their sons. The editor says that he fails to understand the motive of Government in raising the school fees, when the leaders of the people in India and other countries are of opinion that a country cannot make any material progress unless the masses are given compulsory and free education.

He blames the Indian representatives on the committee appointed to consider the question of raising fees in government schools, for discouraging the education of the future generation.

42. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 7th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), says that the student community is seriously perturbed at the report that the Education Department has issued an order that school students who fail once will be required to pay double fees, and that those who fail twice will be liable to expulsion, and will not be eligible to appear again at the examination. MUSAFIR, 7th June 1912.

The new rules regarding school fees.

The editor expresses the opinion that these restrictions practically amount to a discouragement of education among the middle classes, and suggests that Government should have the orders withdrawn.

43. The Educational Magazine (Ghazipur), for the months of April and May 1912 (received on the 7th June), protests against the enhancement of fees in secondary schools, and says that the new rule laying down that failed students will be required to pay double fees will cause great hardship to poor students. EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, April and May 1912.

Increase of fees in secondary schools.

The editor expresses the opinion that Government should not place obstacles in the way of educational progress, and suggests that it should abolish the rule about the payment of double fees, and should instead require failed students to pay double or treble admission fees before they are permitted to continue their studies in their old class.

44. A correspondent, who signs himself "SHAUKAT HASAN NIZAMI FROM AMROHA, DISTRICT MORADABAD," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), in which he suggests that some gentleman from the Punjab should be appointed as honorary secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and says that in view of the fact that the three preceding secretaries belonged to the United Provinces it is advisable that the next appointment should go to Punjab. He asks the national papers to support his suggestion and to nominate some capable man from the Punjab for the post. AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

45. Al Khalil (Bijnor), of the 8th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), takes exception to the remarks of the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore) that Nawab Mushtaq Husain's letter (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 44), will be an obstacle to the realization of funds for the proposed Muslim University. The editor commends the Nawab's boldness in giving out his opinion fearlessly, and urges the members of the constitution committee to publish a translation of the constitution in Urdu and to invite public discussion on it. AL KHALIL, 8th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

He takes exception to the fact that it is proposed to prescribe more difficult courses of study in the Muslim University than those prescribed in other existing universities in India. He asks that the chancellor of the proposed Muslim University should not have more power than what he exercises over the existing universities in the country, and observes that if this cannot be done the advisability of establishing the Muslim University is a matter of opinon.

He also urges that the power of affiliation should be granted to the Muslim University, and he asks the members of the constitution committee not to place too much authority in the hands of the teaching staff, as otherwise they are likely to act contrary to the wishes of the community.

46. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), refers to an editorial note of the Vakil (Amritsar) that the Muhammadans will never accept a University which is opposed to their ideals, and of which the affairs are to be controlled mostly by non-Muslims, and expresses agreement with it. The editor remarks that the present constitution of the proposed Muslim University is detrimental to the interests of the Muhammadan community, and says that public opinion is opposed to it. UNION GAZETTE, 7th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

He urges the members of the committee to make alterations in the constitution according to the popular desire, and observes that the Muslim University should be a national institution, as otherwise Muhammadans will have no desire to establish a University.

QAISER-I-HIND, 6th June 1912,

The proposed Muslim University.

47. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), refers to the article contributed by Nawab Mushtaq Husain on the subject of the proposed Muslim University constitution to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 22nd May 1912 (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 44), and remarks that the way in which the affairs of the University are now being criticised will not only retard its progress but put obstacles in the way of collecting the amount required for the grant of a charter, with the result that it will become impossible to establish the University. He states that the opinion expressed in some quarters that the University will be residential and that it will not be given the power to affiliate other colleges, has given offence to Muhammadans, but he trusts that there is no foundation for this report. He goes on to say that the objections of Nawab Mushtaq Husain will be treated with due regard, and that proper consideration will be paid to public opinion, so that it is incorrect to say that the members of the University constitution committee are inspired by personal motives, and are opposed to the interests of the Muhammadan public. He expresses the hope that the final draft will be decided upon in accordance with the popular desire, and that in case any differences arise between Government and the constitution committee they will be settled gradually after the establishment of the University. He concludes with the remark that there is nothing in the present situation to justify any forebodings of disaster and failure for the University.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 5th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

48. The Hon'ble Raja Sir Muhammad Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadur, K.C.I.E., of Mahmudabad, contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), in which he says that, on being informed of Nawab Mushtaq Husain's inability, owing to his illness, to attend the meeting of the constitution committee to be held at Lucknow, he hastened to Aligarh to acquaint himself personally with the views of the Nawab about the constitution of the proposed University, and informally discussed with him, at the house of Nawab Muhammad Muzammil-ullah Khan, his criticisms of the constitution. The Hon'ble Raja promises to lay before the constitution committee at Lucknow the objections raised by the Nawab, and expresses the hope that the members of the committee will carefully consider them before submitting their proposals to Government for approval.

He promises to publish the constitution as soon as possible in order to invite public discussion on it, and observes that the constitution, which will be placed before Government, will be in perfect accord with the wishes of his community.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 5th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

49. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), in which he refers to the opinion expressed by some of the newspapers that his previous article on the constitution of the proposed Muslim University (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 44), is calculated to cause despair among the Muhammadans as to the prospect of the grant of a charter for the proposed University, and that its inopportune publication will put obstacles in the way of the realization of subscriptions promised for the University. He says that if the Muhammadan public will carefully weigh the urgency of the situation which led him to write on the subject, and if it will realize that the task of framing the constitution and the regulations for the University has been entrusted to the hands of the most capable and reliable men available in the community, who are working strenuously in the interests of the community, it will be quite satisfied and come forward to subscribe more liberally to the University fund than it did in the past.

He states that the decision of the constitution committee which meets at Lucknow on the 2nd and 3rd June will not be final, and that, after it has considered the objections and suggestions, the present constitution and regulations will be amended accordingly, and published in order to invite discussion on it. He goes on to say that after the Muhammadan public has carefully studied and expressed its opinion on the constitution, the committee will meet again to consider the criticisms made by the public, and finally adopt the constitution which will be placed before Government.

He expresses gratitude to Raja Sir Muhammad Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadur for promoting the cause of the proposed Muslim University, and observes that the Muhammadan community requires only such leaders as the Hon'ble Raja.

He asks his co-religionists to pay their subscriptions, and urges them to entertain no doubts with regard to the grant of a charter for the Muslim University. He exhorts the Muhammadans not to lose heart and to continue in their efforts to realize funds for the establishment of the proposed Muslim University, and observes that they should never allow the idea that they will not be granted a University to enter into their mind.

50. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer says that in case the power to affiliate other colleges be not granted to the Muslim University, it will cause great disappointment to the Muhammadans and will greatly lessen the usefulness of the University by limiting its influence within the precints of Aligarh.. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

He denounces any proposal to drop the idea of establishing a University and to utilize the funds collected for a technological institution or for sending students to foreign countries.

He urges the Muhammadans to accept the charter of the University on any terms which Government may consider advisable, and to agitate for more rights and liberties afterwards.

51. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), takes exception to the criticisms made of the proposed Muslim University constitution, seeing that it is not yet finally approved by the committee. AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor suggests the publication of the constitution, and urges that sufficient time should be given to the public to discuss on it. He says that the constitution committee should give its decision after it has been fully discussed by the public.

52. With regard to the question of affiliation to the Muslim University of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, the Medina (Bijnor), of the 1st June 1912 (received on the 8th June), says that it would cause very great dissatisfaction to the Muhammadans of India if Government decide to refuse the power of affiliation to the University. MEDINA, 1st June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor states that Muhammadans are too poor to go to Aligarh from distant places to complete their education, and expresses the opinion that a University, with a limited sphere of influence confined to Aligarh alone, could be of no use to the seventy millions of Indian Muhammadans, and that it would be only a waste of public money to use the funds for such an institution.

53. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 1st June 1912 (received on the 8th June), describes the retirement of Nawab Mushtaq Husain from the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, as a national calamity at such a critical period when the draft constitution of the Muslim University is to be considered and finally settled. The editor urges that the draft regulations should be circulated for public criticism before any final decision is arrived at, and says that, as the proposed regulations wholly deprive Muhammadans of the liberties which they enjoy in controlling the affairs of the Aligarh college, the members of the constitution committee would be betraying the trust reposed in them by their community if they passed the regulations in their present form. MEDINA, 1st June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

54. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 10th June), publishes a letter contributed by Mahant Lachhman Das, in which he appeals to all sadhus and heads of temples to take their due share in the establishment of the proposed Hindu University, and to contribute liberally towards its funds. He also urges that those who have already promised donations should not wait for any demand being made for payment, but should send their money to the bank empowered to receive it. BHARAT DHARM NETA, 30th May 1912.

The proposed Hindu University.

MASHRIQ, 11th June 1912.

55. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th June 1912, refers to the opinions expressed by the Observer (Lahore) and the Dawn Magazine (Calcutta) about the proposed Muslim University, and remarks that the members of the constitution committee were wrong in imposing unnecessary and undesirable conditions on the proposed Muslim University. With regard to the question of affiliation to the proposed Muslim University of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, the editor says that there seems to be no reason why Government should refuse the right of affiliation to the University, if the sympathizers of both the Hindu and Muslim universities were to make joint representation to Government for the grant of the right.

The proposed Muslim and Hindu universities.

He says that if the right of affiliation be denied to the Muslim and Hindu universities their status will be only that of residential colleges, and suggests that Government should not interfere in the independent working of the universities until it observes any defect in their working.

He lays stress on the imparting of religious instruction to the students in the Hindu and Muslim universities, and remarks that unless the students are given religious instruction there can be no hope of making them loyal to their Government and well-wishers of mankind.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, April and May 1912.

56. The Educational Magazine (Ghazipur), for the months of April and May 1912 (received on the 7th June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer contends that, in view of the fact that there are a sufficient number of religious schools in India, and that the state universities are sufficient for those who study with the object of securing government service, there is no need for establishing the proposed Hindu and Muhammadan universities. The editor suggests that the funds already collected for the proposed universities should be utilized for sending students to England to compete for the Civil Service examination and to acquire technical and industrial education.

The proposed Muslim and Hindu universities.

LEADER, 5th June 1912.

57. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 5th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses regret at the persistent and unreasonable opposition of the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta), to the Dacca University scheme, and ridicules the objections made against the University in a recent article of that paper. He ridicules the argument of the Patrika that it was more necessary to employ funds in the improvement of sanitation than in the establishment of a University, and says that the argument of the Patrika about the illiteracy of the people of East Bengal and the want of enlightened public opinion in Dacca proves the urgent necessity of providing educational facilities in East Bengal and of creating suitable surroundings and congenial circumstances for the growth of enlightened public opinion in Dacca.

The proposed Dacca University.

He expresses the opinion that the opposition of the Patrika to the proposed University is chiefly animated by the fear that in the distribution of government appointments preference will be given to the alumni of the residential University over those of the Calcutta University.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 5th June 1912.

58. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 10th June), refers to the appointment of a committee to discuss and prepare a scheme for the proposed Dacca University, and remarks that sufficient consideration has not been shown for the interests of the Muhammadan community in forming the committee. The editor says that the number of Muhammadan members on the committee is very small, and that their interests are sure to suffer, seeing that the Hindu members who are opposed to the Dacca University scheme, will do everything to damage the interests of the Muhammadans.

The proposed Dacca University.

He expresses regret that Government should be against the affiliation to the Dacca University of other colleges besides the local colleges, and remarks that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal will derive no benefit from the University if its sphere of influence is restricted only to the local colleges.

He lays stress on the opening of residential colleges in different parts of the province, in order that the students may not be put to unnecessary expense in going to Dacca for their education.

He says that what the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal chiefly need is inexpensive hostels, free education and scholarships, and that if these facilities be not placed within their reach the Dacca University, instead of being beneficial to them, will actually prove injurious. He goes on to say that if Government cannot modify its decision in the matter of the affiliation to the Dacca University and so make the University beneficial to the Muhammadans, it should not ask them to contribute to the maintenance of the University.

59. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), contends that the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Montagu that the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal and other parts of India do not belong to a homogeneous nationality is not correct, and observes that the unifying influence of Islam extends to all nationalities that come within its fold.

The education of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

The editor complains that the Hindus, who profess to be patriots, are trying to raise the depressed classes, but they do not interest themselves in the education of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal. He expresses regret at the Hindu opposition to the Dacca University, and asserts that it is actuated by selfishness. He emphasizes the need for more leaders like the Nawab of Dacca, and says that, if the views of the Bengali Hindus be allowed to prevail in the Dacca University committee, the proposed University will become only residential and of no special advantage to the Muhammadans.

60. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th June 1912, expresses dissatisfaction at the refusal of the Government of India to provide funds for a professorship of Indian history and antiquities for the Calcutta University. The editor expresses regret that, in spite of the definite assurance given by Sir James DuBoulay, the Government of India has refused to grant funds, and he complains of the attitude of Government in the matter, in view of the fact that it was the declared intention of Government to encourage antiquarian studies, and that competent orientalists have asserted that Calcutta is the only centre in India which offers facilities for research in Indian history and antiquities. He insists that, in view of the vast fields of research as yet unexplored, facilities for such studies should be provided not only at Delhi but at other places also.

The Government of India and the Calcutta University.

He says that the contention of the Calcutta University that the M.A. candidates should have teaching in Indian history imparted by a professor trained in critical methods is a very reasonable one, and he remarks that these candidates, who formed nearly one-fourth of the total number of M.A. candidates, could never be expected to proceed to Delhi for studying at the Delhi Central Research Institute. He expresses gratification that the Calcutta University has decided to establish the proposed chair for history out of its own funds, and expresses the hope that its laudable example will be followed by sister universities in India.

61. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th June 1912, expresses satisfaction that the grant made by the United Provinces Government towards the better equipment of schools in furniture and libraries has proved an incentive to many schools, and that funds are now being raised towards improving the existing conditions of primary education. The editor expresses the hope that in the distribution of funds the United Provinces government will pay due regard to the question of opening new primary schools in order to increase the number of primary schools and the number of boys receiving primary education. He suggests that the growing tendency to separate the primary classes from the high schools will not further the cause of primary education, and expresses the hope that with ample funds at his disposal earmarked for the improvement and promotion of primary education, the Director of Public Instruction will be able to check this tendency.

The Government of India educational grant.

With regard to the objection that a head master cannot control a school containing 500 or 600 boys, he suggests that if the head master be relieved of a part of his work by an assistant master, he will be better able to supervise the primary classes. He expresses appreciation of the action of the Education Department in increasing the salaries of teachers of lower classes, and urges that it should not remove the lower classes from the influence of head masters of high schools. He goes on to say that the accommodation difficulty can be solved by putting up unpretentious buildings in the same compound with the main buildings. He states that there are a class of people who are not satisfied with the instruction imparted in pathshalas, maktabs or vernacular schools, and who desire their children to receive primary education in government or aided high schools, and he urges that, in order to satisfy the needs of this class, Government should refrain from separating the primary or lower classes from high schools. He expresses approval of the policy of spending the major portion of the educational grant in strengthening those classes where the character of the boys is first formed.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, May 1912.

The forest settlement in Garhwal.

62. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal), for May 1912 (received on the 10th June), says that the forest settlement undertaken by Government in Garhwal is viewed with suspicion by the villagers, and that they are under the impression that Government wants to take possession of forests by this method, and that in future they will have to pay taxes for grazing their cattle and taking wood or other produce from them. The editor assures them that their suspicions are unfounded and that Government has only undertaken the settlement in their interests so as to prevent the indiscriminate destruction of the forests.

He says that Government is showing great generosity in recognizing existing rights, and asks the villagers to establish their rights now with great care, seeing that, after the settlement is completed, any complaints will be too late. He remarks that as the bulk of the villagers are ignorant and illiterate the settlement officer himself should be very scrupulous in registering their rights, and should see that the villagers do not neglect to have their full rights registered under any misapprehension.

Disposal of orphans in Benares.

63. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th June 1912, publishes a letter by Mahadeo Prasad, Secretary of the Benares Arya Samaj, in which he refers to the refusal of the District Magistrate of Benares to grant an application made by him on the 31st May asking for the custody of a Hindu orphan girl, who had been made over to some missionary society. The writer contends that the magistrate was not justified in refusing the application, on the ground that information had been sent to the president of the samaj who was absent from the station. He says that the secretary or some other official of the samaj should have been served with the notice, and suggests that a question should be put in the council in order to ascertain the views of Government on the subject.

Commenting on the above, the editor contends that the information given to the president of the Benares Arya Samaj, who was absent from the station, was not sufficient, and asserts that before handing over the Hindu girl to the missionaries the District Magistrate should have satisfied himself that information was actually given and that no claim was made after the information. He says that even if the magistrate was under the impression that the Arya Samaj would not move in the matter, he should have informed the authorities of a Hindu orphanage said to be situated at Lachhmi Kund, and refers to the principle laid down in the report of the Indian Famine Commission of 1901, according to which orphans professing a particular religion should, as far as possible, be made over to persons belonging to that religion. He expresses the hope that the District Magistrate of Benares will take necessary steps to hand over the Hindu orphan girl to her co-religionists.

Lancashire and Indian cotton.

64. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 11th June 1912, says that as the demand for raw cotton has been increasing in Europe and America the cotton manufacturers of Lancashire have become fully alive to the disadvantages of dependence on foreign countries for their supply of raw cotton, and have come to realize the dangers of foreign speculation in cotton. The editor states that to remedy this state of dependence on foreign countries for the supply of raw cotton and in order to free Lancashire from the influences of foreign speculation, the British Cotton-growing Association has been casting about the whole length and breadth of the vast dominions beyond the seas under the British flag for suitable tracts for the production of raw cotton.

He notes that the Lancashire merchant has now turned his attention to India and is willing to enrich Indian agriculturists with some of the money which is at present passing into the hands of the American speculators. He criticises in the following terms the proposal of the Secretary of the International Federation of Master Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers' Associations that the new land in India to be shortly brought under irrigation "should only be leased to tenants who are willing to cultivate a certain portion of it with cotton in accordance with the directions of the Agricultural Department" :—

"As has been truly remarked by an English contemporary, the proposal of Mr. Schmidt is 'a one-sided proposal.' Why this insistence on the tenancy of the new land to be opened up by irrigation being conditioned by any such term as suggested by Mr. Arno Schmidt? Why this interference with the liberty of Indian cultivator to grow any crop he chooses to grow? What interest has an Indian agriculturist got in maintaining the unquestioned supremacy of Lancashire as the foremost cotton-manufacturing country? The irrigation schemes of the Government of India are financed from capital loans raised by the Government of India; and out of the taxes paid by the Indian people is paid the interest on these loans. If so, should the Indian tax-payer pay taxes so that Lancashire should reap large profits? And perhaps Mr. Arno Schmidt, while framing his proposal, did not care to pause and consider the political effect of the suggested Lancashire tenancy.

It will bring home to every agriculturist in the land as nothing else can do, the subserviency of the Government of India to the overruling interests of Lancashire. We have had on many occasions to feel that our legitimate interests were being sacrificed at the dictate and for the benefit of Lancashire. But this institution of the Lancashire tenancy, if carried out, will utterly discredit the prestige of the Government in the eyes of the people. If the cultivation of the long staple cotton is more remunerative, then the cultivator will go in for it, and there will be no necessity for the employment of compulsion to make him do so. But if it is not relatively as much paying as the cultivation of other agricultural produce, why should he suffer for the sake of the Lancashire manufacturers? Truly has this proposal been characterized by the Statist as one 'for saddling India with a cost which is to inure to the benefit of the European manufacturer.'"

65. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th June 1912, says that Government is not right in complaining that the circulation of the Government Gazette in Urdu does not increase, and remarks that Government itself does not adopt means to make it popular and increase its circulation. The editor suggests, in order to make the Urdu Gazette more attractive, that the English and Urdu versions be published simultaneously, that the Urdu version should contain all that is published in the English gazette, and should also contain foreign and Indian news of the week, that it should contain articles on agricultural and industrial subjects, that it should give the full proceedings of the Legislative Councils, that it should contain extracts from the Police Gazette, that it should be issued to all the members of the district and municipal boards, honorary magistrates, honorary munsifs, honorary assistant collectors, honorary assistant commissioners and title-holders, and that the annual subscription of the gazette should not be more than Rs. 3.

The publication of the Government Gazette in Urdu.

He invites the attention of the Government of Sir John Hewett to the suggestions, and remarks that it is a mistake to think that the province does not require the publication of a gazette in Urdu.

66. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th June 1912, condemns the system of realizing income tax from prostitutes, and states that its collection from them leads people to infer that Government does not care for the morality of its subjects but only concerns itself with collection of revenue.

MASHRIQ, 11th June 1912.

Income tax and the prostitutes.

He refers to the immoral life led by the prostitutes, and remarks that it is the duty of Government to prevent prostitution, and that the imposition of income tax on the prostitutes implies the legalization of their profession.

RAHBAR, 7th June 1912.

Distress among cattle in Kathiawar.

67. A correspondent, who signs himself "UMRAO SINGH AGARWAL, ROHTAK," contributes an article to the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th June 1912 (received on the 13th June), in which he commends the generosity of the late Lala Sruti Mal of Agra in making a gift of Rs. 5,000 for the relief of distress among cattle in Kathiawar, and urges the Hindu leaders to further the movement for the protection of cows. The writer demonstrates by means of quotations from the Hindu scriptures that it is the most important duty of the Hindus to save cows from destruction, and he asks them to arrange for the supply of fodder for the starving cattle in Kathiawar.

Offences by sepoys of the native Army.

68. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th June 1912 (received on the 13th June), referring to the conviction of some sepoys of the native Army to various terms of imprisonment at Bareilly and Ambala, for dakaiti and rioting respectively, complains that such cases of serious offences by sepoys are becoming frequent, and urges that Government should stop the growth of this dangerous spirit of lawlessness among them by inflicting severe punishment on the offenders.

HINDUSTANI, 7th June 1912.

Casual leave and holidays.

69. A correspondent, who signs himself "ABDUL ATHAR FROM MEJA, ALLAHABAD," contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 7th June 1912, in which he complains that when casual leave is granted to a government servant in continuation of some holidays, the holidays are also counted in casual leave.

He invites the attention of the Hon'ble Members of the Provincial Council to the matter, and expresses the hope that in future holidays will not be counted in casual leave.

The elevation of the depressed classes.

70. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), deplores the degraded condition of the depressed classes, and remarks that the social disabilities imposed upon them are a blot on Indian civilization. The editor observes that if the higher castes do not arouse themselves in time and improve the condition of the depressed classes, the Muhammadans and Christians will weaken their society by making converts from among them.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

Preventive measures against malaria.

71. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), suggests the desirability of Local Governments and public bodies taking precautionary measures against malaria, before it actually breaks out in the country. The editor also urges that steps should be taken to instruct the masses in the elements of sanitation.

AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

The amins in the Irrigation Department.

72. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the hard work which the amins in the Irrigation Department are required to do and of the poor salary they get. He says that their pay is altogether insufficient to enable them to live decently or to maintain their position, and he asks the Hon'ble Members of the local Legislative Council to kindly exert themselves in the interests of the amins.

V.—LEGISLATION.

COSMOPOLITAN, 2nd June 1912.

The Punjab Land Alienation Act.

73. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 2nd June 1912 (received on the 8th June), expresses surprise at the admiration of the Pioneer (Allahabad) for the Punjab Land Alienation Act, and remarks that even after twelve years of the passing of the Act the sense of injustice among the classes adversely affected by it is as keen as it was when the law was first passed. The editor points out that though the village bankers and other monied people are effectively prevented from acquiring land, the well-to-do agriculturists are forming syndicates to carry on money-lending business, and are buying up the holdings of poorer agriculturists, who are their debtors, and that they are proving themselves more rapacious and inexorable than the old class of hereditary bankers.

He goes on to say that, though the measure may be useful for a simple peasantry like that in the Santhal tracts in Bengal, it is uncalled for in the case of the wide-awake peasantry of the Punjab. He states that the sahukar would gladly charge a moderate interest if he received some sort of guarantee that his money was safe, and suggests that Government should devise means to secure this guarantee for the money-lender.

74. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), refers again to the proposed bill for the protection of women and minor girls, and says that there is no part of India where women are not subjected to all sorts of oppression. The editor quotes extensively from an article by Dr. H. Mann of Poona recently contributed to the Times of India (Bombay) to show how minor girls are sold in the Bombay presidency in order to be brought up to a life of immorality, and he expresses the hope that the educated public of that presidency will accord its full support to the proposed measure.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

The proposed legislation for the protection of women and minor girls.

VI.—Railway.

75. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the inconveniences suffered by third class passengers on railways and says that on the 12th May he remarked the difficulty which an old man had in obtaining a ticket for Lucknow at the third class booking office at Prayag.

LEADER, 6th June 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

He says that the practice of issuing tickets only a short time before the arrival of a train, instead of an hour before, as required by the rules, presents opportunities for corrupt practices, in that passengers do not get sufficient time to see that they receive the correct change, and he urges that the authorities should remove the grievances of the poor, illiterate and helpless third class passengers.

76. Referring to the serious railway collision between a goods train and a passenger train at Miranpur-Katra, a few miles from Shahjahanpur, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th June 1912, complains that no full report announcing the cause of the accident has as yet been published by the railway authorities.

ADVOCATE, 13th June 1912.

Railway accident at Miranpur-Katra.

The editor remarks that it will be interesting to learn how the "line clear" from each side was given to the two trains. He suggests that the relief party from Shahjahanpur did not reach the spot as early as it might have, and that but for the timely aid of forty Indian sepoys who were travelling by that train, many passengers would have died of suffocation under the overturned carriages.

77. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the overcrowding of passengers in third class compartments, the insufficiency of the water supply at railway stations, and the absence of intermediate class carriages on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, including the Indian Midland section, and asks the Railway Board to redress these grievances.

78. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 7th June 1912, has the following:—

LEADER, 7th June 1912.

Mrs. Besant and Theosophy.

"We have had now and then on many recent occasions to attack Mrs. Besant on the new cult she was developing, and in fairness we feel bound to quote below what she has to say about her own views in the matter and the relation of the said cult to the general body of the Theosophical Society. In the latest number of the Theosophist she writes as follows:—

'A few members of the society are striving with might and main to persuade the public that I am trying to impose my own views on the society, and to narrow its broad basis. In vain do I urge on members, time after time, the duty of perfect tolerance and mutual respect; in vain do I proclaim in the official gatherings of the society the perfect liberty of opinion which exists therein, and the fact that nothing is required for membership save acceptance of human brotherhood; in vain do I print in my own journals views at variance with mine. Unless I consent to be colourless, to express no opinions, to be in fact a King Log, and renounce all activity, these members will declare that I want to force my personal opinions on the society. If they were logical, they would see that to teach reincarnation and karma is quite as sectarian as to preach the coming of a World-Teacher, but they happen to agree with the one and not with the other—a personal, not a logical reason for objection. My vigorous teaching of reincarnation and karma does not compromise the neutrality of the society, and I ever declare that no member is bound to accept these, because he is a member; nor does my teaching of the coming of a World-Teacher 'compromise the neutrality of the society,' for I not only declare that no member is bound to accept this, but have even helped to establish a special order outside the Theosophical Society, for the spreading of this idea. All my life have I worked for freedom of thought and speech for others, and have taken it for myself, and I am too old to surrender my own freedom at the dictation of a few members of the Theosophical Society. That they are disturbed by it merely shows that they are not willing to allow to others the freedom they claim for themselves and which they use quite freely to attack me, knowing that in this they in no way imperil their membership, and that I am the first to defend their freedom of thought and expression. I may, now and then, wish that they were a little less personal, and would maintain their own views without attacking mine. But, after all, they have a right to be as personal as they please, and they serve a very useful function; for they prove by their presence in the society and by the free expression of their dislike for my views, the perfect liberty of opinion that exists among us. For this I feel grateful to them, and the more harshly they treat me, the more obvious does it become that they are free."

THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, May and June 1912.

79. The Theosophy in India (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 12th June), contains an article entitled "A plea for tolerance to the Order of the Star in the East" by Sir Subramania Iyer, formerly vice-president and now one of the members of the General Council of the Theosophical Society, in which the writer maintains that Mrs. Besant is not infringing her duty as a president nor jeopardizing the interests of the Theosophical Society. He takes the line that Mrs. Besant has asserted that she is in actual personal contact with the coming World-Teacher, and that she is among the agents selected by Him to prepare the way for His coming. He says that, unless members of the Theosophical Society think she is a victim to hallucination or an impostor, they must accept her right to found the Order. He does not consider it is inconsistent for her to be connected with the Order and to be president of the Theosophical Society at the same time.

Theosophy and the Order of the Star in the East.

He asserts that Madame Blavatsky pointed out that the functions of the Bodhi-Sattva involved periodical appearances as a World-Teacher, though she did not say when the next appearance would be, and he thinks that the president was quite right to put her information before the public.

He says that the next presidential election will show how the society regards Mrs. Besant's conduct.

He closes his note with an expression of admiration for the contents of the booklet entitled "At the feet of the Master" by Alcyone which, he says, are "simple yet vital teachings of the silver-tongued Maharishi, who will, as Bodhi-Sattva, combine in himself all the qualities of the Lord of Wisdom and of the Lord of Love."

The article is followed by a criticism by the editor, Babu Bhagwan Das, in which he commences by deprecating the form of the article by Sir Subramania as being that of the argumentum ad misericordiam. He says that there is no ground for the advocates of the Order of the Star of the East to plead that the Theosophical Society is intolerant. He says that Sir Subramania claims for Mrs. Besant what she disclaims for herself—infallibility as a teacher—and he points out many of her "blunders." He denies the right of Mrs. Besant as president of the Theosophical Society "not merely to think but to act," and he refers to the way in which the Theosophical Society in Europe is split up into factions and parties owing to propaganda by would-be theosophical leaders.

Referring to Sir Subramania's argument that outsiders cannot decide whether the youth Alcyone, who is the head of the Order, is going to be the Messiah, the editor remarks as follows:—

"These sentences of Sir Subramania's have of themselves fallen into the shape of the true old theologian's and revelation-defender's arguments and indicate the difficulty in the present situation. A World-Teacher is needed sorely. Therefore He will come. And by taking a disciple's body. Some forty years hence; or fifteen; or only ten as the world's need is great. This one is the most likely. Therefore this is the one. The World-Teacher's influence is already upon it. What can outsiders know? They have only to believe and follow. Let us all begin worshipping it at once. No others are any good. Such is the course of ordinary human thought.'

I assure Sir Subramania that there is absolutely no thought in my mind of any such unkindliness or ungentleness to the dear good lad, Alcyone J. Krishnamurti, such as he seems to suspect. I shall be only too happy to follow him or any one else, if he can only prove himself worthy. But till then, I maintain, it is not they who have been advising Mrs. Besant urgently and repeatedly for a year and a half, to keep him more in the background, but they who have been probably thrusting him forward before a justly, critical and questioning public, and placing upon his young shoulders a very very much heavier burden than he can yet bear, that are really guilty of unkindliness and ungentleness to him. For them to write, as Sir Subramania does, reminds one of the old nursery rhyme: 'Cry, baby, cry, Poke your finger in your eye, And then say that it is I.'

Sir Subramania, taking his stand on the impregnable and all-commanding petitio principii that Mr. Krishnamurti is the vehicle of a Maharshi, tries to divert attention to a comparison—which is not at all in point—of the merits of various books. The point is this instead. Even if the preface to 'At the feet of the Master" be quite correct (—and be it remembered that Mrs. Besant has written it on the basis of information given to her by Mr. Leadbeater, for the writing, &c., of the book did not take place in her presence, and I understand, various Adyar accounts of genesis differ—), is it sufficient reason for all that more or less public homage which has been paid sedulously to the scribe, as Sir Subramania calls him, by certain groups of our members?"

The Order of the Star in the East.

80. The Theosophy in India (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 12th June), contains an article entitled "The views of an old theosophist" by Brother J. N. Unwalla, ex-principal of the Bhavnagar College, who has been one of the councillors of the Indian section of the Theosophical Society for many years.

In it the writer commences by giving an account of his thirty-one years of service as a theosophist, after which he announces that he belongs to the Order of the Star in the East just as much as he belongs to other activities of the Theosophical Society.

He refers to the meeting of the Theosophical Society held on the 28th December 1911, at which it was said that extraordinary phenomena were witnessed (such as a kind of oriflamme on the head of J. K.), and says that he neither saw nor felt anything unusual and that apparently no one else besides Mrs. Besant saw it.

He urges the need for "suspending judgment" whenever in doubt as to whether Mrs. Annie Besant is right or not. He concedes that she is not infallible, but suggests that probably things will turn out all right, and that the interests of the Theosophical Society will be best served by her continuance at the helm.

THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, May and June 1912.

The Order of the Star in the East.

81. The Theosophy in India (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 12th June), contains a short letter from Mrs. Besant, prefacing a letter written by Mrs. Charles to the Vahan (London) of February 1912, protesting against the action of Mrs. Besant in referring to the Theosophical Society as being the herald of the coming Teacher and against the introduction of the Order of the Star in the East under the auspices of the Theosophical Society. After the letter is published Mrs. Besant's reply in the Vahan of March to Mrs. Charles's letter, in which Mrs. Besant said that she was as much entitled as a member of the Theosophical Society to hold the views which she did as Mrs. Charles was.

Mrs. Besant reminds members of the Theosophical Society that Madame Blavatsky predicted the coming of the next Great Teacher half a century later than she (Mrs. Besant) does, and she quotes from Madame Blavatsky's Key to Theosophy in support of her statement. She asserts that she is merely adopting the views of one of the founders of the Theosophical Society.

THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, May and June 1912.

The Order of the Star in the East.

82. The Theosophy in India (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 12th June), publishes four letters discussing the article by Babu Bhagwan Das in the Theosophy in India for March and April (vide Selections No. 10, paragraph 58).

The first of them is a letter by B. P. Wadia from Adyar in which he vehemently defends Mrs. Besant and the Order of the Star in the East. He says that he is a member of the latter, and that he looks upon Mrs. Besant as his teacher and guide. In this connection he writes as follows :—

"I have followed the behest of that Self within me, exactly as my brother Bhagwan Das follows the dictates of his inner divinity in writing these articles, and as a result Alcyone to me is not 'as yet all unproven lad' but one, who, albeit young in body, is carrying a certain spirituality wherever he goes; to me C. W. Leadbeater is not a turn-coat writing one thing in The Attitude of the Enquirer (Adyar Pamphlet No. 2) and another in The Adyar Album, but a mighty spiritual factor steadily and constantly ennobling and enriching my existence, in whose purity of life and nobility of nature I have seen the Light of Divinity, to me A. B. is not only 'a mother or an elder sister' but a torch-bearer of Light supernal, a Light to catch a glimpse of which is to set ablaze the faintly flickering light within the ordinary human hearts and minds—those of Bhagwan Das and a thousand others as mine own. I have seen that Light. It has led me on and I mean to follow It—my own Divine Self helping me—till perfection is gained and finally reached."

The next two letters are by Cheda Lal of Benares and Jehangir Sorabji of Versova expressing agreement with Babu Bhagwan Das, and urging the purging of the Theosophical Society from the mischievous influence of this person-cult.

The fourth letter is by one Panda Baijnath, a member of the council of the Indian section of the Theosophical Society, who defends Mrs. Besant's action, and questions, the correctness of Babu Bhagwan Das's writing the article when he was general secretary of the Theosophical Society.

THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, May and June 1912.

The impartial attitude of the Theosophical Society.

83. The Theosophy in India (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 12th June), has an article entitled "The impartial attitude of the Theosophical Society" by Babu Bhagwan Das, in which he again refers to the connection between the Order of the Star in the East and the Theosophical Society, and appeals to the president of the society (Mrs. Besant) to make the separation between the two societies and beliefs a little clearer.

He asserts that Mrs. Besant, by virtue of her office as president, has not the same liberty of thought and action as a private member.

He reminds her of what she wrote in the Theosophy in India for December last about the wearing of the little silver star, and says that it was a cause of offence to many of the old members of the Theosophical Society, who have regarded the Theosophical Society badge as meaning more to them. As evidence of the harm that the Order of the Star in the East is doing to the parent society he notes that one of the travelling lecturers of the Theosophical Society in a week's work secured fifty members for the Order of the Star in the East while he got none for the Theosophical Society.

He objects to the Theosophical Society being influenced by a person-cult which encourages feelings regarding the adorability of a particular living person, and permits of portraits of that person being made an object of worship at theosophical meetings.

He ends by praying the president to keep such cults out of all theosophical lodges.

LEADER, 7th June 1912.

State-aided Christianity.

84. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 7th June 1912, refers to Mr. Balfour's speech during the debate on the Welsh Disestablishment Bill in the House of Commons, and says that Mr. Balfour is quite right in holding that it is necessary to conserve the Anglican church in England, which is steering midway between the extreme logicality of the Church of Rome, which is unacceptable to Englishmen and the extreme modernism of the present day, and which is keeping a large body of religious people within the fold of a wisely latitudinarian church.

The editor contends that it is not necessary to maintain the established church out of funds contributed by people belonging to other denominations, and urges that the established church should be supported out of funds voluntarily contributed by those to whose spiritual needs it ministers.

85. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 5th June 1912 (received on the 12th June), calls attention to the activities of Muhammadan maulvis and Christian missionaries among the Namasudras of Eastern Bengal, and urges that the Arya Samajists also should go there to propagate the Vedic religion. The editor says that these Namasudras are not becoming converts to Islam and Christianity for the sake of bread, but because they are ill-treated by their high caste brethren. He remarks that those Arya Samajists who will protect them by preaching the Vedic faith in their midst will render a singal service to the cause of their community.

The Namasudras and the Arya Samaj.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 5th June 1912.

86. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th June 1912, takes strong exception to the publication of two imaginary pictures of the Prophet Muhammad in the third volume of the International Library Literature at pages 1218 and 1228 by the Edward Lloyd Company, London. The editor characterizes the picture as offensive to Islam, and expresses surprise that no protest has yet been made by Muhammadans with a view to secure the discontinuation of the publication of the pictures. He deplores that Muhammadans have lost all love and respect for their Prophet and their religion, and he urges them to send a memorial to the British Government stating that their religious feelings have been deeply wounded at the publication of the pictures of the Prophet and asking for the redress of their grievance.

International Library Literature and the picture of the Prophet Muhammad.

87. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 8th June 1912 (received on the 14th June), complains of the severity of the new regulations regarding Indian pilgrims proceeding to Mecca and Medina embodied in the government resolution of the 24th April 1912. The editor says that in spite of all precautions plague has not yet disappeared, and he appeals to Government to secure full freedom to Muhammadans in the performance of their religious duties. He suggests that Government should withdraw the restrictions, and should ask the Turkish Government to make better arrangements for the comfort and safety of Indian pilgrims.

The new regulations for pilgrims to Mecca.

88. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), refers to the deputation of Muhammadans which recently waited on the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore to prevent the discharge of fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat and says that the object was to prevent extravagant expenditure by poor Muhammadans. He remarks that the principle is all wrong of making application to Government to interfere in their social customs.

Fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

The editor, moreover, objects to any interference with the custom of the Muhammadans of displaying fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat, and says that their conduct in the matter suggests effiminacy.

89. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (received on the 8th June), refers to the alleged conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity by a missionary lady doctor at Benares, and advises the Muhammadans to refrain from sending their children to mission schools or hospitals.

AL BASHIR, 4th June 1912.

The conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity at Benares.

The editor says that it is unwise to blame the missionaries who spend such a large amount of money and suffer so much discomfort and inconvenience in the propagation of their religion, when Indian parents themselves foolishly send their children to mission hospitals for treatment, in order to avoid a little expenditure, and thus expose them to the influence and temptations of missionaries.

90. The Bharat Dharma Neta (Benares), of the 30th May 1912 (received on the 10th June), says that the so-called reformers have no influence with their fellow-countrymen, and that their activities are only calculated to cause unrest in society. The editor remarks that the leaders of the Brahmo Samaj and the Arya Samaj can never reform Hindu society, and he urges that Government should therefore never accept their proposals for legislation with regard to social matters, unless they are supported by the entire Hindu community.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 30th May 1912.

Social reforms.

MEDINA, 22nd May 1912.

The cow-protection movement.

91. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 22nd May 1912 (received on the 8th June), reproduces an article contributed to the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 1st May 1912, by "A HINDU DHARM VIR OF MEERUT," in which the writer attempted to prove that the Hindus had always been meat-eaters, and that the sacrifice of cows and buffaloes and the eating of beef had been enjoined by their religion, and had been a part of their ancient customs (vide Punjab Selections No. 19 of 1912, paragraph 19). The editor suggests that the opinion expressed in the article should be widely published in order to prove that the Hindu opposition to cow-killing is quite unreasonable and undefensible.

I.—Politics.

1. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), ridicules the attempt of the Italian navy to enter the Dardanelles, and suggests that the attack was made at the instigation of the great European Powers. The editor complains that the Powers should have compelled Turkey to open the Straits while they took no notice of the action of the Italians in attacking them, although it was opposed to international laws (sic). He says that the injustice and atrocities perpetrated by Russians and Italians in Persia and Tripoli respectively have made a deep impression on the Muhammadans, and that a day will come when the aggressors will be presented with the list of their crimes, and will be made to account for them.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th June 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He says that the Turkish Government is the representative of Islam, and that it is the last stronghold of the Muhammadans from which, according to their belief, Islam will regain her former prosperity.

He expresses satisfaction at the success of the Committee of Union and Progress in Turkey on the occasion of the last Parliamentary elections, and commends the adventurous and martial spirit of the young Turks, a large number of whom managed to reach Tripoli to fight against the Italians. He says that it is Krupp guns which herald the civilizing mission of Europe and proclaim the message of peace by devastating habitations and murdering innocent children and women.

He goes on to say that the people who charged Muhammadans with spreading Islam by means of the sword are themselves committing atrocities in the name of civilization. With regard to the Italian occupation of Rhodes, he remarks that it will not affect the policy of the Turkish Government regarding the war.

He refers to the representation made by the London branch of the All-India Muslim League to the Secretary of State for India asking him to prevent the Italians from extending their military operations to the Turkish possessions in Europe, and remarks that the reply given by Lord Crewe was neither encouraging nor depressing.

He expresses regret at the recent conviction of two Egyptian nationalists, and says that the repressive measures used in Egypt will have a disastrous effect on the political situation of the country.

He refers to a telegram said to have been sent by Enver Bey to some of his friends in Germany telling them that some Englishmen on the Egyptian frontier were interfering with his operations, and expresses the hope that Sir Edward Grey will not allow Lord Kitchener to do anything contrary to the laws of neutrality. He describes Russia as the greatest enemy of the Turks, and expresses apprehension lest there should be some secret understanding between Russia, Italy and Germany.

2. A correspondent, who signs himself "ABDUS SALAM RAFIQI FROM RANGOON," contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), in which he proposes that a medical mission should be sent to Tripoli from India under the management of the Red Crescent Society to help the wounded Arabs and Turks.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 12th June 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He says that the Muhammadans of Burma are prepared to pay one-fifth of the cost of such a mission, and asks his co-religionists of other provinces to raise funds to meet the balance.

He says that the sending of a medical mission to Tripoli is not against the laws of neutrality, and that he has been permitted by His Excellency the Governor General to organize and send medical aid for the help of his sick and wounded brethren in Tripoli.

3. Mr. Nihal Singh [(?)] Sant contributes from London an account of the life of Maharaja Dalip Singh to the Maryada (Allahabad), for May 1912 (received on the 14th June), in which he accuses the East India Company, and also the British Government, of unfairness in annexing the Punjab without giving any reason to the Maharaja for that action. He remarks that while he lived in Fatehgarh the Maharaja was treated more like a State prisoner than anything else, that his house was guarded on all sides by sepoys, and that a havildar always accompanied him when he went out. He states that Lord Dalhousie presented a copy of the Bible to the Maharaja, and told him that in that holy book the Maharaja had been led by God's grace to find an inheritance richer by far than all earthly kingdoms, and remarks that such treatment was like giving a child sweetmeats to make up for taking away his ornaments. He observes that Government retained possession of a portion of Maharani Jinda's jewellery which "it declined to restore to her until she consented to leave India for good."

SHUBH CHINTAK, 12th June 1912.

4. The Shubh Chintak (Allahabad), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that India can make no progress unless its inhabitants cultivate patriotism, and that the best means of removing the troubles and sufferings of the country consists in infusing into every Indian's heart true and devoted love for his motherland. The editor points out that the present prosperity of Germany, America and Japan is traceable to this source only, and he advises Indians to secure their salvation by following the example of those countries.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 12th June 1912.

5. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), remarks that the imputation that the Arya Samaj has been an obstacle to the progress of nation-building in India is altogether wrong, and points out that it has on the contrary taken an important part in promoting the growth of national feeling by preaching the Vedic religion and by trying to remove the distinctions introduced by various sects and castes. The editor asserts that the Arya Samaj has not introduced any new religion, but that it is engaged in propagating the universal teachings of the Vedas, and that its ideal is to have one religion for all the inhabitants of the country.

AL MUSHIR, 11th June 1912.

6. A correspondent, who signs himself "KHWAJA ABDUL HAYI OF DEOBAND," contributes an article to Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 11th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), in which he expresses regret that the Muhammadans are lagging behind the Hindus in regard to trade, industry and education, and says that the question of Muhammadan progress is still further complicated by the fact that they are unable to work with the Hindus on account of differences of opinion about the Hindi-Urdu question and about cow-killing. He discusses the work of the Aligarh College and the Deoband madrassa, and says that while the former has been able to turn out graduates versed in the worldly sciences, the latter has given to the world learned theologians.

Means for the progress of Muhammadans.

He contends that these two institutions are sufficient for the needs of the Muhammadans, and that the Nadwat-ul-Ulma is needlessly diverting the energies of the Muhammadan community. He says that the Nadwah is attempting an impossible task in trying to teach both science and religion, and that its failure is demonstrated by the fact that it has not been able to produce even a single great man, either in the field of religion or in that of science, and he warns his co-religionists against giving any help to such an institution.

He deprecates the spirit of irreligiousness prevailing in Aligarh, and expresses the hope that it will be stifled by greater insistence upon religious education.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 12th June 1912.

7. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), expresses regret that the members of the All-India Muslim League, in their last meeting at Lucknow, did no other useful work besides passing resolutions protesting against the statement made by Mr. Montagu about the Muhammadans of India, and expressing gratitude to Government that the Secretary of State for India should have accepted the principles of the Waqf Validation Bill.

The All-India Muslim League.

The editor says that the members should have considered the views expressed by the public about the League, and should have given their opinion about the reforms proposed in the constitution of the League by the secretary in his confidential letter recently addressed to the members.

He takes exception to the fact that the proceedings of the meetings are always kept confidential, and he urges that the proceedings of the meetings should be published in Urdu for the information of the Muhammadan public.

He expresses agreement with the statement made by the secretary of the League in his confidential letter to the members of the need for more activity on the part of the district Leagues, but he warns that gentleman that the Muhammadans regard the All-India Muslim League itself a useless body. He suggests that the best way for the League to prove its services on behalf of the community would be to publish an account of the work done in the interests of the Muhammadans.

QAISER-I-HIND, 13th June 1912.

8. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), says that while Western education has produced among Indians a commendable spirit of independence and self-sacrifice, it has also given birth to a very undesirable tendency to hatred and distrust between the different units of the Indian nation.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

The editor states that not only do Muhammadans distrust Hindus but also regard with suspicion their own leaders and impute all sorts of dishonourable and selfish motives to their public activities. He expresses regret that the Muhammadans should have opposed the Elementary Education Bill which was introduced by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale for the good of the country as a whole. He asserts that the Hindus also are jealous of any special privileges being granted to Muhammadans, and he contends that the desire on the part of the Hindus to keep down the Muhammadans at all costs is clearly indicated by their opposition to the Council Regulations and to the proposed Dacca University scheme. He advises the Hindus that, if they wish to make any progress, they should co-operate with the Muhammadans, and he urges them to give up their prejudice and suffer some inconvenience in order to help their weaker Muhammadan brethren.

ADVOCATE, 20th June 1912.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, expresses gratification at the friendly spirit of the speeches delivered by Nawab Vikar-ul-Mulk and the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan on the occasion of the visit of the Maharaja of Darbhanga to the Aligarh College. The editor asserts that if the sentiments given expression to by the Nawab and the Hon'ble Sahibzada on this occasion were to characterize the deliberations of the political organizations with which their names are prominently connected, half of the troubles of the country would be over. He says that the Nawab carries enormous influence with the Muhammadan press, and remarks that if he were to throw all his influence in favour of joint work and unity, much of the present discord between Hindus and Muhammadans would cease to exist.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

Referring to the happy simile in which the Nawab compared the Hindus and Muhammadans to the rivers Ganges and Jumna and characterized the university movements as their confluence, he points out that until such time as Hindus and Muhammadans combine and obliterate their identity in the higher service of the motherland and choose to call themselves Indians, it is not possible to do away with those influences which keep the two people at a distance. He asserts that the success of the efforts of the leaders of the two communities to promote better relations depends on the confidence which these leaders enjoy in the estimation of the people, and the example they set to the masses.

He expresses gratification at the contributions of Hindu magnates to the Muslim University, and at the cordial reception given by the Muhammadans of Bareilly and Moradabad to the Hindu University deputation, and he expresses the hope that Hindus and Muhammadans will work together as Indians with a common ideal for the elevation of the people of India.

TAFRIH, 14th June 1912.

10. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), protests against the objectionable treatment accorded to Indians in the British colonies, while the residents of those colonies are allowed every freedom in India. The editor reproduces the opinion expressed in the Montreal Star (Canada) that British Columbia must remain a white man's country, and that Indians should not be admitted to it, no matter what their claims and rights might be, and even if their claims and rights were supported by the British Government. He expresses indignation at the attitude of the residents of British Columbia with regard to Indian emigration, and suggests that the Government of India should stop the import of goods from British Columbia into India as a retaliatory measure.

LEADER, 15th June 1912.

Birthday Honours.

11. Discussing the Birthday Honours list, which is described as an uninteresting one, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 15th June 1912, refers to the omission to confer a knighthood on Mr. Justice Banerji in the following terms :—

"It is of painful interest to the Indian community of these provinces that Mr. Justice Banerji of the North-Western Provinces High Court still goes without his knighthood, though he has been a Judge for nineteen years, and a distinguished Judge too. The esteem in which he is held by his countrymen does not, however, suffer on that account. The manner in which he has been ignored regularly is more a reflection upon the methods of those who distribute honours than anything else."

With regard to the Rai Bahadurship conferred on the Hon'ble Munshi Ganga Prasad Varma the editor observes :—

"Last but not least must be mentioned the name of the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Ganga Prasad Varma—our old friend Babu Ganga Prasad, the dearly loved and highly honoured citizen of Lucknow than whom few men in the country command more general esteem throughout India. Frankly, this Rai Bahadurship of Babu Ganga Prasad leaves us very unsatisfied, and all his friends will share our feeling of regret and disappointment. That men of the stamp of the late Babu Norendro Nath Sen, the Hon'ble Babu Baikuntha Nath Sen, the late Lala Lal Chand and the Hon'ble Babu Ganga Prasad Varma should be made Rai Bahadurs at an advanced stage of their public activities, along with many nonentities, is no proof of the discrimination exercised by Government in distributing the honorific titles in their gift. Surely the status of a man merits some consideration. Babu Ganga Prasad, if he could not be let alone, may at least have been made a Dewan Bahadur—a higher title worn by many small men. As it is, Babu Ganga Prasad, Rai Bahadur, may well exclaim, as did the late Kristo Das Pal on a similar occasion, of what crime he was guilty that he should have been thus punished !"

ABHYUDAYA, 16th June 1912.

Birthday Honours.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, expresses disappointment at the Birthday Honours list and agrees with the Englishman (Calcutta) that the trading community has been practically totally ignored, and that the Madras presidency has received the greatest attention to the exclusion of other provinces. The editor expresses gratification at Mr. P. C. Roy being made a C.I.E., but remarks that the honour was a tardy recognition of that gentleman's services. He complains that only a Rai Bahadurship was conferred on the Hon'ble Babu Ganga Prasad Varma, and urges that he deserved to be honoured with a much higher title especially when his public services have only been recognized so late in his career.

Legislative Council Regulations.

13. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), complains of defects in the regulations governing elections to the Legislative Councils with particular reference to the qualification of having to serve for three years as a commissioner on any municipal or district board, and states that many capable persons are debarred from seeking election under them. The editor says that although the provincial councils have been given non-official majorities they are not effective in practice because of their defective constitution. He urges that Government and the people alike should try to remove the existing defects in the Council Regulations so that the Councils may become really representative assemblies.

Royal Commission on Public Services.

14. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, has the following :—

"It has been known for some time that a Royal Commission on Public Services in India will be appointed. We only hope that the Indian community will be adequately represented upon it."

LEADER, 19th June 1912.

Royal Commission on Public Services.

15. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 19th June 1912, commends the work of the Hon'ble Mr. Subba Rao Pantalu in bringing to the front the public service question, especially its two most important aspects, the abolition of distinctions between the Imperial and the Provincial Civil Services, and the holding of competitive examinations for the Civil Service simultaneously in England and in India.

The editor expresses regret that the extremely unsatisfactory recommendations of the Public Service Commission of 1886—1888 were further deprived of their effect by the orders of the Secretary of State and the Government of India, and remarks that prominent Indian publicists hold that Indians did not gain anything as a result of the labours of the Commission. He expresses dissatisfaction that Government have taken no action, in spite of the opinions in favour of simultaneous examinations reported by a committee of the India Office in 1860 and by the House of Commons in 1893, and notwithstanding the keen disappointment of the Indian public as the outcome of the results of the Public Service Commission. He hopes that now that important constitutional reforms have been introduced, the natural and legitimate aspirations of Indians will be satisfied for admission into the higher grades of the public service on equal terms with Europeans.

16. Referring to the security of five thousand rupees demanded under the Press Act from the Kesari (Poona), the Leader (Allahabad), of the 14th June 1912, reproduces the comments on the attitude of the Government made in the Mahratta (Poona) that Government had become fastidious and wanted to exclude the breadth of suggestive argument and the depth of expressed feelings which were the essentials of true criticism, and that it was going to close the only safety valve to public opinion in India by sitting so tightly over the press. The editor states that the tone of the press has become considerably emasculated on account of apprehension of the application of the Press Act, and suggests that only a warning should be issued, in cases where security is now demanded, and that security should only be demanded as a last resort when repeated warnings have been disregarded. He expresses the opinion that a warning would have sufficiently lasting effects in the majority of cases, but at the same time he deprecates any issue of warning unless there has been a grave departure from the lines of fair journalism. He states that a warning was issued to the Kesari in August 1910, but that during the last twenty months the Kesari had no means of knowing whether any of its articles had offended Government. He contends that, as an editor is kept in the dark about the sort of articles to which Government objects, justice demands that security should not be demanded until repeated warnings have been disregarded, and he expresses the opinion that if this procedure be adopted, it will rarely be found necessary to apply the Act.

LEADER, 14th June 1912.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, says that the action taken under the Press Act against the Kesari (Poona) shows the dangerous scope of the measure. The editor points out that Lord Crewe's declaration that the scope and purposes of the Press Act "are not confined to the suppression of sedition and treasonable conspiracy" is quite correct, and that it is a mistake to believe that the measure gives scope for the advancement of legitimate arguments and permits the fullest criticism of the actions and measures of Government. He reminds Anglo-Indian journalists that it was on account of this aspect of the Press Act that they were asked to join the Indian journalists in an agitation for the repeal of the Act. He expresses the opinion that the two articles which gave offence to the Bombay Government did not contain any seditious matter.

ADVOCATE, 16th June 1912.

18. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that the Press Act was passed to check the growth of seditious literature in the country, and that it has effectively stopped the publication of seditious writings.

The editor urges Government to repeal the Act, on the ground that its continuance on the Statute Book is not only unnecessary but discreditable to a constitutional government like the British, and that it stifles the frank and honest expression of the views of the subjects of a constitutional government.

The Press Act.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 12th June 1912.

19. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 15th June 1912, urges the repeal of the Press Act, on the ground that the purpose for which the Act was passed has been accomplished. The editor says that the Press Act is now a source of great irritation and annoyance to the Indian press, and that it prevents the expression of frank opinions on matters of public interest. He urges the Indian press to combine in asking Government to repeal the Act. He expresses approval of the suggestion of the Empire (Calcutta) that the native and Anglo-Indian press should co-operate in the matter, and remarks that Government should prove by its action its solicitude for the welfare of its subjects.

The Press Act.

20. Referring to Lord Crewe's reply to the protest of the Calcutta Anglo-Indian press, which was made through the Institute of Journalists, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, refers to the important significance of the statement made by the Secretary of State that "no newspapers in British India can, on the ground of its general views and sympathies, regard itself as beyond the scope of the statutory limitations" imposed by the press law, and that the scope and purposes of the Press Act are "not confined to the suppression of sedition and treasonable conspiracy." The editor points out that the Calcutta Anglo-Indian press was always under the mistaken impression that the Press Act could not be applied to it, and on that account it was so ready to support the measure when it was introduced in the Council. He asserts that this false sense of security was not due to any doubt about the clear meaning of section 4 (1) (c) of the Act, but that it was due to the belief that the persons entrusted with the administration of the law would make a distinction between Anglo-Indians and Indians in favour of the former. He states that, though a section of the Anglo-Indian press has been greatly instrumental in exciting racial hatred and in creating disaffection against the British Government, no action has yet been taken against a single Anglo-Indian paper.

He says that the bold declaration of the Secretary of State has convinced the Anglo-Indian press of the dangers of the Press Act, and he expresses the hope that Anglo-Indian journalists will see the wisdom of combining with the Indian section of the press in an agitation to have the Press Act repealed, seeing that the clouds of discontent have now cleared away from the Indian sky, and as the measure is calculated to injure public interests by curtailing the independence and liberty of the press and by stifling honest expression of opinion.

The Press Act.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, says that, although the Press Act is a harsh and repressive measure, which has considerably curtailed the liberty of the press, there is no doubt that Lord Crewe is fully justified in his statement that the Anglo-Indian journals are as much liable to prosecution under its provisions as the Indian papers. The editor remarks that it would have been a grave injustice if any distinction had been made in the application of laws to Indians and Europeans, and he expresses regret that the Anglo-Indian papers should not be ashamed of setting up claims for preferential treatment in such a matter. He observes that now that the Anglo-Indian journalists have realized that they are not exempt from the operation of the Press Act, they should join hands with the Indian journalists in getting it repealed.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 12th June 1912.

The subsidising of the Sulabh Samáchár.

22. Referring to the stopping of the Sulabh Samáchár the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), remarks that if, instead of subsidising the journal, the Bengal Government had spent the money on some work of public utility it would have done much good to the province. The editor expresses the hope that other provincial governments will profit by this experience of Bengal and not engage in such undertakings.

ABHYUDAYA, 16th June 1912.

Repressive measures.

23. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, says that sedition and disaffection have generally their origin in deep dissatisfaction, and that repressive measures, which curtail the liberty of speech and writing, do not remove dissatisfaction but rather aggravate it. The editor remarks that discontent disappears only when its causes are removed, and that legitimate and constitutional agitation never fails to achieve its object in the long run.

He remarks that on a recent occasion Mr. Montagu acknowledged the truth of this principle, when he stated that they had not only to punish those who were seditious but also to remove the just grievances which brought about sedition, but that nowadays words are not translated into deeds.

24. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912, refers to the statement of Lord Minto, when presiding over a meeting in London, that he as Viceroy had submitted a scheme to the Secretary of State for India in favour of native regiments being officered by selected Indians but that he had heard nothing more about it, and suggests that a Member of Parliament should put a question to find out what became of the proposal, and why it was not tried as an experiment.

The editor remarks that the decision was only based on the statements of one party, and was consequently far from satisfactory.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th June 1912.

The Dwarband assault case.

He observes that reports are often heard of the coolies in Kachhar being oppressed, and that such a state of things is discreditable to Government, and he expresses the hope that His Excellency Lord Hardinge will give his attention to this case, and will take steps to remove the grievances of the coolies.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, congratulates the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafique on his elevation to the High Court Bench. The editor expresses gratitude to Sir John Hewett for making the selection, which, he says, was the best that could have been made for the appointment, and says that the news will be received with satisfaction throughout the province.

The appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafique to the Allahabad High Court.

27. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 19th June 1912, expresses satisfaction at the proposal of Government to establish a separate High Court for Behar and Orissa. The editor contends that the province of Behar is entitled to have a separate High Court and a separate University, in view of the fact that Behar and Orissa are really independent provinces, and that they are inhabited by people who are not enamoured of dependence upon Calcutta and Bengal and who want the new province to be self-contained as far as possible. He does not attach much weight to the argument that the Calcutta High Court will be weakened by the establishment of a High Court at Patna, and remarks that the strength of a tribunal depends more upon the worth, judicial impartiality and the powers of the judges than upon their number. He states that the Calcutta High Court has grown unwieldy, and that it can be split up without any diminution of its prestige, if proper care be exercised in the selection of judges. He asserts that there is sufficient work for a new High Court at Patna, and says that the necessity for the growth of a strong and independent bar, to exercise a beneficial influence upon the Behar government and the Beharis, demands its establishment.

He also states that it is necessary, in the interests of both Agra and Oudh, that the Oudh Judicial Commissioners' court should be amalgamated with the North-Western Provinces High Court, and expresses the hope that petty local feeling will give way to a right conception of the higher interests of the two sub-provinces.

28. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 15th June 1912, has the following:—

LEADER, 15th June 1912.

Police reform.

"Mr. D. E. Wacha has apparently overlooked the chief of the many causes for police inefficiency and corruption, so far as his letters published up to date go (31st May).

My experience extending over forty years has made it clear to me that police oppression and inefficiency result from inadequate and unenlightened supervision.

In practice the European superintendent of police is entirely in the hands of some one or more Indian subordinates drawn from the wrong class, and knows very little about the details of police work and less about the Indian people. The one idea of an average European police officer apparently is that all non-officials are members of a huge criminal organization, and any information received through the police is swallowed entirely. Its inherent incredibility never strikes persons who live in a world of their own making, and pass their lives in India without knowing anything of people out of their society from personal knowledge resulting from social intercourse or personal contact, a superintendent of police being usually as inaccessible as a district magistrate. Admitting, as we must, that European supervision of police work is essential for some time to come, it would possibly work better in practice if we had Indian superintendents of police recruited from the best class of Indians and deputy inspectors general and inspectors general selected from members of the Indian Civil Service, these men to enquire into complaints against police misdeeds and to inspect the registers of work, &c.

With Indian superintendents of police, there would be an improvement in the methods of the police, when sub-divisional magistrates are controlled by the European superintendents of police through the district magistrate.

I cannot say whether deputy magistrates are still required to call officially on the superintendents of police ; I know they were obliged to do so when I held office, and the deputy magistrate was therefore looked upon by the police and the people as the subordinate of the police superintendent. To require these men to call officially on the police superintendent might have enhanced the latter's prestige ; but it did not help to inspire confidence in the independence of the judgments of deputy magistrates.

What we need are Indian superintendents of police who have a knowledge of the members of the police force and can control their subordinates, and exercise real supervision over them, because of their knowledge of things Indian.

The police could not have been what they are popularly believed to be if there had been more efficient and intelligent supervision, and the deputy magistrates were not held to be subordinate officially to the superintendent of police.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th June 1912.

The duty of the public in aiding the detection and prevention of crime.

29. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that it is the duty of the public to aid the authorities in the detection and prevention of crime, and the editor suggests that the public should never help professional criminals by giving evidence in their favour (sic), and should assist the authorities in arresting them, that society should exert its influence to reform bad characters and that it should boycott professional criminals.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th June 1912.

Compulsory vaccination.

30. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), quotes from the recent report of the health officer of the Bombay Municipal Corporation to show that vaccination does not prove efficacious in preventing an attack of small-pox, and remarks that there is no reason why Indians should be compelled to have their children vaccinated, when vaccination is not compulsory in England, where parents must be much more anxious about the health of their children.

HINDUSTANI, 14th June 1912.

Octroi duty in the United Provinces.

31. A correspondent, who signs himself "A TRADER," contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), in which he asks His Honour Sir John Hewett to abolish octroi duty in the United Provinces before leaving the province.

He says that the imposition of octroi duty on the merchandise imported into the United Provinces has checked the development of trade in the province, and he asks the Anjuman-i-Tajjaran (the society of traders), Cawnpore, and the Chamber of Commerce to agitate for the abolition of octroi duty, and to memorialize Government on the subject.

The segregation of prostitutes and public morality.

32. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), publishes five contributed articles in which the writers complain that the presence of prostitutes in places of public resort in Lucknow is having a very harmful effect on all classes of society, and suggest that all prostitutes should be removed from the vicinity of schools, offices, markets and other places of public resort, and that they should be segregated in some remote quarter of the city.

Defective communications in the Kheri district.

33. A correspondent, who signs himself "RAUF AHMAD SIDDIQ," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, in which he describes the commercial importance of Mohamdi town in the Kheri district, and says that there is a good deal of trade between it and Gola and Shahjahanpur. He complains that there is no railway line passing through Mohamdi, and urges the necessity for the construction of a metalled road between Mohamdi and Shahjahanpur. He expresses satisfaction that the Kheri district board has metalled that portion of the Mohamdi-Shahjahanpur road which lies within its jurisdiction, and suggests that the remaining eight miles in the Shahjahanpur district should be similarly metalled by the authorities of that district.

The Jalesar Municipality.

34. In continuation of his remarks on the affairs of the Jalesar Municipality (vide Selections No. 19, paragraphs 22 and 23), a correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Jalesar, Etah), of the 2nd June 1912 (received on the 17th June), says that there was a good deal of jobbery at the recent elections of the Jalesar Municipality, seeing that the secretary used to enquire from the illiterate and Hindi-knowing electors in an undertone as to whom they voted for, and marked the voting paper as he liked. He states that these voters were not allowed to see the mark on the voting paper and that it was put straight into the ballot box. He remarks that the candidates for election were, contrary to rules, excluded from the room where the papers were examined, that the public were dissatisfied with the result of the elections, and that Pandit Sundar Lal and Babu Ram have brought a suit in the munsif's court to declare the elections to be illegal.

He says that there is no hope that the civil court will be able to do justice in the matter, as undue influence is being brought to bear upon the voters and as they are being intimidated, and he urges that the chairman, Mr. Pullen, himself should make an enquiry into the matter. He also expresses the hope that the decision of the civil court will be equitable and will give satisfaction to the public.

The Hardwar Municipality.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that the hackney carriages and traps available at Hardwar are in a very unsafe and rickety condition, and that the fares demanded by the gariwalas are excessively high. He says that the roads are in a very bad and dusty condition, and that the Kitson lamps on the riverside are not lighted, and suggests that the Joint Magistrate of Roorkee should make Hardwar his head quarters and set matters right.

ADVOCATE, 16th June 1912.

The Hardwar Municipality.

36. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 19th June 1912, reproduces the contributed article published in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912 (vide para supra).

LEADER, 19th June 1912.

The writer notes that illegal gratifications are demanded from the gariwalas each time their license is renewed, and that private interest seems to be more considered than the public welfare.

The Allahabad Municipality.

37. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, complains that the Allahabad Municipality pays very little attention to the sanitary condition of the city, and that heaps of refuse have been allowed to accumulate in the Ahiyapur and Pandariba wards. The editor remarks that when the municipality cannot make satisfactory arrangements for preserving the health of the city it has no right to levy any taxes from its inhabitants for the purpose. He invites the attention of the chairman to the matter, and expresses the hope that he will take immediate steps to remove this public grievance.

LEADER, 16th June 1912.

The water-supply at Allahabad.

38. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer enlarges upon the difficulties suffered by the people of Allahabad on account of the scarcity of water in this hot season, and invites attention to the indifference of the municipal authorities. He insists that when the board are aware that they cannot restore the normal water-supply in the near future, they should make temporary arrangements to relieve the people to some extent. He suggests that covered wells should be properly cleaned and their water analyzed by experts. He refers to the report that half a dozen Indians have died in the Bakshi quarter from using foul water from a well, and says that the people must be told by beat of drum that they must not use the water of a covered well unless it is declared to be harmless after chemical examination. He asserts that very few paonsalas have been opened, and expresses the opinion that even those that they may be opened will do little good. He suggests that the people of Allahabad should submit a memorial to the Local Government asking for a sifting enquiry into the conduct of the municipal officials and praying for the issue of immediate orders for the cleaning of covered wells and for the providing of facility for drawing water.

The water-supply at Allahabad.

39. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912, expresses approval of the decision of the Allahabad Municipal Board to remit one month's water rate owing to the defective supply of water as an equitable proceeding and says that it will be much appreciated by the rate-payers. The editor asks that a definite pronouncement should be made as to when the people may expect a full water-supply again. He remarks that the municipal authorities have mismanaged affairs, and he urges that some one should be made to suffer for the grievous blunder.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 12th June 1912.

Scarcity of water-supply.

40. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), says that complaints about the scarcity of water have recently been heard from several towns, and points out that this state of affairs is due to the fact that wells have either been closed by the municipalities or that the people have ceased to use them. The editor suggests that the people should take a lesson from these cases and should not allow wells to be closed even when they have their water-supply by means of pipes.

Proposed improvement of Garhi-ki-Sarai.

41. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912, publishes a letter from R. N. Bhargava, Secretary, Allahabad Traders Association, in which he expresses regret that the note of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on the subject of the proposed improvement of Garhi-ki-Sarai was only referred to incidentally by the chairman at the meeting of the board and that no member requested him to read it. He says that if it had been read the result of voting on this point would have been otherwise, and that the board could not have upset a resolution which was supported by a majority and that by a casting vote of the chairman. He remarks that such an important matter deserved better treatment, and expresses the hope that as public opinion strongly favours the proposal, it is sure to be carried out in the near future.

Pilgrim tax in the Fyzabad Municipality.

42. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th June 1912, publishes the first instalment of a contributed article entitled "Pilgrim tax in the Fyzabad Municipality," in which the writer states that the pilgrim tax was in force sometime before 1870, and that only six pies were charged per head. He says that in 1870 the Hindu gentlemen of Fyzabad and Ajodhya applied for the remission of the tax, and that in 1871 the municipal board reduced the tax to three pies and further reduced it to one Gorakhpuri pice in 1872, while in 1875 the tax was actually abolished. He states that in 1885 the question of a pilgrim tax was again raised by the municipal board, but the Deputy Commissioner and Commissioner of Fyzabad were opposed to it and Government did not see its way to sanction the proposal. He says that in 1895, when the matter was again brought before the board by Mr. Perrin's note in connection with pure water-supply, the board refused to revive the tax. He asserts that all the officials of Government from 1870 to 1895 considered the tax to be unjust and impracticable, and expresses regret that the views of the succeeding Government underwent a complete change. It was in 1903, when the question of the improvement of the drainage of the municipality was raised, that the Fyzabad municipal board resolved to meet the cost of the improvement scheme by levying a tax of six pies on adults and three pies on children on all pilgrims visiting Ajodhya at the three large fairs of Katik, Ram Naumi and Sawan Jhula. He states that though the Commissioner was opposed to the proposal, the Local Government not only agreed to it but increased the amount of tax per head from six pies to one anna per adult and from three to six pies per child under twelve, and that the tax was enforced from the 1st April 1905. He asserts that the tax is creating discontent, heart-burning and resentment among the millions of peaceful and law-abiding Hindus, and denounces it as an unrighteous tax on the religious convictions of a body of persons who are not benefited by it. He expresses regret at the selfishness of the members of the Fyzabad municipal board in shifting their burden on to the shoulders of the poor pilgrims.

Pilgrim tax in the Fyzabad Municipality.

43. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 18th June 1912, publishes the second and last instalment of the contributed article entitled "Pilgrim tax in the Fyzabad Municipality," in which the writer refers to the annual report for the year 1905 of the Fyzabad Municipal Board in which it was stated that the pilgrim tax was an unpopular one and suggesting that it should be realized along with the railway fare. The views of successive Deputy Commissioners are shown as being in support of the opinion of the municipal board, and the writer expresses regret that the Local Government has not thought fit to change its policy.

LEADER, 18th June 1912.

He replies to the argument of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor that the pilgrims should pay a small contribution to the municipal funds in return for the special sanitary measures adopted for them, by stating that the amount paid by pilgrims in the shape of ghat, chauki, tickets, nowbara, baithaki, &c., is more than sufficient to cover any special expenses incurred for the benefit of the pilgrims, and that the sum of Rs. 20,000 realized from the pilgrim tax is thus a net saving to the Fyzabad Municipality.

He says that the municipality does very little for the pilgrims and even that which is done is paid for by the municipality, not out of its own pockets but from the income derived from the fair. He enlarges on the difficulties of poor pilgrims who are oppressed by the collection officials, and points out that many pilgrims who cannot afford to pay the tax have to bathe outside the limits of sacred Ajodhya. He reproduces the views of the taxation committee presided over by Mr. Hope Simpson in support of his contention that peculation is rife among collection officials, and says that it is impossible to exercise any proper supervision.

He urges the abolition of the tax, and suggests that Government should either impose a house tax or levy a toll of half an anna or one anna on every passenger coming to Fyzabad by rail, the toll to be collected on tickets through the railway.

The editor discusses the article and supports the views of Pandit Parmeshwar Nath Sapru, the writer remarking that the gravest objection which can be raised against the tax is that the mode of its realization gives the tax collector an opportunity to harass the poor pilgrims and abuse his authority.

The bathing ghats of the Ganges in Benares.

44. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that the bathing ghats of the Ganges in Benares are in a very dangerous condition, and that several fatalities have occurred there from drowning. The editor urges that the municipality should take immediate steps to have them repaired.

BHARAT JIWAN, 10th June 1912.

Eligibility of graduates of five years' standing for election as members of municipal boards.

45. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 18th June 1912, states that, unlike the Atrauli Municipality, the Balrampur Municipal Board does not regard graduates of the Allahabad University of five years' standing as being eligible for election as members of the board. The editor expresses the opinion that there should be a uniform practice in this respect in all boards in the province, and suggests that all the boards should either spontaneously or under orders of Government give this right to graduates.

AL BASHIR, 11th June 1912.

The Dacca University committee.

46. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 11th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), complains of the inadequate representation of the Muhammadans on the committee appointed by Government to consider and discuss the Dacca University scheme, and contrasts the number of Muhammadans and Hindus on the committee, seeing that the latter are opposed to the University. The editor suggests that, in view of the fact that Muhammadans form the majority of the population in Eastern Bengal and that they are more interested in the scheme, the number of their representatives on the committee should be increased.

The proposed Muslim University.

47. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 11th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that the public and the press should rest satisfied with the assurance given by the president of the Muslim University constitution committee that the draft regulations will be offered for public criticism, and that necessary changes will be made in them in accordance with the consensus of public opinion before they are finally submitted to Government.

The editor contends that it is still premature to conclude that the University will be denied the power of affiliating other colleges, and he advises that the Muhammadans, instead of giving way to despondency, should push forward the work of collection. He suggests that, during the time that must elapse before the collections come up to the minimum of 35 lakhs required by Government, an Urdu translation of the draft regulations should be published, and that the trustees and members of the constitution committee be invited to take part in the public discussion in the press about the University constitution.

He deplores the dearth of Islamic institutions in India, and invites attention to the dissimilarity in their systems of working, accounts and religious teaching.

He suggests that new schools should be opened in different centres and run on the lines of the proposed Muslim University, so that before a charter is granted by Government, it may have an idea of the methods of working of the proposed University. He points out that Government must necessarily make such changes as it considers desirable in the draft regulations when they are submitted for approval. He warns his co-religionists not to dispair in the least about being granted a charter.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

48. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), refers to Nawab Mushtaq Husain's letter that appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette (vide Selections No. 22, paragraph 44), and commends the frank and bold expression of his views about the constitution of the proposed Muslim University. The editor asks the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad to pay due consideration to the objections raised by Nawab Mushtaq Husain against the constitution, and expresses regret that the Nawab's letter does not fully satisfy the public about the grant of the power of affiliation to the Muslim University. He advises his co-religionists, as Nawab Mushtaq has done, not to accept a University if it be opposed to their ideals and if it deprive them of the present liberties which they enjoy in controlling the affairs of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

He expresses gratitude to the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad for his letter which appeared in the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow) of the 2nd June, in which he promised to pay full consideration to the criticisms of Nawab Mushtaq Husain of the constitution, and to make necessary alterations in it according to the wishes of the public.

The proposed Muslim University.

49. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), expresses gratitude to the Hon'ble Raja Muhammad Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadur of Mahmudabad for his letter which appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 48), and for his promise that the final decision about the constitution of the proposed Muslim University will be made according to the wishes of the public.

The editor discusses the importance of preparing a sound constitution for the proposed Muslim University, and urges the constitution committee to publish it in Urdu, and to invite public discussion on it. He says that sufficient time should be given to the public to discuss the constitution, and advises the committee to give its final decision after carefully considering public opinion. He observes that Muhammadans will never accept a university which will be against their ideals.

The proposed Muslim University.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 12th June 1912.

50. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes two articles to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 17th June). In the first he states that the members of the proposed Muslim University constitution committee have made certain alterations in the constitution in accordance with the wishes of the Muhammadan public, and have paid due regard to the interests of the community in making the alterations.

He promises that the constitution will shortly be published in Urdu in order to invite public discussion on it, and that the final decision will be given by the committee after the public has fully discussed it.

He says that a committee consisting of Sunni and Shia ulamas has been formed to prescribe the courses of study in theology.

He goes on to say that nothing more could be done by the constitution committee, and he urges his co-religionists to pay the subscriptions that have been promised to the University fund.

In the second article he expresses satisfaction that the meeting of the constitution committee held at Lucknow on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th June was most successful. He gives a list of the members who attended the meeting, and says that alterations were made in the regulations after careful consideration,

He expresses gratitude to the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad for his zeal and untiring work in the cause of the Muslim University, and expresses the hope that the public will be quite satisfied at the result of the last meeting of the constitution committee.

He asks the public to express its opinion about the constitution in writing, as far as possible in a concise form, and to send copies to the committee and also to the Aligarh Institute Gazette office for publication in the paper.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

QAISER-I-HIND, 13th June 1912.

51. A correspondent, who signs himself "SHAIKH ABUL HUSAIN OF ALIGARH," contributes an article to the Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), in which he refers to the article that appeared in Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th June 1912 (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 44), and says that there could be no objection to the appointment of an honorary secretary to the Aligarh College from the Punjab, provided an able man be available in that province. He contends that it is wrong to say that the Aligarh College and the educational conference are provincial institutions, and asserts that students from every part of India are found in the Aligarh College, and that the educational conference is held every year in different provinces of the country.

He states that, though there appeared to be no objection to the proposal that successive secretaries of the Aligarh College should be selected from different provinces, it would be preferable if the man best suited for the post were to be appointed without any regard for the province in which he resided.

He expresses the opinion that the future secretary should be a respectable and experienced man, and should be of such a high character as to exercise a wholesome influence on the character of the youths of Aligarh. He goes on to say that the secretary should be a pious Muhammadan and should realize and sympathize with the needs of his community.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 13th June 1912.

52. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 15th June 1912, expresses gratification at the nomination of Haji Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. The editor remarks that the Muhammadans will be very fortunate in securing the services of Muhammad Ishaq Khan who is equally trusted by Government and his community, and who is a very orthodox Muhammadan. He expresses the hope that his co-religionists will unanimously approve of his appointment as secretary to the Aligarh College.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI, 17th June 1912.

The Dabdaba-i-Sikandri (Rampur), of the 17th June 1912, expresses similar views.

LEADER, 14th June 1912.

53. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 14th June 1912, says that, though there was no necessity for the raising of school fees in the United Provinces, it fails to see any justification for the volume and intensity of the opposition raised against the measure. The editor points out that the concessions about aided schools and in the case of parents with more than one son to educate, the increase in the number of scholarships and free studentships and the various other conditions accompanying the measure, would go a long way to mitigate its hardship. He expresses regret at the rule about failed students being required to pay double fees, but says that if sympathetically administered it will not produce undue hardship. He expresses gratification at the action of the United Provinces government in appointing a school fees committee, and asserts that in view of these circumstances the general misapprehension about the subject is uncalled for.

MUSAFIR, 14th June 1912.

54. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), objects to the increase of fees in government schools and suggests that Government should, in view of the unanimous opposition to the new scale of fees, revert to the old scale. The editor takes exception to the new rules requiring students who appear for a second time for the same examination to pay double fees, while those who fail twice at the matriculation or school-leaving examination are liable to expulsion from schools, and remarks that in these provinces fresh obstacles are being constantly placed in the way of educational progress. He invites attention to the unreasonableness of the rule requiring failed students to notify to the head master of their intention to rejoin the school within ten days of the publication of the examination results in the Government Gazette, and contends that in view of the fact that no date is fixed for the publication of these results and that many students live in out-of-the-way places where the gazette is received after a considerable interval, it is very difficult for failed students to decide about their future career within so short a time.

The new rules regarding school fees.

He points out that the new rule will entail great hardship upon the majority of students, who are children of poor and middle class parents, and expresses the hope that the educational authorities will be induced to withdraw them.

ADVOCATE, 20th June 1912.

55. Referring to the new rules giving head masters of government and aided schools the discretion to demand double fees from failed students, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, says that much of the sting of this rule will be taken away if head masters exercise their discretion wisely and sympathetically, and that in cases of abuse of authority the inspector and the Director can be appealed to. The editor suggests that in view of the fact that the rule is liable to be misunderstood and has already given rise to misapprehensions, the Director of Public Instruction should see that the discretion given to head masters is not abused. He expresses the opinion that it would have been better if the new rule had not been introduced.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 12th June 1912.

56. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), says that the present system of education in this country has been a miserable failure, seeing that it does not encourage original thought among the people, and remarks that it is perhaps to remedy this state of affairs that the Hindu and Muhammadan universities are proposed to be established. The editor quotes the opinion of the Observer (Lahore) that it would be no use having the Muslim University if the Qoran cannot be taught in it without the permission of its chancellor, and if no professor can be appointed without his consent, and enquires if the promoters of the Hindu University will not take a lesson from this observation of his contemporary.

The present system of education.

He observes that the idea of independent education which has at present taken hold of the minds of Indians has been given to the country by the gurukul.

PREM, 15th June 1912.

57. Tahal Ram Ganga Ram of Dera Ismail Khan (Punjab) contributes an article to the Prem (Brindaban), of the 15th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), in which he says that it is the duty of sadhus and Brahmans to advocate the cause of the swadeshi and temperance movements and to effect social reforms throughout the country.

The education of sadhus.

and he announces that a school for the education of sadhus will shortly be opened at Dera Ismail Khan.

58. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, says that the desire of the people for increased educational facilities is evidenced by the Hindu and Muslim University movements and by the proposal to establish a residential and teaching university in Mysore. With regard to the attitude of Government towards the movement, the editor states that the need for good education throughout India was recognized by the Under Secretary of State for India during the debate on the Indian budget in the House of Commons last July, and by the King-Emperor in the course of his reply to the address presented to him by the Calcutta University. He goes on to say that, though people were disappointed at the rejection of the Elementary Education Bill, they were reassured when, in reply to an interpellation by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale, the Hon'ble Sir H. Butler said that the Government of India have forwarded to the Secretary of State a general scheme of a comprehensive character dealing with elementary, technical and higher education. He remarks that, though the scheme has not been published, it may be inferred from the speech of the King-Emperor and from the views of the Government of India regarding the Dacca University scheme, that Government prefers universities of the residential and teaching type. He points out that residential universities by themselves cannot do much good unless they are in sympathy with the needs and aspirations of the age, and do not restrict the search for knowledge by barriers which divide mankind, and he expresses regret that Government have failed to observe this essential condition in their educational institutions. He expresses the opinion that residential and teaching universities can fulfil their purposes only if the professors are of superior merit to the present-day professors and if their relations with the students are better than what they are at present.

Residential and teaching universities.

ADVOCATE, 20th June 1912.

59. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer invites attention to the small number of students and the inadequacy of the salaries of the so-called professors in the second grade college maintained by the Church Missionary Society at Gorakhpur. He enlarges upon the disadvantages of a cheap college, and insists that, in view of the fact that Benares and Lucknow are so close to Gorakhpur, the University authorities should ascertain the real need for a first grade college at Gorakhpur before sanctioning the proposal of the Church Missionary Society for raising the status of their college.

60. Referring to the publication of the results of the University examination in the Leader (Allahabad), the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, complains that the results have not yet been published officially in the gazette. The editor says that, when the results were passed by the Examination Board on the 12th June, they could have very easily been published in the gazette of the 15th June, and urges that in future the publication of results should be expedited, as far as possible, and that in view of the anxiety of examinees, the results should, if necessary, be published in a special issue of the gazette. He suggests that the Registrar of the University should, while sending the results to the Government Press, also send copies to the newspapers.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th June 1912.

62. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), says that it has received a letter from a local gentleman who complains that a few Muhammadans molest those Hindus who go to bathe at the Baluaghat, and disturb them in their religious rites, without any regard for the remonstrances of the pandas. The correspondent has appealed to the Maharaja of Benares and Lala Ram Charan Das, who are the owners of the land and the ghat respectively, to take steps to stop this nuisance. The editor also invites the attention of the District Magistrate to the matter, and says that if necessary steps be not taken immediately to remove the grievance, there will be every likelihood of offences being committed against the public peace.

Complaint about the conduct of a few Muhammadans on the Baluaghat.

TAFRIH, 14th June 1912.

63. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), states that Lord Kitchener has made it culpable for any money-lender in Egypt to charge more than nine per cent. interest per annum, and suggests that the British Government should put a stop to the rapacity of Kabuli money-lenders and of mahajans by enacting a similar law in India.

High rates of interest.

TAFRIH, 14th June 1912.

64. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), expresses appreciation of the scholarly attainments and moral courage of Mr. Tilak, and expresses sympathy with him in his sorrow at the death of his wife. The editor suggests that the British Government should, in consideration of his affliction, release Mr. Tilak, and expresses the hope that Mr. Tilak will, after his release, devote his energies to some good work and will not give any cause for complaint to Government.

ADVOCATE, 16th June 1912.

65. A correspondent, who signs himself "A SUB-DEPUTY INSPECTOR OF SCHOOLS," contributes an article to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, in which he complains of the difficulties of the deputy and sub-deputy inspectors of the Kheri district in getting kahars, syces and gariwalas even on high wages. He says that these officers are put to great trouble and inconvenience and have to do menial work with their own hands. He suggests that either the labouring classes should be debarred from tilling fields, or that a fixed rate should be adopted, and that labourers should be compelled to work on proper terms and payment.

Scarcity of labour.

V.—LEGISLATION.

ADVOCATE, 16th June 1912.

66. Referring to the passing of the first reading of the Government of India Bill by the House of Lords, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th June 1912, says that though there may be another debate on the lines adopted by Sir J. D. Rees and Lord Ronaldshay, the success of the bill is assured. The editor characterizes as unreasonable Sir J. D. Rees's proposal that there should be a statutory provision for the Governor of Bengal to stay for at least three months in Dacca, and remarks that the Governor of Bengal can, without much difficulty, divide his time between Dacca and Calcutta in the same way as the Lieutenant Governor of the United Provinces divides his time between Lucknow and Allahabad.

The Government of India Bill.

He refers to Lord Ronaldshay's suggestion that, excepting in the Central Provinces, Legislative Councils should not be created by the Government of India under the new Act without giving the House of Commons an opportunity to express its views and to Sir J. D. Rees's opposition to it, on the ground that the House of Commons should not interfere in the affairs of the Government of India, and states that all the amendments brought forward were eventually withdrawn.

Referring to the grant of an Executive Council to Behar he contends that the United Provinces has at least as much claim to have an Executive Council and has already expressed itself unmistakeably in its favour. He states that Sir James Meston is as much in favour of an Executive Council as Sir Charles Bayley, and that the wishes of the people of the United Provinces should be respected in this matter.

He suggests that the India Office should consult the wishes of Sir James Meston, and says that if he wants an Executive Council, the Government of India should do justice to the older province and should grant to it the privilege accorded to the newly-created province of Behar and Orissa.

The Government of India Bill.

LEADER, 19th June 1912.

67. Referring to the speeches of Lord Curzon and Lord Minto during the debate on the second reading of the Government of India Bill in the House of Lords, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 19th June 1912, asserts that Indian opinion is overwhelmingly in favour of the administrative changes, as evidenced by the support given to them by the Indian press, and says that the correspondents of Lord Minto, who have expressed themselves against the reforms announced at the Darbar, must be very unrepresentative Indians indeed. The editor ridicules the complaints made by Lord Curzon that the authorities in India and England have behaved unconstitutionally and questions his right to speak for Indians, saying that he systematically flouted educated Indian opinion.

In reply to Lord Curzon's strictures about the heavy expenditure to be incurred in building new Delhi, he states that Lord Curzon was most extravagant in indiscriminately increasing the salaries of European officers and in piling up other expenditure, and he asserts that, in spite of the opposition of Lord Curzon and Lord Minto, India is emphatically for the Government of India Bill.

VI.—Railway.

Railway accidents.

AL MUSHIR, 11th June 1912.

68. Referring to the collision on the 5th June between a passenger train and a goods train near Shahjahanpur on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 11th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), expresses surprise at the fact that though no less than three carriages were smashed to pieces it has been reported that only five passengers were killed and five wounded. The editor attributes these accidents to the negligence of the railway staff, and suggests that the Railway Board should see that better arrangements are made for the safety and convenience of railway passengers. He urges the Railway Board to compel all railway administratious to lay double tracks.

SHUBH CHINTAK 12th June 1912.

69. The Shubh Chintak (Allahabad), of the 12th June 1912 (received on the 15th June), complains that there is no satisfactory arrangement for water-supply on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line between Allahabad and Partabgarh and between Fyzabad and Rae Bareli stations, and expresses the hope that the railway authorities will take steps to remove the grievance.

Indian employes of railway administrations.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th June 1912.

70. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), complains that racial and religious considerations are given full play in providing employment to Indians and Europeans in the various railway administrations, and remarks that, in view of the fact that Indians are not accorded fair and impartial treatment in their own country and within the British Empire, it is no wonder that they should be subjected to ill-treatment in foreign countries. The editor says that, as the railway lines had caused considerable injury to the wealth, trade and rivers of the country, it was expected that they would treat Indians more equitably and impartially, but what they were doing was quite the reverse of such expectations.

He points out that the salaries paid to Indian station masters, ticket collectors and guards on a State railway are considerably less than those paid to their European colleagues, and that the quarters of the former are also very inferior to those provided for the latter. He observes that, besides such a disparity in their salaries, Indians have to work harder than Europeans. In conclusion he expresses the hope that at the forthcoming Railway Commission Government will give due consideration to the rights of the Indians, and recommend improvements in their pay and prospects.

TRISHUL, 6th June 1912.

71. The Trishul (Benares), of the 6th June 1912 (received on the 14th June), expresses agreement with the opinion of Dr. Mann, expressed in his letter that appeared in the Times of India (Bombay) about the sale of minor girls at Poona that the police and Government should at once try to put a stop to this abominable traffic, and says that if enquiries be made Benares will be found not to be free from this evil.

The sale of minor girls at Benares.

AL MUSHIR, 11th June 1912.

72. A correspondent, who signs himself "Hafiz Muhammad Noor from Gorakhpur," contributes an article to Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 11th June 1912 (received on the 17th June), in which he says that the Muhammadan villagers of tahsil Padrauna in the district of Gorakhpur are mostly illiterate and are totally unacquainted with their religion. He states that the business of the locality is carried on in Hindi, that the Muhammadans dress and talk like Hindus, and have Hindu names, and that most of the mosques are lying in a state of disrepair.

The deplorable condition of Muhammadan villagers.

He expresses regret that the various Muhammadan religious associations are neglecting their co-religionists living in villages, and he reminds his co-religionists, that if they do not want to see large numbers of their brethren going over to other religions, they should take immediate steps to improve their condition.

LEADER, 14th June 1912.

73. Referring to the controversy over the Welsh Disestablishment Bill, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 14th June 1912, says that it is urged by the opponents of the measure that it will break up the unity of the English Church, that it will cripple the resources of the English Church, and that it is not wanted by the country.

State-aided Christianity.

The editor states that the upholders of disestablishment quite rightly contend that the church and State should be separate, that the State should not extend its patronage to any particular religious community, and that property originally intended for the whole of the people should not be devoted entirely for the benefit of a section professing a particular faith. He says that, though in the earlier periods of history the religion of the ruling Sovereign became the object of State patronage, the character of the Sovereign authority has now changed and it may contain individuals professing diverse faiths and religions. He remarks that it is therefore right and natural that the State in modern times "should not identify itself with any particular religion, but that it should assume a neutral attitude towards all religions followed by people forming part of it," and that any opposition to such an attitude is either the result of prejudice or of an ultra conservative tendency.

MUSAFIR, 14th June 1912.

74. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 14th June 1912 (received on the 20th June), states, on the authority of the Hitaishi (Pilibhit), that the 2nd and 3rd June had been fixed for discussions regarding the principles of the Arya Samaj in connection with the anniversary celebrations of the Pilibhit Arya Samaj, and that though there was a most friendly and peaceful discussion on the 2nd June between Maulvi Muhammad Siddiq and Pandit Ganpati Shastri on the eternity of soul and matter and their relation with God, on the morning of the 3rd June Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector, verbally ordered five office holders of the samaj to execute bonds for one thousand rupees each to keep the peace from the 3rd to the 7th June. The editor objects to this procedure on the ground that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace, as it was not intended to assail the religious principles of any particular community in the discussion, and that no similar security was taken from the Muhammadans.

The Pilibhit Arya Samaj.

He expresses the opinion that this action could not have been taken by a just and liberal-minded person like Mirza Irfan Ali Beg on his own initiative, but must have been the result of some police report, and suggests that the Inspector General of Police should have a searching enquiry made into this matter, in order to determine how far the local police officials are responsible for this undesirable restriction of the freedom of public discussion.

LEADER, 18th June 1912.

75. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 18th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer states that discussions on the principles of the Aryá Samaj had been announced at Pilibhit for the 2nd and 3rd June in connection with the anniversary celebrations of the local Arya Samaj, and that though there was a most friendly discussion between Maulvi Muhammad Siddiq and Pandit Ganpati Shastri on the 2nd June, on the morning of the 3rd June Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector, verbally ordered five office holders of the Arya Samaj to execute bonds for one thousand rupees each to keep the peace from the 3rd to the 7th June. He questions the propriety of the Deputy Magistrate's action in interfering in the performance of religious ceremonies of an important community, when the religious discussions had terminated so pleasantly on the previous day in the presence of so many important government officials and the police itself. He expresses doubt as to whether similar instances have occurred in any other part of British India and whether the procedure adopted was justified by any law in force in British India.

He complains that while the five leaders of the Arya Samaj were subjected to such humiliation, no similar security was taken from the leaders of the Muhammadan community.

VEDA PRAKASH, June 1912.

The Pilibhit Arya Samaj.

76. The Veda Prakash (Meerut), for June 1912, complains that at the last anniversary of the Pilibhit Arya Samaj its office bearers were required by Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector in charge of the district, to furnish securities for keeping the public place before they were allowed to celebrate the occasion. The editor observes that there was no justification for such a proceeding on the part of the magistrate, seeing that the celebrations had passed off quietly on the first day, and that there was no likelihood of the followers of other religions taking offence, as the Arya Samajists had not proposed to criticise them but wanted them to have their doubts about the Vedic religion removed.

He complains that the Muhammadans, were not required to furnish the security, and he enquires what apprehensions the authorities had, when a large number of policemen, including the deputy superintendent of police, were present at the meeting.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 19th June 1912, discusses the recent expression of opinion (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 17) of Mr. Abbas Tyabji of the Baroda High Court that the Indian Muhammadans are unwise to constantly keep their eyes turned towards Constantinople and to regard the Caliph not only as a religious leader but also as a political leader of the world-wide Islamic revival. The editor joins issue with Mr. Tyabji on this point and states that Indian Muhammadans sympathize with the Turks because the latter are their co-religionists, and because the decline of the Turkish Empire would weaken the strength and prestige of the Muhammadan race as a whole. He asserts that Indian Muhammadans are Muhammadans first and Indians afterwards. He claims that the demands of religion are supreme, and contends that the Muhammadans throughout the world are a united nation.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 19th June 1912.

Indian Muhammadans and the Turkish Caliphate.

He points out that it is on account of this feeling of universal brotherhood among Muhammadans that Indian Muhammadans treat matters affecting the Muslim world as a whole as of primary importance and relegate Indian affairs to a secondary position, and asserts that recent events amply bear out his contention.

2. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), refers to the negotiations regarding the Chinese loan and suggests that the reason why Germany, the United States, Russia and Japan, were all asked to participate in the loan to China was that no other Power should be left to compete with them and that China would have to acquiesce unconditionally in the terms of the loan proposed by the six Powers. The editor states that political considerations did not stand in the way of this combination, as it was thought that China was a big country which would provide room for all the Powers. He remarks that, apart from their natural dislike of foreigners, the Chinese are rightly opposed to borrowing money from foreign Powers, because they are afraid that the conditions of the loan will be destructive of the independence of their country. He expresses the opinion that it would be much better if the Chinese Government could raise an internal loan from its own subjects to meet its administrative needs.

The Chinese loan.

(b)—Home.

3. A correspondent, who signs himself "Saiyid Seraj-ul Hasan, Tirmizi from Allahabad," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), in which he remarks that the Muhammadan representatives on local councils have done little or no useful work.

AL BASHIR, 18th June 1912.

The coming council elections.

He urges his co-religionists to only support those candidates who are really prepared to work sincerely for the good of their community, and who do not desire to become members of legislative councils from motives of personal aggrandizement.

He asks the electors to show consideration for the personal worth of a candidate rather than for his wealth and influence.

He deprecates the introduction of party spirit and of factions amongst the Muhammadans on the occasion of council elections, and asks them to be guided by their personal conviction.

ADVOCATE, 27th June 1912.

The coming council elections.

He reminds his readers that the members elected should be persons who have the desire and the capability to serve the provinces to the best of their power, and who intend to effect progress and reform.

The editor objects to the dates fixed for the appointment of delegates by the municipal and district boards at the head quarters of districts and for the appointment of delegates by smaller municipalities, on the ground that all the civil courts will be closed on the 7th and 9th October and that a large number of practising vakils, who happen to be on the local bodies, will be absent from head quarters, and unable to take part in the elections.

He emphasizes the necessity for consulting the convenience of this large class of electors, and suggests that a date should be fixed which would be convenient to all parties.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th June 1912.

Muhammadan representatives in Legislative Councils.

5. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), expresses regret that the present Muhammadan representatives in the Legislative Councils are apparently ignorant of the needs of their community. The editor says that they are generally rich people who have no regard for religion and who can never realize the troubles and difficulties of the middle class and poorer Muhammadans, and so he suggests that votes should not be given for candidates who are not true to their religion, so that only really devout and religious Muhammadans would be elected to the councils.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 15th June 1912.

Indians in South Africa.

6. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 15th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), invites the attention of the British Government to the ill-treatment of Indians in South Africa and other colonies, and expresses the hope that effective steps will be taken to ensure better treatment of its Indian subjects on the part of colonials, in view of the fact that the way they are maltreated at present is discreditable to the reputation of Government.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 15h June 1912.

The degenerate state of India.

7. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 15th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), publishes an article entitled "Glimpses of ancient India," in which the editor reminds his readers that India of the present day is the same country which in ancient times used to exercise sway over the whole world, and he deplores that time has brought such a change in the fortunes of its inhabitants that they are now called slaves. He ascribes the present degraded condition of the country to quarrels and divisions among the people, and expresses regret that they are still sleeping and that they will not arouse themselves and endeavour to improve their condition.

MASHRIQ, 18th June 1912.

The Royal boons.

8. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), in the issue of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), refers to the educational grant of fifty lakhs of rupees on the occasion of the Delhi Darbar, and expresses regret that the grant is only to be utilized for those schools in which the medium of instruction is English, and that no grant will be made to those schools where only Sanskrit, Persian, Arabic or Urdu is taught. He invites the attention of the Local Government to the matter, and expresses the hope that equal facilities will be given to all the classes of His Majesty's Indian subjects to derive benefit from the grant.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th June 1912.

Birthday Honours.

9. Referring to the Rai Bahadurship conferred on the Hon'ble Munshi Ganga Prasad Varma, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), remarks that this honour has been conferred on him in recognition not of his journalistic work but of his other public services. The editor expresses regret that the Urdu press has not received any recognition from the Government in the Honours list, and contends that, when it is severely dealt with under the Press Act for its mistakes, it should also be rewarded for its good work.

He expresses regret that the title of Shams-ul-Ulama was not conferred on any of the learned men of Deoband, and hopes that Government will not forget the Urdu press and the learned theologians of Deoband in its next Honours list.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 19th June 1912.

The Hindu-Muhammadan problem.

10. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), says that for some time past relations between Hindus and Muhammadans in political matters have been far from cordial and that now the same spirit of estrangement has begun to effect almost every transaction of life between them. The editor complains of the attitude of educated men towards this question, and points out that a movement has recently been started among the educated Muhammadans not to take food touched by Hindus. In this connection he notes that the editor of the Comrade (Calcutta) in an account of a boarding house, in a recent issue of his paper urged that Muhammadan students should not take food cooked by Brahmans.

Mr. Montagu and Indian Muhammadans.

11. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 22nd June 1912, expresses regret that Mr. Montagu should have had to retract his statement that the Muhammadan population of India was not a homogeneous one, in spite of the fact that it was quite accurate. The editor finds fault with the terms of Mr. Montagu's reply to Mr. McCallum Scott, and remarks that it shows an amount of anxiety to please the Muhammadans which is not generally shown when Hindu susceptibilities are offended, and which seems to recognize the loyalty of Muhammadans as something special and distinct. He concedes that a democratic religion which levels all distinctions between one man and another, gives a great advantage to Muhammadans, and admits that they deserve the satisfaction they have obtained as a reward for their united action.

LEADER, 22nd June 1912.

He expresses regret that the Hindus do not take any offence at being characterized as a heterogeneous people, and he advises them to take a lesson from the united action of their Muhammadan brethren. He deplores the religious and social differences among the Hindus, and says that these differences often preclude common action, that would create an impression of the unity of the Hindu community.

Treatment of political prisoners in India.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, expresses regret that although political prisoners are treated as first class misdemeanants in all civilized countries, in India they are accorded the same treatment as other criminals, and quotes the Bengalee (Calcutta) to show that Indian political prisoners in the Andamans are subjected to very hard labour, and that those in the Hazaribagh jail, besides being treated harshly, are kept in solitary cells. The editor concedes that the Indian Code makes no distinction beween political and ordinary offenders, but urges that it is consistent with the principles of humanity and equity that the law should be amended so as to provide for the better treatment of political prisoners.

India and the Empire.

13. Referring to an article in the last Empire Day supplement of the Times (London) emphasizing the need for a better understanding by the self-governing colonies of the place of India in the Empire, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd June 1912, expresses surprise and gratification at the fact that a paper, which had persistently opposed the introduction of liberal reforms in the Indian administration, which had defended the inhuman treatment accorded to Indians in British colonies, and which had constantly been trying to prove that India was honeycombed with sedition, is now urging the "fuller recognition of India's voice in the councils of the Empire as a whole," and that it expresses unstinted praise of Indian loyalty. The editor welcomes this change in the attitude of the Times towards India, but expresses regret that, in spite of the recognition of India's important position in the British Empire, she has not been given a place at the Imperial Conference, nor granted a position on an equality with other parts of the Empire. He characterizes as shortsighted any Imperial policy which overlooks the claims and importance of India, and asserts that the Times does not intrepret rightly the views of educated Indians when it says that the wisest among them "do not appeal for any system of representative government," and that they "consider that the policy of exclusion adopted in the Dominions is on the whole desirable in their own interests as also of those of the Dominions."

ADVOCATE, 23rd June 1912.

He asserts that this difficult problem can only be solved if the Government of India be prepared to adopt a policy of retaliation towards those colonies which will not allow Indians free movement in their territories.

India and the Empire.

14. Referring to the article on "India and the Empire," which appeared in the Empire Day edition of the Times (London), the Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th June 1912, expresses the hope that the Times will not change its views about the loyalty of Indians. With regard to the plea of the Times for the admission of India "into a fuller and more spacious partnership" with other parts of the British Empire, the editor observes that, though the mother country means well and will do justice, the politicians of the self-governing dominions are not broad-minded and seem to be incapable of thinking imperially. He admits the correctness of the London paper's statement that "India does not, in reality, ask for the impossible," and says that the large instalment of reforms given will suffice for a decade, provided they are carried out in a proper spirit.

He expresses regret that the inhabitants of a country which was singled out by the Monarch for the signal and unprecedented honour of his visit, should be subjected to such indignities in the British colonies, and urges the Government of India to abolish the degrading system of indentured labour.

LEADER, 27th June 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

15. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912, refers to the statement made by Lord Crewe on the question of Indian autonomy and remarks that there is no need for Indians to be disconcerted. The editor reminds his readers that the despatch of the 25th August was quite clear. He notes that the Government of India simply urged that the process of decentralization should not be stopped until the ideal of a united India, made up of a number of practically autonomous provinces, was realized, and he asserts that, while there was nothing in this to alarm the supporters of a centralized bureaucracy, there was also nothing to cause undue jubilation to ardent advocates of swaraj.

He observes that it was the excessive use made of the passage by a section of Indian publicists and by politicians of the type of Lord Curzon for debating purposes that led the Secretary of State to disown the obvious interpretation, in view of the fact that he had not a majority in the House of Lords.

In this connection he remarks as follows :—"This may be unfortunate, but does not matter very much; for, while the passage in the despatch remains, Lord Crewe will not be the Indian Secretary for all time. As for His Lordship's solemn repudiation of the National Congress ideal of colonial self-government, all that we think we need say at present is that the Secretary of State was not expected by any responsible Congressman to avow sympathy with it. After all a political prophecy regarding the distant future is not of much value, and Lord Crewe himself must have known that it was hardly worth making except to serve the day's purpose in his House of Parliament. What form the Government of India will take in a future, which as yet cannot be measured, is speculation which no practical man would care to indulge in. What is of more moment is that the problems of the present should be grappled with firmly and wisely by Indian reformers as well as by British statesmen and Anglo-Indian administrators."

The Press Act.

16. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), urges the repeal of the Press Act, seeing that the purpose for which it was enacted has been accomplished.

The editor expresses agreement with the opinion of the Afghan (Peshawar) about the repeal of the Press Act, and remarks that the Act is a constant source of irritation and annoyance to the Indian press.

He urges the native and the Anglo-Indian press to invite the attention of Government to the evil effects of the Act, and expresses the hope that Government will show consideration for the appeal of the entire Indian press, and will repeal the Act as soon as possible.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th June 1912.

The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), expresses similar views on the subject, and asks for the repeal of the Press Act.

MEDINA, 22nd June 1912.

The Press Act.

17. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 22nd June 1912, asks for the repeal of the Press Act seeing that the purpose for which it was enacted has been accomplished. The editor says that the Act has stifled freedom of thought amongst Indians, and that it has hampered the development of the country.

He complains of the provision making District Magistrates the sole judges of the attitude and tone of a newspaper and objects to their decisions being final in the matter of the demand of security. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and remarks that every Indian is impatient to be freed from the restrictions imposed by the Press Act.

ABHYUDAYA, 20th June 1912.

The Press Act.

18. Referring to the reported confiscation of the tenth number of the second volume of the Islamic Fraternity (Tokio) by the Bombay Government, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), expresses surprise that the Bombay Government should have confiscated the paper while the local governments of the Punjab, United Provinces and Bengal have not thought fit to do so, in spite of the fact that Pan-Islamism is more firmly established in those provinces. The editor points out that several books have similarly been confiscated in the Central Provinces and in other provinces as well, although there are practically no readers of those books in them, and remarks that this state of things is due to the misuse of the provisions of the Press Act.

RAHBAR, 21st June 1912.

Hindus in Afghanistan.

19. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st June 1912 (received on the 27th June), reproduces an article from the Hindustan (Lahore), in which several cases of murderous attacks on Hindu residents in Afghanistan by Muhammadan robbers were mentioned, and in which it was stated that the complaints of Hindus were never properly enquired into, while the grievances of Muhammadans were very promptly redressed.

III.—Native States.

ABHYUDAYA, 20th June 1912.

The appointment of Mr. E. H. Wallace as the Chief Justice in Mysore.

20. Referring to the rumoured appointment of Mr. E. H. Wallace as Chief Justice in Mysore, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), expresses regret that Europeans are encroaching upon the legitimate rights of Indians even in such progressive native states as Baroda and Mysore, and the editor enquires whether the Dewan of the Mysore state could not get a single deserving Indian for the post.

ABHYUDAYA, 20th June 1912.

The creation of a High Court in Behar.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), condemns the opposition on the part of the Bengali press to the creation of a separate High Court in Behar as selfish and unreasonable, and urges that the only point which the Bengalis can justifiably insist upon is that the new High Court should not be allowed to affect the independence of the Calcutta High Court.

ABHYUDAYA, 20th June 1912.

Imposition of fine for alleged political murders in Manickganj (Dacca).

22. In connection with the imposition of a fine of Rs. 3,000 on certain villages in the Manickganj sub-division of the Dacca district for the alleged murder of two persons, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), says that it is reported that, although the murders were committed in two villages, the fine has been imposed on the inhabitants of about fifty villages, and that, while not a single Muhammadan has been thus punished, all Hindus, without any exception, have been required to pay the fine. The editor adds that many villages of which the inhabitants have been fined are several miles distant from the villages where the offences were perpetrated, and that Hindu vakils and mukhtars, who live away from their homes for the whole of the year, have been heavily fined. He remarks that if these allegations be true, such acts of partiality and injustice will cause deep resentment among the Hindus.

LEADER, 21st June 1912.

The appointment of Colonel Beadon as a Judge of the Punjab Chief Court.

23. Referring to the appointment of Colonel Guy Beadon, Divisional and Sessions Judge of Ambala, to officiate as a temporary Additional Judge in the Punjab Chief Court, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 21st June 1912, says that the appointment of a soldier as a Chief Court Judge at a time when objection is taken to the appointment of even members of the Civil Service is a retrograde measure and an insult to Indian public opinion. The editor points out that a soldier cannot be expected to be well versed in law and to possess judicial qualities, and expresses the hope that Colonel Beadon will not be confirmed, and that his appointment will not be treated as a precedent.

ABHYUDAYA, 23rd June 1912.

The future judicial administration of Delhi.

24. Referring to the report that a Judicial Commissioner will be appointed in Delhi after its transfer from the Punjab government to the Government of India, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, says that the inhabitants of Delhi are naturally opposed to such an arrangement and that the entire press, including the Anglo-Indian journals, have expressed disapproval of it. The editor remarks that it is not in the fitness of things that the capital of the Indian Empire should have a Judicial Commissioner for its highest judiciary, and suggests that the Chief Court of the Punjab should be raised to the status of a High Court having jurisdiction over Delhi also. He observes that such an arrangement will satisfy the long-cherished desire of the inhabitants of the Punjab and the capital will be enabled to have a judicial administration not inferior to that of any other place.

A successor to the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafique in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

25. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, expresses the hope that there is no foundation for the rumour that either Mr. Louis Stuart or Mr. Ryves is to be appointed as the successor of the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafique in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and says that besides eight Indian district and sessions judges there are several able and learned Indian lawyers practising in the High Court and the Judicial Commissioner's Court, any of whom may be suitably appointed to the post. The editor states that Sir John Hewett has earned the gratitude of the Indian community by appointing an Indian as Additional Judicial Commissioner, and remarks that it will be an injustice to the Indian community and will produce profound disappointment among them if the appointment held by the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafique be given to a European.

MASHRIQ, 18th June 1912.

Police reform.

26. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), expresses gratitude to the Government of India and the Inspector General of Police, United Provinces, for their determination to effect reforms in the Indian police, and referring to the recent circular issued by the Inspector General of Police on the subject of enquiry into cases of alleged misconduct on the part of the police, he enquires what will be the means through which superintendents of police will come to know the high-handedness of their subordinates. He suggests the removal of all legal formalities in approaching a magistrate or a high police officer by a complainant, and he recommends that the public should be allowed to make verbal complaints to superintendents of police about misconduct on the part of the police. He also suggests that superintendents of police should pay unexpected visits to police stations, and says that such visits will be useful in bringing to light the high-handedness of the police, and in this connection he asks Government to provide every district with a motor car, in order that the superintendent of police may be able to visit any place in the district under his charge without giving previous notice.

LEADER, 22nd June 1912.

The Agra Municipality.

27. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 22nd June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that, though it was notified by the assistant secretary of the Agra municipality that from the 15th May to the 15th July 1912 water would be supplied daily from 5 a.m. to 10 a.m. and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m., water has been actually supplied from 6 to 9.30 in the morning and from 4 to 6 or 5.45 in the evening. He says that there is no proper watering of roads or flushing of drains, and attributes the shortage of water-supply to the extra pumping involved in supplying water to the cantonments and to the Agra cantonment station of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. He contends that the municipality is under no obligation to supply water to the cantonments and to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, when it is not able to supply sufficient water within municipal limits.

He expresses regret that the water-supply remains as bad as ever, though a new engine was purchased at a cost of Rs. 58,000 in 1910. He states that while Agra, with five and a half hours' pumping, spends Rs. 30,088 on coal, Allahabad, with nineteen hours' pumping, spends only Rs. 19,151.

The editor suggests that Government should interfere in the interests of the people of Agra.

LEADER, 27th June 1912.

28. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer invites attention to the filthy condition of the streets and drains of Hardwar, and attributes it to the laziness of the subordinate municipal officials who have been too long at the place. He complains that all work is left to the menial agency, with the result that it is not properly done, and he says that all the municipal officials combine to keep the inexperienced chairman in ignorance of the actual state of affairs. He says that the municipal members do not possess sufficient moral courage to criticise the work of their paid officials, and suggests that the District Officer should enquire into the matter personally and set things right.

ABHYUDAYA, 23rd June 1912.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, again refers to the subject of the insufficient water-supply at Allahabad, and complains that although a long time has elapsed nothing has been done to remove the grievance. The editor observes that the decision of the municipality to remit one month's water-rate is quite just, but that the people will not be satisfied with this remission unless immediate steps are taken to secure a sufficient water-supply once more.

The water-supply at Allahabad.

LEADER, 25th June 1912.

30. A correspondent, who signs himself "AN ENGINEER," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th June 1912, in which he attributes the scarcity of water in municipalities like Allahabad to ignorance about the daily requirements of Indian life on the part of the engineers who designed the water-works schemes of these municipalities. He asserts that Indians require more water for bathing, washing clothes, cleaning utensils, watering the streets and flushing the drains than is required per head in England, and he suggests that municipalities should take the advice of professional men who have experience of the customs and habits of Indians, and should make arrangements for the supply of a sufficient quantity of water.

Defective water-supply in municipalities.

He invites attention to what he describes as a fatal defect that some municipalities are not provided with municipal engineers, and that some other municipalities have engineers who have not studied such important subjects as water-supply, drainage, sewage destruction, refuse destruction, scavenging and construction of tramways and of roads.

ABHYUDAYA, 23rd June 1912.

31. Indra Narayan Dwivedi writing in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, on the affairs of the Allahabad District Board, urges its members to do useful work on the board and not to blindly follow the lead of the chairman. He expresses approval of the introduction of a tournament for the vernacular schools of the board, but suggests that its cost should be met by the board and not be made a charge on the recreation funds of the schools, as was done last year. He refers to the appointment of a number of chief teachers from among the teachers of the vernacular schools under the board, and says that the remaining teachers are required to go and receive instruction from these chief teachers on every Sunday. The writer complains that this rule is very irksome, as Sunday is the only day they get leave while they have to work hard for the remaining six days. He urges the chairman to have pity on the teachers and cancel it.

COSMOPOLITAN, 16th June 1912.

32. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 16th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), has an article recommending the institution of what the editor calls a school sanatorium in the hills.

A school sanatorium.

He remarks that "it is the omission to provide seminaries in cool, bracing and elevated localities that is mainly answerable for the lamentably frequent cases of breakdown and the high and increasing rate of mortality among our students."

He suggests starting a college at Mussoorie with the money left by the late Thakur Puran Singh Negi of Dehra Dun.

AL BASHIR, 18th May 1912.

Combination of Islamia colleges and schools.

33. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), in the issue of the 18th May 1912 (received on the 24th June), expresses regret that there is no co-operation between Islamia colleges and schools, and that they are not run on the same lines.

He urges that all the Islamia colleges and schools should observe holidays on Fridays instead of Sundays, and expresses regret at the apathy of the Muhammadans regarding matters affecting their nationality and religion.

He proposes that all Islamia colleges and schools should adopt the same courses of study in theology, and suggests the formation of a religious faculty at Aligarh empowered to hold examinations in theology, for B.A., F.A. and matriculation students in different Islamia schools and colleges.

He suggests that the faculty of religion should be created at Aligarh without delay, and that it should begin its work as soon as possible without waiting for the grant of a charter for the proposed Muslim University.

He recommends the formation of a committee to control all the Islamia colleges and schools, which should have the power of appointing teachers and professors and of transferring them from one institution to another.

He suggests that a uniform system of keeping accounts should be introduced in all Islamia schools and colleges, and that an auditor should be appointed to check the accounts periodically. He proposes that the rules to be observed in all Islamia hostels and boarding houses should be identical so as to encourage uniformity, and that before demanding the power of affiliation to the proposed Muslim University of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, endeavour should be made to demonstrate that all Islamia colleges and schools are run on the same lines, with the exception of the courses of study and the system of University examinations.

Elementary education in the Madras presidency.

34. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), commends the steps that are being taken in the Madras presidency for the diffusion of elementary education, and suggests that, if other provinces follow the lead of the Madras presidency, the object of Mr. Gokhale's Elementary Education Bill will be achieved without any great difficulty.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th June 1912.

The proposed Dacca University.

35. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), takes exception to the inclusion of men like Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh and Babu Ananda Chandra Ray in the committee appointed by Government to formulate a scheme for the establishment of the Dacca University, on the ground that these gentlemen are opposed to the Dacca University scheme and may by their counsels defeat the very purposes for which the University is to be established. The editor expresses apprehension that these Hindu members may try to create a state of affairs which will demonstrate the undesirability of establishing the University, and that instead of providing educational facilities for Muhammadans they will put fresh obstacles in the way of Muhammadan educational progress.

LEADER, 26th June 1912.

The proposed Hindu University.

36. A correspondent, who signs himself "MANOHAR LAL OF ALIGARH," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th June 1912, in which he expresses gratification at the decoration of the route through which the procession of the Hindu University deputation passed at Moradabad, and says that such impressive processions serve to bring home to the minds of the illiterate masses the necessity and the importance of the Hindu University. He goes on to say that hundreds and thousands of people in Moradabad must have been impressed by "the fact that it must be a bigger cause for which big people were working," and must have thus been led to subscribe to the university fund. He suggests that the reception committees in places which the Hindu University deputation is yet to visit should make it a point to make the processions as grand and as imposing as they can, and he asserts that the expenditure incurred under this head will not be a waste of money but will be a good investment for the University.

37. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 26th June), expresses apprehension as to whether the power to affiliate other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and the Hindu College, Benares, will be granted to the proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities respectively, and remarks that in case of refusal the laudable efforts made by the two communities in collecting funds will be wasted. SAHIFA, 19th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor expresses regret that the disloyal attitude of the Bengalis and Arya Samajists should lead Government to check the progress of higher education amongst the Muhammadans.

He takes exception to the preponderance of the European element in the Muslim University board of management, and remarks that to conduct the University on the same lines on which the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College is at present conducted, would be a mere waste of money.

He blames the organizers of the Muslim University scheme for having deceived the public by making a premature promise to establish a university in accordance with the wishes of the Muhammadan public, and observes that in the present circumstances the community will derive no benefit by subscribing to the university funds.

38. Discussing the question of the utilization of the collected funds of the proposed Muslim University in the event of the refusal of Government to grant a charter in accordance with the wishes of the Muhammadan public, the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 19th June 1912, insists that at the very start of the Muslim University movement its leaders should have explained to the subscribing public that, in case they failed in their attempts to obtain a charter, the collected funds would be utilized either for a specified purpose, which should have been settled and notified beforehand, or else for some purpose which the majority of the subscribers decided upon. MUSLIM GAZETTE, 19th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor observes that if such a declaration be made even now by the leaders of the movement, it will afford increased facility for the realization of funds.

39. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd June 1912, complains that some journalists should have hinted at the possibility that the proposed Muslim University will not be established, and he reminds them that in all great undertakings difficulties and obstacles have to be encountered. OUDH AKHBAR, 22nd June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

The editor expresses regret that the organizers of the Muslim University scheme should be blamed by some people for having deceived the public by promising to establish a Muslim University according to the ideals of the Muhammadans, and observes that they are still working hard to accomplish it, and that the critics should reserve their judgment until it is definitely known that the Muslim University does not conform with the ideals of the Muhammadans.

He expresses agreement with the suggestion expressed in some newspapers that, if the Muslim University be not established, the sum realized for the purpose should be utilized in opening industrial colleges and in granting scholarships for technical education in Europe. At the same time he reminds his readers that it will be discreditable to the Muhammadans if they now fail in their determination seeing that they proclaimed all over the world their intention to establish a university.

40. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), publishes the first instalment of a contributed article about the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, in which the writer says that he is not aware of any public services rendered by Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan, and says that his appointment as secretary of the Aligarh college will not be acceptable to the entire Muhammadan community. He asserts that there are many men more able than Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan among the trustees of the college, and that his credulity and superstitious nature are great disqualifications. ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th June 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

In the second instalment of this article he promises to give the names of persons whom he considers to be qualified for the secretaryship of the Aligarh college.

Commenting on the above the editor remarks that public opinion should be ascertained before the appointment of a secretary is finally decided upon.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 19th June 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

41. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 19th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer, referring to the proposal to appoint Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan as secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, observes that he is a wealthy and devout Muhammadan, who is trusted by Government, but expresses doubt as to whether, in view of the fact that he lacks liberal-mindedness, breadth of view and wide experience, he will be have influence with educated young men and the confidence of the Muhammadan community as a whole. The editor concedes that the candidature of Mr. Ishaq Khan will be approved by Government and by the religious party among the Muhammadans, but he contests his claim to the leadership of educated Muhammadans. He suggests that Mr. Ishaq Khan should be appointed for the present as a joint secretary, and that he should be confirmed as secretary only when the community is assured of his suitability for the post.

QAISER-I-HIND, 20th June 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

42. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), says that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan is the most suitable person for the secretaryship of the Aligarh college, on account of his piety and religious inclinations, and asserts that he may be implicitly relied upon to defend the political interests of his community. The editor expresses the hope that his appointment as permanent secretary of the Aligarh college for three years will be confirmed by the meeting of trustees to be held on the 21st July 1912.

ANAND, 20th June 1912.

The result of the Allahabad University examinations.

43. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), enquires why the result of the Allahabad University examinations was not published in the United Provinces Government Gazette of the 15th June, seeing that the Syndicate meeting was held on the 12th June. The editor expresses surprise that, when the Leader (Allahabad) could publish the results in its issue of the 16th June, the Government Press could not do so earlier than it did.

INDEPENDENT, 23rd June 1912.

The result of the Allahabad University examinations.

44. The editor of the Independent (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd June 1912, expresses regret at the large percentage of failures in the last Allahabad University examinations.

He complains that the papers set in the last University examinations were very stiff, and remarks that the examinations are meant to judge the knowledge and merits of the examinees and not to fail as many of them as possible.

He takes exception to the rule that the answer books of examinees are not liable to be re-examined, and says that universities in Europe provide facility in this respect. He invites the attention of the Fellows of the Allahabad University to the matter, and asks them to consider this and other defects in the regulations of the University.

LEADER, 22nd June 1912.

First grade college at Gorakhpur.

45. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 22nd June 1912, reproduces the contributed article published in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912, which expressed doubt as to the need for a first grade college in Gorakhpur (vide Selections No. 25, paragraph 59).

LEADER, 27th June 1912.

First grade college at Gorakhpur.

46. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the article that appeared in the Leader of the 22nd June (vide para. supra), and argues that both Benares and Lucknow are expensive places and that many people cannot afford to send their boys to those places for education, and expresses gratification that B.A. classes are to be opened in the St. Andrew's College, Gorakhpur.

He says that the Gorakhpur division, which contains no less than seven English High schools, turning out about fifty matriculates each year, can easily support a first grade college, and remarks that it is wrong to denounce cheap education, when countries like Japan and America are progressing so rapidly with its aid.

47. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), says that the transfer of the capital from Calcutta to Delhi, which is the strong-hold of Urdu, will provide enormous facilities for the development of that vernacular. The editor reminds his readers that Mr. Muhammad Ali, editor of the Comrade (Calcutta), proposes to secure the supremacy of Urdu by starting an Urdu journal of a high order in Delhi, and he remarks that such a departure augurs badly for the cause of Hindi. He urges its advocates and well-wishers to awake to the needs of the situation and to take steps to start a first class Hindi journal in Delhi.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 19th June 1912.

The need for starting a Hindi journal in Delhi.

He says that he is not opposed to the development of Urdu for itself, but because its support by Muhammadans will indefinitely postpone the possibility of having one language for India, seeing that Urdu can never become the common language of the country.

48. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), says that Mr. Montagu recently stated, in answer to a question in the House of Commons, that as the managers and assistant managers of Indian factories were mostly Europeans, most of the factory inspectors, if not all, would be Europeans, and remarks that the Bengalee (Calcutta) has proved that Mr. Montagu's statement was wrong and that Indians form the bulk of the managers and assistant managers of the factories in this country. The editor observes that, granting for the sake of argument that what Mr. Montagu said was true, it is undesirable that most of the factory inspectors should be Europeans.

Indians and the appointment of factory inspectors.

He contends that such considerations should not govern appointments to posts in the public service where merit should be the only qualification, and remarks that, in view of the fact that Indians have fully proved their capacity by efficiently discharging the duties of high and responsible offices, it is unfair to make racial considerations a bar to their appointment to any post.

49. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd June 1912, has the following under the heading "Ignorance and flattery":—

ADVOCATE, 23rd June 1912.

European and Indian officials.

"A young civilian was placed in charge of a district in Eastern Bengal and Assam. A Hindu deputy collector called upon him. The Collector was in his office room at his house when the deputy babu called. On going near him the Collector asked him to sit down on a chair. The deputy, who appears to be past-master in the art of flattery, said to the Collector in order to please him: 'How can I sit before my august master, it would be the height of impertinence and disrespect if I do so.' The young civilian thought that perhaps it was due to custom that the subordinate Indian officers did not sit before their superiors and that it was a mistake on his part to allow them to sit in his presence. From that day the other chairs were removed from his study (or office room) and he used to sit in his own chair and receive the visitors. It appears that he was doubtful if he would give a chair to a non-official visitor or not. We do not really know what used to be done in such cases. Chairs might have been brought from the other room in their case. A titled officer one day called upon him when he held a higher post and was staying at the head quarters of Government. Not finding a chair in his room the officer in question went to the adjoining dining room and got a chair to which the officer did not object, but he did not make any enquiry as regards the custom. One day a nawab, who perhaps knew the officer well, called upon him and, knowing that he was in his office, the nawab without sending his card or any previous notice, entered the room. There being no other chair there except the officer's own the nawab also dashed towards the dining room to fetch a chair followed by his friend. The nawab got hold of a chair and was dragging it to the office room when his friend also seized it and then there was the usual struggle of oriental courtesy, each trying to take the chair. There is no definite information as to who actually took the chair to the office room. After taking his seat the nawab enquired about the absence of chair from his office room, and he then related the story of the deputy collector and said that from that day he never used to keep chairs in his office room. The nawab took him to task and pointed out his mistake. From that time forth we hear chairs were kept regularly in his office. This story proves two things: the class of men from amongst whom officers of the P.C.S., S.B.C.S. are recruited in Eastern Bengal and Assam and the ignorance of the young civilians of the present generation of the customs and manners of the people."

INDEPENDENT, 23rd June 1912.

The Proclamation Pillar and Minto Park.

50. The editor of the Independent (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd June 1912, expresses his agreement with the proposal for laying out a park in Allahabad at the site of the Garhi-ki-Sarai, and expresses regret at the opposition of the members of the municipal board to the proposal.

He says that the proposed park would improve the appearance of the city and benefit the health of the people.

INDEPENDENT, 23rd June 1912.

Complaint regarding emigration agents.

51. The editor of the Independent (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd June 1912, complains that the emigration agents gain the consent of minor girls to work in distant lands by holding out to them false hopes of earning large amounts of money, and that when their guardians interfere on their behalf, the agents assault them. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and suggests that intending emigrants should be required to depose before District Magistrates to the effect that they are voluntarily undertaking to work in foreign countries. He says that if his suggestion be adopted the public will have no cause for complaint in future about the conduct of emigration agents.

Abduction of Hindu women and children.

52. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th June 1912, says that nowadays Indians, especially Hindus, find it very difficult to pass their lives peacefully, for coolie recruiting agents entice away their women and children, while Christian missionaries lose no opportunity of obtaining possession of their boys and girls. The editor adds that Muhammadans also entice away their women and corrupt their chastity. In support of this charge he states that a boy and a girl belonging to the Kurmi caste were recently enticed away by a Christian missionary in Bachhrawan in the Rae Bareli district, while some Muhammadans at Jodhpur abducted the wife of a Kashmiri Brahman. He states, on the authority of the Bharat Mitra (Calcutta), that only recently a few coolies, including four women, fell into the hands of recruiting agents and were ordered to be sent to the Assam tea gardens by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Howrah against their will.

LEADER, 26th June 1912.

The employment of Indians in the Jail Department.

53. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th June 1912, has the following:—

"The Inspector General of Prisons in the United Provinces is a European officer who at present draws Rs. 1,830 in pay and allowances. The six superintendents of central prisons are Europeans whose pay and allowances range between Rs. 1,830 and Rs. 675, and who among them draw at present a total sum of Rs. 6,955 a month. There are six European jailors attached to the central prisons drawing between Rs. 250 and Rs. 200 whose total emoluments come to Rs. 1,350 a month. The thirteen European officers among them get Rs. 10,135. As against this there are thirty-five Indian jailors attached to central and district jails whose pay ranges between Rs. 250 and Rs. 75, and whose total pay is Rs. 1,700. That is, all that the Indian officers get is Rs. 1,700 as against Rs. 10,135 that Europeans get; and there is not a single Indian who is paid more than Rs. 250 a month. Let impartial men say whether this is justice to the natives of the country."

Prison administration of the United Provinces.

54. Reviewing the annual report on the condition and management of the jails in the United Provinces for the year ending 31st December 1911, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th June 1912, expresses agreement with the views of the Inspector General of Prisons about the injurious effects of short sentences inflicted on young prisoners for trivial offences, and suggests that the Local Government should see that more frequent use is made by magistrates of the power conferred upon them by section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of releasing a first offender guilty of certain specified offences.

He expresses satisfaction that the Local Government is considering a scheme for the introduction of special courts for the trial of offences committed by children.

on the lines of those established in England by the Childrens' Act of 1908. He lends his support to the suggestion of the Inspector General of Prisons for raising the age-limit for admission to the juvenile jail at Bareilly to twenty-one, and expresses appreciation of the intention of Government to open a second reformatory for boys who cannot be admitted into the Bareilly juvenile jail, and for habitual juvenile prisoners under the age of fifteen.

He emphasizes the necessity for providing more space and factory accommodation and teaching staff for the remaining juvenile offenders, and notes with satisfaction that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has asked for detailed proposals on the subject from the Inspector General. He goes on to say that the solution of the problem as how to set the discharged convict on the way to earn a living depends largely on the public spirit shown by Indians, and expresses regret that the agencies for relieving discharged prisoners are almost non-existent in India. He invites attention to the suggestion that the Deputy Commissioner of the district to which released juvenile prisoners return should take some interest in following their subsequent careers and in helping them when possible to earn an honest livelihood. He expresses satisfaction at the Lieutenant Governor's willingness to help the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society which the Salvation Army has proposed to start, and appeals to public-spirited citizens to help this beneficent work.

55. Referring to the account of the Aid to Discharged Prisoners' Fund given in the last annual report on the condition and management of jails in the United Provinces, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th June 1912, expresses regret that the sum available is so small that the Inspector General of Prisons is handicapped in his efforts to aid discharged prisoners, and that no addition has been made to the fund since it was started in 1893. The editor expresses the hope that Government will make a special grant to the fund, and he appeals to the public to do their best to help the Jail Department in this useful work.

Aid to Discharged Prisoners' Fund.

56. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912, ridicules the agitation against the proposal to divide the unwieldy district of Mymensingh into two areas, and says that the cry of partition should not be raised in such paltry cases, if the peoples' voice is to be entitled to respectful attention by Government.

LEADER, 27th June 1912.

The partition of Mymensingh.

The editor attaches little weight to the arguments about the increase of the financial burdens of the people of Mymensingh and about the creation of two separate interests, and remarks that Bengal need not be agitated over a petty measure which is meant to promote the administrative convenience and administrative efficiency of a district.

V.—Legislation.

57. The Nagri Prachárak (Lucknow), for the month of April 1912 (received on the 24th June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses gratification at the rejection of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's Elementary Education Bill.

NAGRI, PRACHARAK, April 1912.

The Elementary Education Bill.

He contends that the introduction of the element of compulsion will retard the progress of genuine education, and points out that, though the number of literate persons may increase, the number of really educated people will decrease. He asserts that the present educational system is quite adequate for the needs of the country, and says that there is no ground for the apprehension that under the present system of education the higher and middle classes will become richer at the expense of the lower classes.

He states that the Hindi language will not be benefited by the introduction of compulsory elementary education, seeing that there would be no scope for the teaching of high class Hindi literature in a course of study which extends over two years. He says that the supporters of Mr. Gokhale's bill overlook the difference between European and Indian society and forget that, while an educated Englishman will never give up his hereditary profession, an educated low class Indian will look down upon his ancestral trade and will much prefer to be a railway ticket collector on Rs. 10 a month than a khansama on Rs. 20 a month. He concedes that every effort should be encouraged to promote popular education without distinction of caste or creed, but he insists that Government should not compel its subjects to send their children to school.

Proposed legislation for the protection of women and minor girls.

58. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 20th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), says that as the proposed legislation for the protection of women and minor girls will involve the raising of the age of consent from twelve to sixteen years there is every likelihood of a commotion being caused in the Hindu community. The editor urges that the social reformers should devise means for the suppression of the traffic in girls, as otherwise Government will be obliged to raise the age of consent and the Hindus will then have to put up with the dangerous consequences of such a change.

The Agra Tenancy Act.

59. Discussing the question of conflict of jurisdiction between civil and revenue courts, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912, invites attention to section 119 of Act II of 1901, which lays down that the decision of a revenue court on a question of proprietary title will become final, if not set right by a court of appeal, and expresses the opinion that the Allahabad High Court has placed a wrong construction on this section, and has held that if in a suit or application before the revenue court the party alleged to be the plaintiff's tenant does not set up a question of title he is precluded from raising it in any subsequent civil or revenue proceeding. With regard to the ruling of the Allahabad High Court, laying down that no distinction need be recognized as between different revenue courts, he contends that it would be very unjust to give a tahsildar, who cannot try a rent suit of a value exceeding Rs. 100, the power to pass judgment on a question of title involving property worth several lakhs, which, if left unappealed, it might be impossible to set right even by an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

He urges that, in view of the fact that revenue courts have been given powers equal to that of the highest civil courts, provision should be made for the proper manning of these courts by trained lawyers.

He contends that, as the officers presiding over revenue courts do not undergo a legal training, they should not be permitted to discharge the functions of civil courts, and suggests that the civil courts should be given the sole power of deciding questions of proprietary title in order to avoid the present waste of power and to settle all questions of conflicting jurisdictions and res judicata. He admits the wisdom of the provision of clause (3) of section 201 of the Act which lays down that the record of rights should be prepared with the utmost care, and that the revenue court should be permitted to rely upon it, but he contends that when a question is raised the civil court should have an opportunity of examining the record and testing its accuracy.

He concludes by insisting that the jurisdiction of revenue courts should be very clearly defined and demarcated from that of the civil courts.

VI.—Railway.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th June 1912.

Railway accidents.

60. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), refers to the recent collision between the Mirzapur-Katra and Fatehgunj stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and expresses regret at the loss of life and serious injuries sustained by the passengers. The editor invites the attention of Government and the railway authorities to the matter, and suggests the advisability of laying double tracks to insure against railway collisions in future.

He says that twelve hours' duty puts a great strain on station masters and their assistants, and suggests that they should be required to work for only eight hours. He also proposes that night duty should be entrusted to experienced hands, and that instead of one, as at present, there should be two men on duty at night.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th June 1912.

Railway accidents.

61. Referring to the recent collision between a passenger and a goods train near Shahjahanpur on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), enquires why the press was not informed about the accident in time, and why all information about the killed and wounded was withheld from the relations of passengers. The editor asks for information about the number of passenger carriages which were smashed to pieces and the number of passengers who died after the accident. He remarks that the number of passengers recorded as killed or wounded was very few, if three or four carriages, which contain about fifty passengers in each, were thoroughly crushed.

He also complains of the delay in rendering help to the wounded. He urges the Railway Board to institute a searching enquiry into the accident and to publish their report at an early date.

62. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 22nd June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the inconvenience caused to third class passengers on the East Indian Railway by the issue of tickets only at the time of the arrival of trains instead of throughout the day. He says that if, in accordance with the information given to the public in the Railway Guide, tickets were issued as the passengers arrived at the station, there would be no troublesome rush of passengers for the ticket window at train time.

LEADER, 22nd June 1912.

The East Indian Railway.

63. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the inability of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to cope with the traffic on the occasion of an ordinary mela like the Ganga Dasehra which fell this year on the 25th May. He says that at almost every station in the Rae Bareli and Unao districts the passengers had to wait for days together, and states that at Achalgunj station, where hundreds of passengers failed to get accommodation in any train even after waiting for twenty-four hours, the station master went on issuing tickets in spite of the ever-increasing crowd of passengers who could not be provided with seats, and that he refused to take back the tickets and to refund the money when asked to do so.

ADVOCATE, 23rd June 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

64. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th June 1912, has the following :—

LEADER, 25th June 1912.

Outrages on Indian women.

"Cases of outrage on Indian women travelling in railway trains come to light now and then, but the following which has been sent to the Bengalee by a correspondent who 'apparently was an eye-witness' is singularly painful and nearly beats all record :—

When the 56 down passenger train steamed into the Chandernagore station, a party, consisting of about eight soldiers, rushed into a female compartment, regardless of vehement protests from the station staff. There were a Bengali lady and her two little children in the compartment at the time. The soldiers began to beat everybody who tried to approach the compartment; and there was a great uproar, in consequence of which the train was detained there for about a quarter of an hour. Some Bengali gentlemen, however, managed to extricate the lady and her companions from this intricate position by taking them down through the windows. The station master on duty and the policemen who were eye-witnesses of the scene, seemed quite helpless.

We hope the authorities will take severe action against the culprits concerned."

VIII.—Native societies and religious and social matters.

65. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), takes exception to the publication of "The Qoran" and "The extracts from the Qoran" by Messrs. G. A. Asghar and Company, Allahabad, seeing that in the new publication some interference has been made in the original arrangement of the Qoran and that some chapters have also been omitted.

AL MUSHIR, 18th June 1912.

International Library of Literature and the picture of the Prophet Muhammad.

The editor describes the action of the publisher as putting on sale his own religion, and expresses regret that Muhammadans are now disregarding their religion and trying to modify its injunctions. He also objects to the publication of two fanciful pictures of the Prophet Muhammad at pages 1218 and 1228 in the third volume of the International Library of Literature as being offensive to the Muhammadan religion, and urges his co-religionists to protest against the publication of the pictures and to request the British Government to have it stopped.

66. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 22nd June 1912, takes exception to the publication of two fanciful pictures of the Prophet Muhammad in the third volume of the International Library of Literature at pages 1218 and 1228.

International Library of Literature and the picture of the Prophet Muhammad.

The editor describes the publication of the pictures as an insult to the Muhammadans and their religion, and urges the Government of India to make representations to the Imperial Government to have it stopped.

COSMOPOLITAN, 16th June 1912.

67. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 16th June 1912 (received on the 19th June), has an article entitled "Messiah-making in our midst" by "N. S.," in which the writer describes the last annual theosophical convention held at Benares in December last as being quite different from the ordinary theosophical meetings which he was accustomed to, and says that the cult of Krishnamurti or the Order of the Star in the East claimed and received all attention, and that there was very little sign of pure theosophy.

Theosophy and the Order of the Star in the East.

He contrasts this state of affairs with the teaching of Colonel Olcott.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 19th June 1912.

68. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 19th June 1912 (received on the 24th June), refers to the refusal of the District Magistrate of Benares to grant an application made by the secretary of the Benares Arya Samaj asking for the custody of a Hindu orphan girl, who had been made over to some missionary society, and quotes the report of the Indian Famine Commission of 1901 to show that orphans professing a particular religion should, as far as possible, be made over to persons belonging to that religion. The editor expresses the hope that the Magistrate will take steps to hand over the girl to the Arya Samaj orphanage.

Disposal of orphans in Benares.

AL MUSHIR, 18th June 1912.

69. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th June 1912 (received on the 22nd June), refers to the deputation of Muhammadans which recently waited on the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore to prevent the display of fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat, and expresses satisfaction at the notice issued by the Deputy Commissioner prohibiting the sale of fireworks on the occasion of the next Shab-i-barat and providing penalties for failure to comply with the order.

Fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

The editor expresses regret at the extravagant expenditure by the Muhammadans on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat in displaying fireworks, and expresses the hope that the method adopted to prevent the display of fireworks by the Muhammadans in Lahore will also be followed in Moradabad.

He condemns the custom of discharging fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat and urges the Muhammadans of the United Provinces to discard it.

RAHBAR, 21st June 1912.

70. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st June 1912 (received on the 27th June), says that the Hindus are one nation, though professing different creeds, while the Muhammadans of the different provinces of India, although strongly united by the ties of a democratic religion, cannot be said to belong to a homogeneous nationality. The editor urges the Hindus to sink their superficial differences and to prove to the world that they hold a common religion.

Religion and nationality.

LEADER, 22nd June 1912.

71. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 22nd June 1912, has the following:—

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal.

"We receive from time to time papers relating to the internal strife in the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal with the request that we should express our opinion on the merits of the personal controversies that have been going on. We are sorry we must decline the courteous invitation. To our mind the best that could happen to the country, the Hindu community, and the Mahamandal itself is that that organization should decree its own abolition. It is so very reactionary in its religious and social tendencies and activities that, far from promoting the well-being and advancement of the community, it does a lot of harm—whenever it does anything at all, that is to say. Its members are so wealthy and influential that if they are so minded they can make themselves a powerful help to progress. But the misfortune and mischief is that they do not."

72. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 23rd June 1912, refers to a recent case of alleged forcible conversion of a Muhammadan girl at Benares and to the alleged abduction by a Christian missionary of a boy and a girl belonging to the Kurmi caste in Bachhrawan in the Rae Bareli district. The editor says that the parents of the latter recently applied to the City Magistrate of Lucknow to have them handed over to them, and expresses regret that the magistrate did not direct an enquiry to be made by the police but personally wrote to the Christian missionary about it. He remarks that such proceedings are calculated to cause resentment among the people, and invites the immediate attention of the Local Government to the case.

Objectionable practices of Christian missionaries.

73. Referring to the order of Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector and Sub-Divisional Officer, Pilibhit, requiring five office-holders of the local Arya Samaj to execute security bonds to keep the peace from the 3rd to the 7th June 1912, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd June 1912, expresses the opinion that if there was any fear of a breach of the peace from the peaceful discussion which was carried on between a maulvi and the Samajists on the 2nd June, both the parties should have been prohibited from holding any discussion in Pilibhit, and that criminal proceedings should have been instituted if the parties had refused to carry out the orders of the magistrate. The editor expresses his inability to understand the reason for any interference with the liberty of the office-holders of the Pilibhit Arya Samaj, and suggests that a searching enquiry should be instituted into the case.

The Pilibhit Arya Samaj.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), reminds Turkey that after her successful campaign against Greece in 1898 she was compelled, by the intervention of the European Powers, to forego the just fruits of her success and to restore to Greece her independence, and expresses the opinion that a peace between Turkey and Italy, brought about by the mediation of the Powers, will prove disastrous to the former, and will lead to the early disruption of the Turkish Empire. The editor asserts that the vacillating and wavering policy followed by Turkey has led to the present unhappy situation in Morocco and Persia and in her own provinces of Macedonia and Albania, and insists that the only arbiter between the two belligerents should be the sword. He expresses regret that the Muhammadans, who were a world-conquering force only a few centuries back, are now in their turn being conquered by the European races, and says that they will not regain their ancient predominance unless they conform more strictly to the dictates of their religion.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th June 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

2. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), refers to an article which appeared in the Watan (Lahore), of the 19th June, in which Nawab Mushtaq Husain and the other Muhammadan leaders were asked to exert their influence in collecting funds for the Turkish relief fund, and says that ever since hostilities broke out the Nawab has been doing his duty in that respect, and that when the subscription list was opened at Aligarh he was the first to subscribe.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

The Turkish relief fund.

The editor expresses commendation of the self-sacrifice of the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, who have unanimously resolved to abstain from taking rich and expensive food so long as the war lasts in order to continue sending the amount thus saved for the relief of their suffering brethren in Tripoli.

He states that so far Rs. 4,000 have been sent to Turkey through the British Ambassador, and that another instalment of Rs. 2,500 is shortly to be remitted.

3. The Qaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), expresses apprehension that the activity of the Italian fleet may bring about a world-wide conflagration which would be most disastrous. The editor expresses admiration for the bravery of the Turks, and remarks that the Italians have not established themselves anywhere off the Tripolitan coast beyond the range of their naval guns. He expresses the opinion that Italy is endeavouring to secure European intervention in the war as the result of her activity in the Ægean Sea and he suggests that the Italians have become so impressed by the reckless bravery of the Turks and Arabs that they have no longer any desire for a conflict on land. He deplores the naval weakness of Turkey, and expresses regret that the Turkish fleet, which once ruled the seas (sic), has become so enfeebled that it cannot protect her own dominions, and that it is being treated with contempt by the fleet of a petty Power like Italy.

QAISER-I-HIND, 27th June 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He concludes the article with the following words: "Oh, spirit of Barbarossa, revered shade! Thou, oh spirit, wouldst feel and grieve for the miseries of thy countrymen. Arise and behold! Look upon this spectacle of slaughter. To-day that petty kingdom, which so many times (sic) grovelled at thy feet on account of thy bravery, is treating the Turkish Empire with contempt, that Empire consolidated by your illustrious master, and it is thinking scorn of her fleet. Alas! that great Power (England), which had helped Turkey out of so many difficulties and had been her friend and sympathizer in times of trouble, is now giving her no practical help beyond barren words of sympathy. To-day her (England's) star of justice seems to be sinking; her qualities of righteousness and love of justice are now under a cloud; her reputed zeal in the cause of the oppressed seems to be nonexistant. Arise, England, if thou art proud of Nelson, and help thine old friend in this her difficulty. One hint from thee would be sufficient to stop this bloodshed. With thy support Turkey would be saved from the troubles with which she is oppressed. A slight movement would scatter to the winds all the dreams which the Triple alliance have formed and which are endangering the safety of Europe."

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

The situation in Persia.

4. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), publishes the proceedings at a mass meeting of Muhammadans held at Calcutta on the 14th June to protest against the desecration of the holy shrine of Imam Raza at Meshed by Russian troops, and refers to the formation of various committees at Calcutta to collect funds for sending out Muhammadan volunteers to Tripoli and Persia. The editor enquires whether the British Government has taken any notice of the public feeling in the country about affairs in Persia and Turkey, and whether it is prepared to do anything in the matter to help those countries. He expresses gratitude to Government for its expression of sympathy at the desecration of the shrine of Imam Raza at Meshed by Russian troops, but observes that mere words will have no effect in improving the situation.

He urges Government to prevent Russia from committing any more atrocities in Persia, and asks it to renounce its friendship with Russia, seeing that the whole Muslim world is indignant at the cowardly and impious outrages prepetrated by the Russians at Meshed.

He says that if the British Government were to break off its alliance with Russia the latter country would never dare in future to wound the religious susceptibilites of the Muhammadans. He expresses the hope that Sir Edward Grey will show consideration for the unanimous voice of the Muhammadans, and that he will adopt a policy of cutting off relations with Russia and suggests that it would not only prove beneficial for Persia but benefit England as well.

He observes that if the alliance between England and Russia were to be broken, the Muhammadans of India would feel gratified, and would realize that Government not only professed regard for the national and religious feelings of its Muhammadan subjects, but that it is ever ready to give a practical proof of its sympathy.

TAFRIH, 28th June 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Tripoli and Persia.

5. Referring to a statement in the Hablul Matin (Calcutta) that Calcutta Muhammadans were collecting subscriptions to send volunteers to Tripoli and Persia, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), expresses doubt as to whether the Government of India will permit Indian Muhammadans to proceed as volunteers to the seat of war, and enquires whether Indian Muhammadans know how to handle arms. The editor says that it would be sheer waste of money to send such worthless men as volunteers to face the Italian and Russian guns.

MASHRIQ, 25th June 1912.

The Indian National Congress.

6. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 29th June), contains an article entitled "Is the Congress a truly national body?" in which the editor says that the Congress is an association of a handful of educated Indians who pose as the representatives of the Indians.

He refers to the opposition of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan to the Congress, and remarks that he was perfectly right in opposing an institution which did not know how to work on proper lines and how to gain political concessions.

He says that the institution of the Congress was quite inopportune, seeing that the people of India had at that time made no progress in education. He goes on to say that the Congress has never been representative of the Indian nation, and that a group of Bengalis call it "national" only to deceive the public.

He expresses regret that the present generation of young Muhammadans believe that Government submitted to the demands of bomb-throwers and seditionists, and that the partition of Bengal was annulled owing to the efforts of the Congress. He deplores the desire on the part of some of the Muhammadans to join the Congress, and remarks that if they do so under this impression the moderate element in the Congress will disappear, and that it will become a body of persons holding extremist views.

He expresses regret at the growing estrangement of feeling between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and advises the experienced leaders of both the communities to reconstitute the Congress on very moderate lines.

He observes that if the Congress become the united political institution of both Hindus and Muhammadans, the Hindu-Muhammadan question would almost entirely disappear.

In conclusion he expresses the hope that the Muslim League and the Congress will be amalgamated, and observes that there appears no reason why the Congress should not be called the Indian National Congress if it alters its tone when it is demanding political concessions, when it assumes moderate views and is joined by the Muhammadans.

7. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), refers to the qualification of his recent statement about the unity of the Muhammadan community in India by Mr. Montagu, and expresses gratification that the protests of the Muhammadans have had the desired effect.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

Mr. Montagu and the Indian Muhammadans.

The editor remarks that the expression of regret is the first success which the Muhammadans of India have achieved by joint and concerted agitation, and he asks them to remember that the British Government is a constitutional government which will accede to their demands if they carry on their agitation constitutionally and perseveringly.

8. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), expresses gratification at the regret expressed by Mr. Montagu that his statement about the homogeneity of the Muhammadans of India should have been misinterpreted and given offence to them. The editor says that his co-religionists in India should express their obligation to Mr. Montagu for having admitted the inaccuracy of his statement, and that they should feel proud of being subjects of a nation which is famous for the large-hearted and liberal views of its ministers.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

Mr. Montagu and the Indian Muhammadans.

9. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), reproduces a contributed article from the Chowdahween Sadi (Rawalpindi), in which the writer condemned the policy of conducting agitation against the attitude or action of Government, as has been urged by some of the Muhammadan newspapers in the Punjab. He mentioned the Zamindar (Lahore) as an advocate of the principle of agitation and reminded its editor of the policy of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan who was always opposed to such agitation. The writer said that the agitation of a minority would have no good result and that it generally ended in disaster.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

The British Government and the Muhammadan newspapers.

He objected to the attitude of the Zamindar towards the present Muhammadan leaders, and reminded the editor of that paper that it was they who secured political concessions from Government, and that they if did not have the support of their co-religionists their position would become a very difficult one. He urged the Muhammadan journalists to dissuade their community from resorting to agitation, to advocate moderation in Muhammadan newspapers and to advise their co-religionists to lay any grievances they may have before Government in a proper spirit.

The editor invites the attention of his readers to the article, but expresses disagreement with the views expressed by the writer against resorting to agitation. He says that circumstances have quite changed and that if Sir Saiyid had been alive he too would have modified his views about agitation, seeing that Government is obviously influenced by it.

He observes that agitation can never be harmful if carried on moderately and constitutionally, but he urges Muhammadans to always maintain a respectful attitude towards Government in their public speeches, and to always remember that their existence in the country is bound up with the continuance of British rule in India.

10. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), refers to the resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Allahabad District Muslim League that if the Muhammadans were not granted separate representation on local bodies, the Muhammadans of Allahabad would refrain from taking any part in the work of the municipal and district boards, and remarks that the Muslim League, instead of doing any useful work, has created discord between Hindus and Muhammadans, and has urged the latter to demand special favours from Government. The editor states that the League is advocating separatism without any restriction, and desires to secure for the Muhammadans separate and special rights in every department.

Beharis and Bengalis.

11. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), expresses disapproval of the controversy which is going on between the Beharis and the Bengalis with regard to the establishment of a separate High Court and University in Behar, and trusts that the Bengalis, instead of opposing the Beharis, will support them in their just demand for a separate High Court and University. The editor says that it is natural that there should be differences of opinion on questions of provincial interest, but he urges that such differences should not prevent Bengalis and Beharis from acting together when questions of national welfare are involved. He remarks that all patriotic Indians deprecated the exclusion of the Bengalis from the Reception Committee of the next session of the Indian National Congress, and observes that it is a matter of great satisfaction that the Beharis have now acknowledged their mistake and have taken eighteen Bengalis on the Reception Committee. He expresses the opinion that all efforts for provincial and communal progress, unless regarded from a national point of view, are bound to fail and cannot produce lasting results.

LEADER, 29th June 1912.

Indentured labour.

12. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th June 1912, publishes a letter, dated Bombay, the 26th June, from Mr. H. S. L. Polak on "Indentured labour," in which he refers to a communiqué issued by the Madras Government in which it is stated that about 1,627 emigrants returned from Natal with Rs. 2,24,400, and says that such a large sum could not possibly have been saved by the emigrants during indenture. He advises Government not to lay itself open to the charge of defending the system of indentured labour by countenancing the issue of dubious, incomplete and misleading statistics.

ADVOCATE, 4th July 1912.

The Eurasian community and the defence of India.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th July 1912, refers to an article contributed by Mr. H. P. Skipton to the Empire Review (London) in which the event of a European war was discussed and it was said that England would be compelled to recall her British regiments from India, and that in such a situation, though the effeminate races of Southern India and Bengal would not count, the martial races of Northern India and the armies of the native princes would have to be subdued by the Eurasians. The editor deprecates any attempt on the part of Government to advance the Eurasian community by fostering a policy of distrust of all the other communities in India, and he ridicules the suggestion that the continuance of British rule in India could depend on the favour of a community whose moral and educational condition is so lamentable. He suggests that the domiciled community should throw in its lot with the children of the soil instead of clamouring for differential treatment. He says that Government is bound to hold the scales evenly between all sections of the people, and he asks the Eurasian community to adopt a policy of self-help instead of asking Government to show special favours to it at the cost of the children of the soil.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

14. Referring to the disappointment expressed by Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji to a representative of the Empire (Calcutta) about Lord Crewe's statement in the House of Lords on Indian autonomy, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th June 1912, expresses satisfaction at Mr. Banerji's recognition of the fact that Lord Crewe's statement was due to the pressure of circumstances in the House of Lords. The editor reiterates the opinion that the statement need not disconcert Congressmen, and that the construction placed by the Secretary of State on the language of the despatch of the Government of India need not be binding on his successors.

He goes on to say: "The truth is this, and this only. If Indians by their increasing worth—by their larger capacity, higher character, greater combination and more disinterested public-spiritedness—will render themselves fit for a more progressive form of government, no power on earth can refuse it them; certainly no genuinely British government will. Britons will have to forget their history and evolve a new type of political character before they can cease to love political liberty and extend the sway of democratic institutions. But they have an instinct for the government of people, and this will prevent them from extending such institutions to those who have not demonstrated their fitness to exercise them. The problem, therefore, before the Indian patriot is to increase and improve the capacity, character and power of combination of the Indian people, and not to go into mourning over Lord Crewe's illiberal interpretation of the famous passage in the famous despatch. The high purpose that has been mentioned above will only be accomplished by the wider dissemination of education and the quicker rectification of social deficiencies."

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

15. Referring to the passage in paragraph 3 of the Government of India's despatch of August 25, about the eventual grant of provincial autonomy, regarding which Lord Curzon expressed the opinion that it meant that a federal system of government would be established in India, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th June 1912, says that the Government of India never meant nor were the Indians so foolish as to demand that the provinces should be as independent as Canada or Australia, and that the authority of the Government of India should be extinguished so far as the internal administration of the country was concerned. The editor concedes that educated Indians no doubt demand that they should be given some share in the administration of their country, like the subjects of the British Crown in other parts of the world, and says that Lord Crewe's declarations will not be binding upon his successors in office. He states that when Lord Crewe considers the reforms to be an advance on safe and sound lines, his successors, a quarter of a century hence, will see that it is necessary to place the finances of the country in the hands of the people, and will realize "the absurdity of the situation which forces the Government of India to have a large number of senior officials by them whose only duty for four months of the year is to say 'aye,' 'aye' to anything which falls from the lips of the heads of departments." He goes on to say that Indians will not be deterred by Lord Crewe's pronouncement, and will carry on their struggle to reach a goal which they have set before them on perfectly constitutional lines. He asserts that the fate of the country lies in the hands of Indians, and says that if they are true to themselves and to the tutelage they have so long undergone, there should be nothing which should stand in the way of their raising their country to a status similar to that of the self-governing British colonies.

ABHYUDAYA, 30th June 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

16. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th June 1912, expresses disapproval of the statement made by Lord Crewe on the question of provincial autonomy in India, and remarks that although the agitation of Lord Curzon and the Anglo-Indian journals in this connection has succeeded in causing some temporary injury to the popular cause, the Indians need not be greatly perturbed over it, seeing that while the passage about provincial autonomy remains in the Government of India's despatch of August 25, Lord Crewe will not be the Secretary of State for India for all time. The editor contends that no Government can now persistently disregard the demands of its subjects, and he cites the instance of the annulment of the partition of Bengal in support of his contention. He says that this instance should always inspire the Indians to try to have their grievances removed and their wants supplied, and he expresses the hope that sooner or later they will secure provincial autonomy in the country. As for Lord Crewe's statement regarding the impossibility of the grant of colonial self-government to India, he says that no statesman can indulge in such a speculation in regard to the future of the country without provoking laughter, and that the Indians themselves will be the makers of their future.

ADVOCATE, 4th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th July 1912, refers to the comments of the Empire and the Statesman (Calcutta) on Lord Crewe's declaration about Indian autonomy, and says that the former was quite right in asserting that His Lordship's successors or India herself should not despair of an India divided into autonomous provinces on account of his pronouncement. The editor reproduces the views expressed in the Statesman that the dissatisfaction and adverse comments which the Secretary of State's speech had caused in the country were fully justified, in view of the fact that the despatch clearly foreshadowed provincial autonomy, and commends the observations made by the Statesman as recalling the glorious days when that paper did so much to advance the cause of progress and reform in India.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th June 1912.

18. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), expresses gratification at the report that a Royal Commission will soon be appointed to enquire into the question of public services in India, and entertains the hope that the Commission will pay due consideration to the claims of Indians in the matter of appointment to higher grades in the public service and of holding the simultaneous Civil Service competitive examinations. The editor remarks that the success of the Commission will depend largely on its constitution, and that the Indians will therefore be anxious to know the names of the persons chosen to sit on it.

ADVOCATE, 30th June 1912.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th June 1912, expresses satisfaction at the announcement that the Home Government has decided to appoint a Royal Commission to enquire into the important question of the public services in India, and expresses the hope that the Home and India Governments will select the personnel of the Commission with due regard for all interests.

Royal Commission on Public Services.

The editor urges that Indian public opinion should express itself in clear and decisive terms about the claims of Indians to higher and more extensive employment in the public services, before the constitution and terms of reference of the proposed Royal Commission are finally settled by the Secretary of State. He describes the policy of Government with regard to the appointment of Indians to the higher services of the State as discreditable to the British Government in India, and expresses appreciation of the splendid services rendered by the Hon'ble Mr. Subba Rao in impressing on Government the need for such a commission.

He ridicules Lord Curzon's attempt to prove that during his viceroyalty Indians were being treated with a liberality unexampled in the history of the world, and remarks that the facts and figures put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale and the Hon'ble Mr. Subba Rao have clearly demonstrated the deplorable position of Indians in the various departments.

He reminds Government of the words of Sir Stafford Northcote, who said in 1867, in the course of a speech in the House of Commons, that the greatness of the Moghal Empire depended upon the liberal policy pursued by rulers like Akbar, who availed themselves of Hindu talent and assistance and identified themselves, as far as possible, with the people of the country, and he urges the British Government to bear in mind these wise words in conducting the proposed enquiry.

AL MUSHIR, 25th June 1912.

20. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), expresses regret that the Muhammadan representatives on the local council have done little or no useful work, and lends its support to the candidature of Mr. Saiyid Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B., for the membership of the local council as the representative of the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand division. The editor says that Mr. Saiyid Raza Ali is the best man available in the division to represent the Muhammadans, and he urges them to secure his return to the local council.

The coming council elections.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th June 1912.

21. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), publishes a manifesto supporting the candidature of Mr. Saiyid Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B., vakil, Moradabad, for election to the United Provinces Legislative Council as the representative of the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions.

Muhammadan representatives in Legislative Councils.

The manifesto, which is issued by the president and the two secretaries of the Moradabad District Muslim League, says that Mr. Saiyid Raza Ali, on account of his knowledge of English, his power of debate, his political knowledge, his acquaintance with the needs of his community, and his public spirit, is eminently fitted to represent Muhammadan interests in the local Legislative Council. It goes on to say that all personal considerations should be set aside in a matter of such vital public importance, and that, in view of the fact that Muhammadans are being reproached by the Hindus for the ignorance of their representatives in the council, only the best man should be elected.

The editor lends his support to the manifesto, and says that the Muhammadans should impress upon Government that they realize their responsibilities by sending the best man available to the council.

22. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 2nd July 1912, complains that though under the Indian Councils Act of 1909 and the Council Regulations the number of representatives has been increased, no improvement has been effected with regard to the methods of election and of the number of persons represented. The editor says that, in spite of the fact that landlords enjoy the right of separate representation, the district boards, which have on them a preponderance of the landlord element, sometimes command a larger number of votes than the municipalities. He points out that there are large numbers of nominated and official members on the municipal and district boards, and that the elected members of district boards are elected by persons who are arbitrarily selected by the head of the district and not chosen by reason of their satisfying definite property or education tests. He notes that while Muhammadan landlord councillors are elected directly by the voters satisfying certain tests, the Hindu middle classes are given no such right. He also complains of what he calls the injustice of allowing Muslim graduates to vote for the election of a member of the council while non-Muslim graduates do not enjoy a similar privilege. He suggests that the Kumaun division should be allowed a representative, and possibly the Jhansi division also.

LEADER, 2nd July 1912.

The Council Regulations.

23. Referring to the report that His Highness Sir Agha Khan has consented to stand as a candidate of the Bombay presidency Muhammadans for election to the Imperial Legislative Council, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 30th June 1912, remarks that there is no doubt that his election will have a restraining influence upon Hindu and Muhammadan members of the council in the matter of differences of opinion. The editor admits that his views differ from those of his Hindu colleagues on many important questions, but urges that he is far superior to such Muhammadan representatives as Nawab Abdul Majid Khan. He says that in these circumstances the election of Sir Agha Khan will give satisfaction to all classes of people.

24. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th June 1912, congratulates the people of the new province of Behar and Orissa on their obtaining an Executive Council with the Maharaja of Darbhanga as its Indian member, and expresses the hope that the United Provinces will also have an Executive Council in the immediate future.

25. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th June 1912, expresses regret at the short-sightedness of the Anglo-Indian press in rejoicing over the Privy Council decision in the Mymensingh case. The editor contends that, if the judgment of the High Court against Mr. Clarke was due to his failure to comply with the provisions of the law in having a search for arms carried out in the zamindar's kutcherry, the Privy Council's decision by upsetting that of the Calcutta High Court has the effect of lessening the sense of security felt by private individuals who may not be in the good graces of executive officers. He asserts that such a consequence is highly undesirable if British rule in India is to be in an increasing degree government by consent. He ridicules the theory advanced by Anglo-Indian publicists that India should be maintained by the sword, and says that there is no responsible statesman in these days who would not recognize that, in view of the growth of national self-consciousness, it is expedient to make British rule in India national, so that Indian public opinion may support it, and so that patriotism may become synonymous with loyalty in India. He expresses regret that this desirable end will not be furthered by the Privy Council's judgment in the Mymensingh case.

26. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th June 1912, has the following:—

"Mr. Montagu has said in reply to a further question by Sir J. D. Rees that the moment the Privy Council judgment was delivered the Secretary of State telegraphed to the Governor General in Council what compensation should be paid to Mr. Clarke. To us, non-officials and Indians, the necessity for any compensation is not clear, but there must have been necessity for it, in order to save the prestige of that officer or for some other reason, otherwise the Secretary of State would not have been so decided and so urgent. Meanwhile attacks on the Hon'ble Judges of the Calcutta High Court continue to be made by Sir J. D. Rees and the Anglo-Indian press. So much the worse for these, is all that we will say."

Perjury in India and England.

LEADER, 2nd July 1912.

The Leader (Allahabad), of the 4th July 1912, invites attention to the municipal mismanagement of the Agra water-supply, and suggests that the Local Government should enquire particularly as to how far the supply of water to the cantonment and the railway is responsible for the shortage of water in the municipal area. The editor says that this is a case for legitimate and even necessary interference on the part of Government, and expresses the hope that the Hon'ble Mr. Hose will give his early attention to the matter.

Elementary education.

32. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), enquires the reasons which have influenced the United Provinces Government in its decision to refrain from spending, during the current year, the whole of the educational grant made by the Government of India, and suggests that, in view of the fact that the grant is an annual recurring charge, Government should publish its reasons for it. The editor expresses the opinion that the cause of elementary education cannot progress unless it is made free and compulsory, and suggests that the people of the United Provinces should follow the example of the Punjab Hindu Elementary League, and that, while impressing upon the public the necessity of elementary education, they should start free primary schools in order to impress on Government the desire of the people for the introduction of free elementary education in the country.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 25th June 1912.

Compulsory and elementary education in India.

33. A correspondent, who signs himself "MAJADDID ALSANA-I-MASHRAQIA (REFORMER IN ORIENTAL LANGUAGES) SAIYID AHMAD HUSAIN SHAUKAT FROM MEERUT," contributes an article entitled "Childish aspirations" to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 29th June), in which he describes the importance of public opinion in European countries, and deplores the existence of religious and party strife between the different communities of India, and the rivalry which exists between Hindus and Muhammadans with regard to government employment. He remarks that this rivalry is impeding the growth of a united India, and takes exception to the introduction of compulsory and elementary education in the country, on the ground that it is likely to increase the poverty of the people, with the result that anarchism and heinous crimes will become common in the land. He advises those who would introduce compulsory and elementary education to open technical and industrial schools in the country on the ground that they would be likely to relieve the existing poverty.

Religious education among Indian Muhammadans.

34. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 29th June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer invites attention to the ignorance of their religion on the part of nau-muslims and other village Muhammadans, and asserts that even among educated men Islam has degenerated into a mere observance of certain formalities. He goes on to say that Western education has helped to create an atmosphere of irreligiousness, and expresses regret that Muhammadan religious preachers are generally narrow-minded. He asserts that the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Nadwah asking for the appointment of Muhammadan religious teachers in government schools is uncalled for, seeing that the Muhammadan Educational Conference has already passed a similar resolution, and he suggests that the Educational Conference should be left alone to urge the appointment of religious teachers in government schools. He expresses approval of the suggestion of the Nadwah for training religious preachers and opening religious schools in villages, and suggests that committees consisting of two or three learned theologians should be formed in each district, and that preachers should be appointed in all mosques in order to induce village Muhammadans to offer prayers regularly in accordance with their religion. He suggests that religious schools should also be opened in these mosques under the guidance and supervision of the religious preachers, that a committee should be formed for the publication of religious books and that provincial committees should be appointed to supervise the work of the district committees. He urges that a cheap religious weekly should be published by the Nadwah, and concludes by saying that in case the Nadwah refuses to perform its legitimate duties with regard to the propagation of Islam, another institution should be started to carry on the work on the lines proposed by him.

The editor expresses the hope that the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, will elect Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan unanimously, which will establish his leadership and confidence in the Muhammadan community.

MASHRIQ, 25th June 1912.

36. A correspondent, who signs himself "QAMAR AHMAD (ALIG)," contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 29th June), in which he complains of the increase of fees in government schools, and of the new rules requiring school students, who fail at any examination, to pay double fees, and says that the new rules regarding the raising of school fees indicate that Government intends to make education more costly. He asserts that, in spite of this increase in the cost of education, the intellectual attainments of educated young men of these days are not satisfactory, and attributes this undesirable state of affairs to the inefficiency of the present system of education. He points out that the technical and industrial schools opened by Government at different centres in the province are proving of little use, seeing that the artizan classes have not yet reaped the benefits of English education, and he appeals to Sir John Hewett to signalize the close of his administration by removing these obstacles to educational progress.

The high cost of education.

TAJIR, 25th June 1912.

37. The Tajir (Meerut), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), complains about the recent order requiring students who appear for a second time for the same examination to pay double fees, while those who fail twice have to pay treble fees or are liable to expulsion from the school, and remarks that fresh obstacles are being constantly placed in these provinces in the way of attaining education.

The new rules regarding school fees.

The editor attributes the failure of students to the large number of text-books prescribed, to the injudicious way in which selections of text-books are made by the Text-book Committee, to the growing system of keeping private tutors and to the undue severity of the examinations. He objects to the present procedure requiring examinees to write their names on their answer books, on the ground that many students suffer owing to religious and racial ill-feeling and prejudice on the part of the examiners, and he suggests that the Allahabad University, like the Punjab, should require examinees to write their roll numbers only. He points out that the new rules will entail great hardship upon the majority of students, who are children of poor and middle class parents, and expresses the hope that the Education Department will be induced to withdraw them.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th June 1912.

38. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), urges that, in view of the unpleasantness which occurred last year between the Principal of the Allahabad Christian College and his students on the subject of Hindu holidays, it is absolutely necessary that this important question should be settled before the ensuing college session begins. The editor expresses the opinion that the authorities of the college should clearly state whether they will allow the same holidays as are observed in other schools and colleges, and he suggests that, if they be not prepared to do so, the Hindu students should make arrangements at once so as to avoid trouble later on.

Holidays in missionary colleges.

TAFRIH, 28th June 1912.

39. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), refers to the resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Allahabad District Muslim League urging the appointment of Muhammadans in equal numbers with Hindus as teachers in government, municipal and district board schools, and as sub-deputy and deputy inspectors, and remarks that, in view of the fact that the number of Hindu boys is much larger than that of Muhammadan boys, the number of Hindu teachers should be proportionately larger than that of Muhammadan teachers. He urges that the only test for such appointments should be ability and merit and not racial or religious considerations.

LEADER, 30th June 1912.

40. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 30th June 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer discusses a paper entitled "An educational remedy for Indian unrest" read by Mr. A. G. Fraser, Principal of the Trinity College, Kandy, Ceylon, in London in the last week of May. He asserts that there are great differences between India and Ceylon, and contends that the dissimilarity of the conditions in the two countries precludes the establishment of the parallel which Mr. Fraser attempted to make ent between India and Ceylon. He expresses agreement with Mr. Fraser's comments with regard to the slowness of the British Government in spreading education in India, and invites attention to the eminently reasonable views of Mr. Fraser about allaying unrest by a policy of conciliation.

He questions the justice of Mr. Fraser's statement that Western education had denationalized Indian students and had made them disloyal and sceptical, and asserts that English educated Hindus and Muhammadans care more for nationality and religion and that they take a pride in the revival of ancient learning, culture and religion in India. He concedes that the absence of religious education in government schools has made sceptics of many students, but points out that the growth of Hindu, Sikh and Muslim denominational institutions is checking the growth of scepticism.

He asserts that the absence of religious training has had no injurious effects on the morals and manners of Indian youths, and characterizes the charge of disloyalty as absurd. He states that the loyalty of Indians to the British throne cannot be questioned, and remarks that it is a mistake to construe legitimate criticism as disloyalty.

ZUL QARNAIN, 28th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

41. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), reproduces an article entitled "Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk Bahadur and the drama of the Muslim University" by Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, High Court, Meerut, from the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 22nd June, in which the writer complimented Nawab Mushtaq Husain for the respect in which he was held by his co-religionists and for his orthodox views in religious matters. He said that, though the Nawab was said to possess great moral courage, for which he was so well-known, he could not exhibit it unless he were supported by some one. He referred to his resignation of the post of general superintendent in the Aligarh Collectorate because he could not get leave to say his prayers, and remarked that he could not have acted so boldly had not the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan supported him. He expressed appreciation of the Nawab's conduct in frankly declaring his policy on taking over the charge of the secretaryship of the Aligarh College, in criticising the inopportune interference by some of the trustees, in boldly condemning the recent administrative changes in India and in advising the Muhammadans to refuse to accept a University which would deprive them of the present privileges which they enjoyed in controlling the affairs of the Aligarh College, but he asserted that in spite of all that he lacked firmness and determination.

In support of his contention he said that when the Nawab took charge of his present post he declared that he would carry on the affairs of the College impartially, but that he gave way when he proposed some names for trusteeship and was met with strong opposition from some local trustees.

He remarked that the Nawab originally criticised very strongly the action of some of the trustees, but with a little flattery he was induced to withdraw his objections, and began to praise those with whom he found fault.

He commended the Nawab's first letter which appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette in connection with the recent administrative changes for its bold and frank expression of views, but expressed regret that he was influenced by a small editorial note of the Pioneer (Allahabad), so that he declared that what he wrote in the letter indicated his personal views on the subject.

He referred to the Nawab's letters recently published in connection with the Muslim University constitution, and objected to his attitude towards the members of the committee who had drafted the rules and regulations for the Muslim University.

He criticised the Nawab's advice that the Muhammadans should only devote themselves at present to the collection of funds for the University, and that they should not worry themselves as to what would become of the money collected for the University in the event of their not getting a charter for it according to the wishes of the Muhammadan public.

He referred to the question of affiliation of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, to the Muslim University, and remarked that this question should have been settled with Government before collecting the funds, and in conclusion he apologized to Nawab Mushtaq Husain in case his observations should have offended him.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

42. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), in reply to Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain's article entitled "Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk Bahadur and the drama of the Muslim University" (vide para. supra).

Nawab Mushtaq Husain begins his article by saying that he was not at all offended at the observations made by Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain, and says that persons engaged in public work must always be prepared to face criticisms of their actions.

He says that his object in writing this article was only to rectify the observations of the Khwaja which were based on incorrect information.

He refers to the remark of Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain about his resignation of the post of general superintendent in the Collector's office, Aligarh, and the support of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad, and states that Sir Saiyid was informed of the affair after everything concerning his resignation and its acceptance had been settled.

With regard to the remark of the Khwaja that Nawab Mushtaq Husain, in spite of his avowed policy of impartiality, when he met with some opposition from the local trustees, relinquished his right of proposing names for trusteeship, he observes that the election of trustees does not depend on his views or on his individual vote, but that the candidate who gets the majority of votes is declared elected.

He goes on to say that on one occasion Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain's name was also proposed for a trusteeship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, but that he could not secure the required number of votes, with the result that he could not be elected.

He says that the Khwaja Sahib is mistaken if he is under the impression that he (Nawab Mustaq Husain) was influenced by some of the local trustees and withdrew his name from the list of proposed candidates.

With regard to the Khwaja Sahib's remark that Nawab Mushtaq Husain first criticised very strongly the action of some of the trustees, but on being flattered he withdrew his objections, and began to praise those persons with whom he found fault, he says that it is very difficult to refute an allegation of such a general nature, and observes that if the Khwaja Sahib meant to refer to the past differences of opinion between him and the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan, he (the Nawab) never withdrew any of his objections, and that it was the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan who withdrew his objections in a general meeting of the trustees.

With regard to the remark of the Khwaja Sahib that Nawab Mushtaq Husain was influenced by an editorial note of the Pioneer (Allahabad), and declared that his letter about the administrative changes in India conveyed his own personal views, he says that he still holds the same opinion which he expressed when he wrote his first letter about the administrative changes, and that it was the wrong interpretation put on his words by some of the Hindu papers which led him to write another letter and to explain his position.

He goes on to say that he declared the views expressed by him as his personal views, in that it was not proper on his part to give out his opinion in his capacity as secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

He refers to the Khwaja Sahib's remarks about his letters recently published in the Aligarh Institute Gazette concerning the rules and regulations of the Muslim University, and remarks that he still adheres to the views he expressed about the regulations, and that if in one of his letters he wrote something about the gentlemen who had drafted the rules and regulations in order that they might not get disheartened, no person could charge him with being changeable.

With regard to the exception taken by the Khwaja Sahib to Nawab Mushtaq Husain's advice to the Muhammadans that they should devote themselves to the collection of funds for the establishment of the proposed Muslim University at present, and should not worry as to what will become of the money collected in the event of a charter being not granted for the University, he says that his co-religionists will be the best judges whether he was in the right or wrong in advising them so.

With regard to the remarks of the Khwaja Sahib about the question of affiliation to the Muslim University, he says that his remarks are due to his inexperience, and observes that the question is still under the consideration of the Secretary of State, and that there is no reason to despair of the grant of the power to the University.

In conclusion he asks Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain to collect funds first for the establishment of a useful university, and then to discuss how to spend the money profitably.

Want of accommodation for school and college students.

With regard to the poor students who fail to get admission on account of the increased rate of fees, he suggests that a Hindu educational conference should be started in these provinces on the lines of those existing in the Punjab and Bengal, in order to help deserving students.

44. The Kshattriya Mitra (Benares), of the 16th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), publishes a contributed article in which the writer, one Nahar Deva, warns landowners to be on their guard against the educated classes, the members of which look down with contempt upon them.

KSHATTRIYA MITRA, 16th June 1912.

Landowners and the educated classes.

He says that people of the educated middle class want to deprive landowners of their position, and that with this object in view they are declaiming against them as being unfit to be members of legislative councils. He adds that they opposed the Court of Wards Bill in the United Provinces Legislative Council because they were afraid that such a measure would prevent the passing of landed property from the hands of landowners into their own hands.

He asserts that landowners form an important connection between the cultivators and Government, and that it is to the advantage of Government to make their position as firm as possible.

He says that the landowners are of great assistance to Government in their administration of the country, and that they are much superior to those political reformers who do nothing beyond delivering lectures.

He urges that, as the Agra Estates Bill and the Agra Settled Estates Bill are at present under the consideration of the United Provinces Legislative Council, Kshattriyas and other landowners should elect to be their representatives on the Council men who will be able to protect their interests in spite of the opposition on the part of the representatives of the educated middle classes.

45. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 29th June), publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses gratification at the proposal of Mr. Abdul Hakim, a barrister of Patna, to publish an Urdu weekly named Al Mudabbir from that place, and urges the Muhammadans of Behar to make vigorous efforts for the propagation of Urdu in their province. He invites attention to the activities of the Nagri Pracharni Sabha, and reminds the Muhammadans of their duty towards the Urdu language.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 26th June 1912.

The drink habit in India.

46. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), deplores that the drink habit is steadily spreading in India, and points out that the increased consumption of liquor is due to the opening of distilleries and liquor shops in almost every part of the country.

The editor suggests that in order to discourage the evil Government should be asked to prohibit the opening of any new distilleries and liquor shops, that liquor should not be sold to persons of less than eighteen years of age and that temperance workers should carry on their propaganda more energetically.

ANAND, 27th June 1912.

Preventive measures against malaria.

47. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), expresses gratification that the United Provinces Government is doing all in its power to prevent any outbreak of malaria in the province, and suggests that the people should co-operate with Government in carrying out the preventive measures. The editor also suggests that quinine packets should be sold at a lower price so as to encourage their consumption among the ordinary people.

LEADER, 28th June 1912.

The Agra Hewett hospital.

48. A correspondent, who signs himself "I. A. SHAIL FROM AGRA," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th June 1912, in which he complains of the condition of the infectious hospital in the Agra Civil Lines, of the inadequacy of the staff of hospital servants, of the want of furniture and of proper medicines. He suggests that, in view of the fact that Europeans visit Agra in large numbers, the secretary of the municipal board should maintain the Hewett hospital in a thorough state of efficiency, and that, instead of the assistant health officer of the municipality, who has many other duties to perform, the Civil Surgeon or one of his many assistants should be placed in medical charge of the hospital.

Educated Indians and industrial development.

49. Referring to Sir Theodore Morison's speech on "Technical education in relation to Indian industrial development" delivered on the 15th May at the Indian Guild of Science and Technology in London, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 29th June 1912, invites attention to his suggestions that only young Indians of the highest ability should be sent abroad for technical education, that these young Indians should enter factories on lower pay than their European competitors and that Indians should take a considerable portion of shares in European companies working in India in order to acquire an influence in their management, and thus to secure the appointment of trained Indians as juniors in posts of control. The editor commends these suggestions, and urges Indians interested in the development of the resources of the country and in the making of posts available for young Indians, to act in accordance with them.

He warns his countrymen against the folly of putting inexperienced youths fresh from foreign countries at the head of concerns and thus bringing about their failure.

LEADER, 29th June 1912.

Industrial conferences in India.

50. Referring to Mr. A. Tellery's suggestion that the Indian Industrial Conference should be converted into a general Indian industrial association including provincial associations and district associations, the editor of the Leader (Allahabad), in the issue of the 29th June 1912, says that he has no faith in all-India associations in this country of vast distances, and points out that the Indian Industrial Conference, which has already provincial and district associations and committees affiliated to it at various places, could do much more work if there were a quicker response from the people appealed to for help and co-operation. He expresses regret that a general paralysis has come over all industrial enterprise for which there was so much enthusiasm a short time ago.

ADVOCATE, 4th July 1912.

Appointments in the Forest Department.

51. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th July 1912, says that Indians are already practically excluded from the Imperial Forest Service owing to the condition that candidates for recruitment must have passed with honours in some science degree examination in England. The editor refers to the new rules for recruitment to the Provincial Forest Service and he expresses apprehension that one of the effects of the new rules will be to provide a large number of appointments for Eurasians and Europeans at the cost of Indians.

V.—Legislation.

52. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 4th July), expresses surprise at the resolution passed by the Allahabad District Muslim League at a recent meeting supporting the resolution passed by the Tibbi Conference regarding the Bombay Medical Registration Act, and remarks that the Act does not in any way affect hakims and vaids. The editor questions the propriety of the Muslim League carrying on the agitation started by the Tibbi Conference, and observes that an institution which cannot understand even such simple matters cannot pretend to possess political wisdom and to comprehend intricate political problems.

TAFRIH, 28th June 1912.

The Bombay Medical Registration Act and the Muslim League.

53. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 2nd July 1912, says that, owing to pressing demand for land and also owing to the willingness of the landlord to let his land lie fallow for a year rather than give the tenant a chance of acquiring occupancy rights, the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act for the creation of occupancy rights have failed in achieving their object. The editor states that occupancy and ex-proprietary tenants are the greatest sufferers under the Act, in view of the fact that their power of sub-letting is considerably restricted and that transfers by mortgage are declared illegal and void. He invites attention to the inconvenience caused by the provision requiring that tenants, after sub-letting their land for a period not exceeding five years, should either resume possession of the land, sub-let for two years, or be liable to ejectment, and says that ignorance of this provision has led to mortgagees losing their money and mortgagors their land. He protests against the injustice of section 25, which enacts that a holding which may be of fifty or a hundred bighas is liable to be lost to the tenant by ejectment if even one biswa of it be sub-let in contravention of the above-mentioned provision. He urges the abolition of these provisions relating to occupancy holdings, on the ground that they have merely encouraged litigation.

VI.—Railway.

54. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 27th June 1912 (received on the 3rd July), refers to the incident reported in a recent issue of the Statesman (Calcutta), which was to the effect that eight soldiers entered a female compartment of the down passenger train at Chandernagore, which was occupied by an Indian female passenger, and did not leave it despite the protests of the station master and the railway police, and the editor asks Government to take steps to prevent such occurrences which are calculated to cause resentment among the people.

ANAND, 27th June 1912.

Indian female passengers in railway trains.

55. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 1st July 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer refers to the difficulties encountered by Hindi or Urdu-knowing traders in enquiring about the rates of freight at railway goods offices, and suggests that the railway goods tariff should be published in the vernaculars. He says that the railway authorities should inform traders who live at a distance from the railway station, either by post or otherwise, when their goods are unloaded in order that they may be able to take delivery at the earliest possible opportunity so that they may be saved from loss.

56. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun), for May 1912 (received on the 1st July), says that traffic in minor girls in Garhwal continues to be carried on and points out that, unless the public takes active interest in checking it the efforts of the local authorities and of the Maharaja of Tehri in this direction are not likely to be successful. The editor suggests that an association should be formed to help Government in punishing those who sell minor girls to strangers. Incidentally he also urges that the selling of cows and oxen to butchers should be penalized, and that people should be prevented from killing calves.

JAIN GAZETTE, 9th and 16th June 1912.

57. The Jain Gazette (Aligarh), of the 9th and 16th June 1912 (received on the 5th July), ascribes the failure of the various efforts of the Hindus for the protection of cows to the fact that they themselves continue eating the flesh of other animals and sacrificing them before their gods and goddesses.

The cow-protection movement.

The editor urges that the Hindus will not be able to persuade Muhammadans and Christians to give up beef-eating until they themselves refrain from slaughtering other animals either for the purpose of food or of sacrifice to their gods and goddesses.

In this connection he refers to a complaint made by the Bharat Mitra (Calcutta) about the sale of beef in the open market in Calcutta, and urges that the Hindus are not justified in objecting to this procedure so long as mutton is freely exposed for sale in public places.

AL MUSHIR, 25th June 1912.

58. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), takes exception to the remarks of Al Bashir (Etawah) (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 88), that the display of fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat creates martial spirit amongst the Muhammadans, and expresses surprise that the editor of Al Bashir, instead of having recourse to religious teachings for preserving the martial spirit amongst his co-religionists, should have recommended childish sports for the purpose. The editor says that the discharge of fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat is prohibited by Islam, and contends that it was their religious teachings which produced in them a martial spirit, and not the discharge of fireworks.

Fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 26th June 1912.

59. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 26th June 1912 (received on the 1st July), publishes a lengthy article entitled "The right method for the propagation of Islam" by Maulana Azad Subhani, Principal of the Madrasa-i-Illahiyat at Cawnpore, in which the writer laments the deplorable condition of Islam and the Muhammadans in India.

The propagation of Islam.

He complains that Muhammadans are being every day converted to Christianity and to the Arya faith, and that no efforts are being made by his co-religionists provide against the further conversion of Muhammadans to other religions. He suggests the formation of a central Islamic missionary society on the model of the Christian missionary societies.

He proposes that the missionaries to be appointed by the society should be examined by the Egyptian Ulamas, in order to test their capability, before they are entrusted with the work of the propagation of Islam, and that separate missionaries should be appointed for towns and for villages. He emphasizes the need for such missionaries to study foreign languages, and also to master the art of conducting religious discussion, and suggests the formation of a religious tract society amongst the Muhammadans, which would publish cheap religious books so that the poorest man in the community may be able to acquire to get religious knowledge.

In conclusion he states that the community urgently requires the services of a man of very strong character, who should be able to effect a complete reform in the social and religious life of the Muhammadans.

LEADER, 3rd July 1912.

60. Referring to the recent ruling of the Allahabad High Court that inter-caste marriages among Hindus were illegal as being opposed to custom, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 3rd July 1912, says that the decision involves real hardship, and observes that such restraints do not promote morality. The editor expresses the hope that some Hindu member of council will introduce a measure next year seeking for legislative sanction for inter-caste marriages.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Muslim Review (Allahabad), for May 1912 (received on the 24th June), has an article entitled "The strangling of Persia" by Mr. Sundara Raja in which the writer condemns the manner in which the attempts by the Persian nation to effect reforms were frustrated.

MUSLIM REVIEW, May 1912.

The situation in Persia.

In this connection he makes the following remarks:—

"Be that as it may, Persia is dead, and Sir Edward Grey has written the epitaph. 'Here lies an ancient nation annihilated by Russia with my seal and sanction.'"

He suggests that meetings might be held not to protest against the action of Russia but to record the moral condemnation.

He expresses the opinion that the downfall of Persia is valuable as giving a lesson to the people of Islam.

The downfall was due to the want of unity among Islamic nations, and he urges the latter to carefully consider the situation, to sink all party differences and set themselves to the task which should be before every true Muhammadan to propagate the gospel and secure the unity of the human race under the banner of Islam.

2. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 8th July), states that a Syrian scholar, named Amin Raihani, who has completed his education in America, has contributed an article entitled "The Muslim peril" to the May number of the Forum (New York). The article, it is stated, predicts that two hundred and fifty millions of Muhammadans will combine and proclaim a holy war against the European Powers, and that the Muslim armies at present under the control of the various European Powers (France, England, Germany and Russia) will rise against their European officers, and will engage in the jehad (holy war).

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 3rd July 1912.

The Muslim peril.

3. Discussing the rupture in the negotiations regarding the six-Power loan to China the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 7th July 1912, says that the Chinese have always proved themselves to be an astute people, and that if any Eastern nations have fully understood the character of Western nations, it is the Chinese and the Japanese. The editor observes that for a long time the foreigners have been trying to usurp China, and that several nations individually and collectively attacked it on various occasions and took possession of some of its outlying territories. The editor expresses gratification that they have not however been much successful in their attempts, because the Chinese extremely hate them and that China for the Chinese is their firm policy. He remarks that the foreigners cannot easily deceive Dr. Sun Yat Sen and other Chinese who have established the republic in China.

ABHYUDAYA, 7th July 1912.

4. A correspondent, who signs himself "Nazir Ahmad (Alig)," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 6th July), in which he refers to the article entitled "The future policy of the Muslim League" that appeared in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 8th May (vide Selections No. 20, paragraph 18), and remarks that the writer has given a wrong version of the true facts. He objects to the suggestion of the writer to elect members for the District Muslim Leagues by general elections, on the ground of the ignorance of the Muhammadan public and its apathy to take interest in national work, and expresses regret that the leaders of the Muhammadan community should be criticised by self-interested persons and by those who seek personal aggrandizement. He asks them to cease criticising the actions of the present leaders, who have rendered meritorious services to their community.

AL BASHIR, 25th June 1912.

The future policy of the Muhammadans.

5. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 6th July), publishes the manifesto issued by the president and secretaries of the Moradabad District Muslim League (vide Selections No. 27, paragraph 21), and lends its support to MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 1st July 1912.

Muhammadan representatives in the Legislative Council.

the candidature of Saiyid Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B., of Moradabad, for election to the United Provinces Legislative Council in case no better man may be available to represent the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st July 1912.

Muhammadan representatives in the Legislative Council.

6. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 10th July), lends its support to the candidature of the Hon'ble M. Asghar Ali Khan as against Saiyid Raza Ali, for election to the United Provinces Legislative Council, as the representative of the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions.

The editor says that the Hon'ble M. Asghar Ali Khan's wide experience, character, mature age and fervid patriotism fit him pre-eminently for the onerous task of representing the Muhammadan community.

LEADER, 6th July 1912.

Disqualifications for council memberships.

7. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th July 1912, takes exception to the disqualifications for council membership imposed by the Indian Councils Act of 1909, and invites attention to the injustice of holding dismissed government servants ineligible for election as members of councils even if they might have been dismissed wrongly or for an offence involving no moral turpitude. The editor goes on to say that the same question of moral turpitude again comes up in a case where a person is disqualified for having "been sentenced by a criminal court to imprisonment for an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, or to transportation," or for having "been ordered to find security for good behaviour," &c. With regard to the disqualification attaching to a person who "has been debarred from practising as a legal practitioner by order of any competent authority," he asserts that there have been cases of such debaring on the ground of real or alleged political offending. Referring to the proviso "that no person shall be eligible for election as a member of the council if such person has been declared (by the Governor General in Council, or Governor in Council or Lieutenant Governor) to be of such reputation and antecedents that his election would (in the opinion of the said authority) be contrary to the public interest," he says that this proviso is really the worst and most comprehensive of all. He asserts that many really deserving men are distrusted by some officers, seeing that the points of contact between public men and persons in authority are few and far between, with the result that misunderstandings of the aims and intentions and policy and character of the former on the part of the latter are very easy.

He expresses the opinion that even in the case of the most irresponsible men, association with Government produces a sobering effect on them, and that if the so-called extremists be admitted to participation in the affairs of Government through membership of councils they would be turned into useful and loyal citizens.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 3rd July 1912.

The British Government and the attitude of Muhammadan newspapers

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), expresses regret that some of the Muhammadan newspapers of the Punjab are opposed to the policy of carrying out any agitation against the actions of Government, and remarks that if the Muhammadans do not agitate in demanding their rights, Government will attach no value to their political importance.

The editor reproduces the criticisms of the editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the article published in the Chowdahween Sadi (Rawalpindi) with regard to the subject (vide Selections No. 27, paragraph 9), and expresses his agreement with it.

He adds that the subjects of a constitutional government like that of Great Britain cannot obtain their rights without having recourse to agitation.

SAHIFA, 5th July 1912.

The birthday honours.

9. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th July 1912 (received on the 10th July), refers to the refusal of the titles of Khan Sahib and Rai Bahadur by a vakil of Arrah and the editor of a Calcutta paper respectively, which were conferred upon them on the occasion of His Majesty's birthday, and remarks that the titles bestowed on them must have been below their worth and capability, as otherwise they would not have refused to accept them.

The editor says that the title of Khan Sahib or Khan Bahadur cannot be appreciated by a Muhammadan Saiyid, Sheikh or even by the public, and goes on to say that the title of Khan Sahib does not add to the dignity of a person who is & Khan by birth, and suggests that some other titles should be devised in lieu of Khan Sahib and Khan Bahadur.

Relations between the rulers and the ruled.

10. A correspondent writing in the Prem (Brindaban, Muttra), of the 5th July 1912, suggests as a means of improving relations between the rulers and the ruled that officials should mix freely with the people and take part in all their public activities. He says that it will give the rulers a good opportunity of understanding their character and expressing sympathy with their needs and aspirations.

PREM, 5th July 1912.

His Excellency Lord Hardinge's recall.

11. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th July 1912, has the following :—

LEADER, 6th July 1912.

"With the Madras Mail we shall be greatly astonished if there proves to be the least foundation for the rumour about Lord Hardinge given currency to by the Manchester Despatch. 'Even if it were desirable on other grounds, which it is not, the recall of the Viceroy would not commend itself to the Government for this reason, that it would be liable to construction as a concession to the severe criticism directed against the joint policy of the Government and the Government of India after the Delhi changes by the opposition in Parliament and the press in Calcutta.' We agree. And we shall regard the transfer of Lord Hardinge as a misfortune to our country, having regard to the character of His Lordship's régime."

Social and political reforms in India.

He says that when the Indians have not the rights of a British citizen in their own country, to say nothing of their ill-treatment in other parts of the British Empire, it is futile to expect any feeling of self-respect in them, and he observes that if Government has the real well-being of the Indians at heart it should create that ennobling feeling in them by granting them political rights gradually. He goes on to say that this line of conduct is the only best policy for Government to adopt, and that any other policy will be equally damaging to the interests of the rulers and the ruled. He deplores the recent statement of Lord Crewe on the future government of India, and remarks that the political regeneration of the Indians depends on their own efforts and the generosity of the British Government.

He says that if India will not be treated generously even when the Liberal party is in power, it will indeed be a bad day for her. As regards social reforms he says that Indians alone will have to carry them out as Government interference is likely to cause dissatisfaction among the masses, and that the only thing which Government should do in this connection is to spread education which will facilitate the work of social reformers to a considerable degree.

The presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress.

13. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 4th July 1912 (received on the 8th July), expresses disapproval of the nomination of the Hon'ble Mr. G. K. Gokhale for the presidentship of the coming session of the Indian National Congress, and insists that other leaders like the Hon'ble Mr. Mudholkar and the Hon'ble Mr. Basu should be given a chance to fill the presidential chair.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th July 1912.

The presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress.

14. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 9th July 1912, says that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has refused to accept the presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress, and suggests that some other member of Parliament, who may have sympathies with Indian aspirations, should be invited to preside at the next session of the Congress.

OUDH AKHBAR, 9th July 1912.

The editor says that if no member of Parliament be willing to accept the invitation some sympathetic European residing in India should be requested to preside.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

15. Referring to Lord Crewe's pronouncement about the political future of India, the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 10th July), asserts that British rule cannot continue permanently in India unless England treat India as an integral part of the Empire and repose implicit confidence in her. The editor says that the only way in which this confidence can be shown is by granting colonial self-government to India. He goes on to say that the time is not far distant when Indians will become the equals of Englishmen in intellectual, moral and physical qualities, and remarks that when that time comes India will have to be given self-government under British sovereignty. He contends that when the partition of Bengal was annulled after the Bengalis committed anarchist outrages and boycotted British goods there is no reason why Lord Crewe's pronouncement about the political future of India should be treated as a settled fact.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 3rd July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

16. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 8th July), refers to the statement made by Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy, and remarks that even if Lord Crewe's interpretation of the sentence in the Government of India despatch be right, there is no reason why the Government should not fulfill the desire of Indians. The editor expresses the opinion that it is not wise to ignore the hopes and expectations which have been created by the reform scheme in India for which the names of Lord Minto and Lord Morley will ever be gratefully remembered in India. He asserts that such treatment of the promises made by responsible officers of Government would create want of confidence in the declarations of Government. He urges Indians not to withdraw their claims for home rule only because there is serious difference of opinion among the high officers of Government in respect of the interpretation of a clause in the despatch. He says that now that there is no such thing as a settled fact Lord Crewe's words will not bind his successors.

COSMOPOLITAN, 7th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

17. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 7th July 1912, remarks that the keen disappointment displayed by Indians at Lord Crewe's pronouncement about the political future of India during the debate on the Government of India Bill in the House of Lords, is uncalled for.

The editor classifies the British rulers of India into two classes, and says that they consist of the small minority actuated by altruistic, and the great majority by ordinary work-a-day motives. He states that while the former look at India from the standpoint of Queen Victoria's Proclamation and want her to stand on her own legs, the latter desire that India shall never be freed from the leading strings of England.

He asserts that neither of these two sections of the British rulers of India can make or mar the future of the country which lies entirely in the hands of Indians. He lays stress on the need for selfless leaders, who will rise above personal and party considerations, and strive manfully for the progress of the country, and expresses the hope that with the help of their British rulers Indians will soon become worthy of the citizenship of the Empire.

The Calcutta High Court.

18. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 7th July 1912, deprecates the action of a section of the press in India which is utilizing the Privy Council judgment in the Mymensingh case to disparage the Calcutta High Court.

The editor expresses satisfaction that on the jubilee of the Calcutta High Court on the 2nd July 1912, the Chief Justice received numerous telegrams conveying expressions of unbounded confidence from people of every class. He asserts that public confidence in the premier tribunal of the Indian Empire is an invaluable asset, and insists that a consideration for the prestige of the executive should not be permitted to impair the independence and integrity of the highest judiciary in the land.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th July 1912, refers to the jubilee of the Calcutta High Court and recapitulates its history. The editor says that the numerous letters received by the Chief Justice on this occasion demonstrate that the Calcutta High Court enjoys the unstinted confidence of the Indian public for ability, independence and impartiality. He asserts that during the troublous times following after the partition, the High Court protected the weak and the oppressed against executive oppression and high-handedness, and by its evenhanded justice contributed greatly to the subsidence of unrest in India. He expresses the opinion that this determination of the Calcutta High Court not to be swayed by executive influence in arriving at its decision in political trials has offended people like Sir J. D. Rees, who seek to justify the arbitrary and irresponsible acts of executive officers.

The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th July 1912, expresses gratification at the appointment of Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, Rai Bahadur, who is described as a capable and independent judge and an erudite lawyer, as Second Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and remarks that Sir John Hewett is entitled to the public gratitude for appointing Indians as Judges in the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 4th July 1912 (received on the 8th July), says that the reason why people are not inclined to help the police by giving true evidence, is that they are afraid to incur the displeasure of the police in case their evidence differed in any way from the police version. The editor states that the public also will create enemies among the parties to the case if their evidence be calculated to injure their interests. In support of his contention, he mentions the case of Babu Surendra Nath Roy, station master, Hajiganj (Assam-Bengal Railway), who has been dismissed from service for giving true evidence against Guard Gomes in the Chandpur outrage case.

remarks of the Pioneer (Allahabad) which asserted that Indian teachers were "not fitted by training or tradition to conduct an essentially European or Western system of education," and states that Indians who have received a European training have certainly not proved themselves inferior to their European confreres in the service. He insists that the ablest and most learned teachers should be appointed without any considerations as to whether they are Europeans or Indians. He says that for secondary education Indian teachers are, as a rule, better fitted than Europeans, on account of their intimate knowledge of the pupils. He emphasizes the necessity for enlisting the services of the best available men, and suggests that the prospects of the educational service should be improved. He urges the Government to rid the educational service of European Professors of overbearing and insolent demeanour.

With regard to school buildings, he questions the advisability of having expensive buildings which the country cannot afford, and says that the climate of India permits of schools in the open air or in cheap sheds.

HINDUSTANI, 5th July 1912.

25. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th July 1912 (received on the 6th July), publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the system of holding examinations for the fifth standard in vernacular schools a month and a half before the summer vacations. He says that the examinees remain idle and neglect their studies in the interval between the examination and the publication of the result, and urges that the examination should be held in the beginning of the month of May, and that the vernacular schools should be closed for summer vacation after the result has been announced.

The Vernacular Middle Examination.

He also objects to the fact that the head masters of vernacular schools have been given absolute power to select students for promotion in the vernacular middle class, and complains that they generally promote backward students on recommendations, with the result that it leads to a large number of failures in the departmental vernacular middle examination.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and urges the introduction of the old system when competitive examination of the fifth standard used to be held in every circle and the deputy inspectors of schools used to decide the results.

PREM, 5th July 1912.

26. The Prem (Brindaban, Muttra), of the 5th July 1912 (received on the 10th July), expresses gratification at the visit paid by the Maharaja of Darbhanga to the Aligarh College in response to an invitation by its authorities, and remarks that it shows that the leaders of both the Hindu and Muhammadan communities appreciate the need for co-operation in the diffusion of education for the good of the country. The editor suggests that to perpetuate this improvement in the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, the proposed denominational universities should be amalgamated, and that if this be impracticable theological classes should be opened in the two universities to teach Muhammadan religion to Hindus and the Hindu religion to Muhammadans.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim universities.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th July 1912.

27. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th July 1912, takes exception to the raising of school fees, the restriction in the number of students to be admitted to each class and to the setting of stiff papers in the University examinations, and observes that such restrictions imposed by the educational authorities and the University are being viewed by the public as means adopted by Government to check the growth of higher education amongst the Indians.

The new rules regarding school fees.

The editor urges that the recent circular issued by the Director of Public Instruction in connection with the raising of school fees should be withdrawn, in that it would otherwise be impossible for middle and lower middle class people to give school education to their children.

He invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to the matter, and expresses the hope that he will show consideration for the popular desire by having the circular about fees cancelled.

AL BASHIR, 25th June 1912.

28. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th June 1912 (received on the 6th July), refers to the nomination of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and expresses the hope that he will be unanimously elected by the trustees.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

The editor says that Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan belongs to a very ancient and noble family, that he is very courteous and orthodox and that he has discharged his high official duties to the entire satisfaction of Government and the public. He expresses the hope that as secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, Mr. Ishaq Khan will perform his duties as efficiently as he did in his official capacity.

29. A correspondent, who signs himself "ABDUL WADOOD FROM BAREILLY," contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), in which he objects to the appointment of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan as secretary to the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, on the ground that so far he has taken no active part in any of the national movements and that he is weak-minded.

30. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th July 1912 (received on the 10th July), urges Nawab Mushtaq Husain to continue in his post as secretary to the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, as long as he is spared, and objects to the appointment of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan to the post on two grounds. The editor says that Mr. Ishaq Khan's early retirement from government service will cause pecuniary loss to him, and that his acceptance of the post of secretary will be viewed by the public as a means of self-aggrandizement rather than self-sacrifice. He suggests that since Nawab Mushtaq Husain has now grown too old to discharge his duties singly, the Joint Secretary should be entrusted with the work of the secretary and should consult him in important matters, and observes that there is no need of appointing a new secretary during the lifetime of the Nawab.

32. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for May and June 1912, has an article by Mr. K. S. Venkataramani entitled "A long-drawn battle," in which the writer refers to the increase of the drink habit in India. He notes that the abkari administration of the country has been subjected, during recent years, to unsparing criticism but without effect. "In the cabinned area of red tape and revenue the higher and more pressing interests of humanity appear to be ignored. The fundamental principles that alone justify the existence of this department are given the go-by and in searching after immediate gain 'a grave national danger' is precipitated. There prevails, at least for all practical purposes, a deplorable critical daltonism about the main purpose of the department." He says that the principle is freely enunciated in the Councils, but that the requirements of the budget demand secret connivance on the part of the officials of the Excise Department.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, May and June 1912.

He asserts that the very efficiency and the organization of the department have given it a sort of effective advertisement, and closes with an appeal to Government to help Indians to avert the approach of a national disaster.

RAHBAR, 28th June 1912.

Juvenile prisoners and the Punjab Government.

33. Referring to the committee appointed by the Punjab Government to devise means for the improvement of the condition of juvenile prisoners, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 6th July), expresses regret that the rules prepared by the committee are to the effect that juvenile prisoners will be required to live in the Salvation Army colony. The editor protests against this departure from the policy of religious neutrality hitherto professed by Government, and insists that Hindu and Muhammadan juvenile prisoners should be brought up under the control of charitable institutions of their own religion and not under the supervision of a Christian organization like the Salvation Army.

He states that Government pays about fifty lakhs of rupees to Christian missionaries, while it does not give anything to any Hindu or Muhammadan religious organization, and urges that Hindus and Muhammadans should make united efforts to induce Government to abandon its policy of preferential treatment towards Christian bodies.

Juvenile prisoners and the Punjab Government.

34. Referring to the committee formed under the orders of the Punjab Government to frame rules for the training of juvenile prisoners and its suggestion to set them free on condition that they promise to settle in the Salvation Army colony, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 2nd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), remarks that the training under the management of the Salvation Army will induce the prisoners to change their religion.

The editor says that if Government be desirous of reforming juvenile prisoners it should put them under the custody of the leaders of their respective communities, or under the supervision of such societies as may be able to produce wholesome effects on them.

He urges Government to ask the Hindus and Muhammadans to start societies like the Salvation Army, and to help them in the same way as it has helped the latter.

He also urges his countrymen to ask the help of Government in organizing societies reforming juvenile prisoners.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 3rd July 1912.

Juvenile prisoners and the Punjab Government.

35. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), refers to the suggestion of the committee formed under the orders of the Punjab Government to frame rules for the training of juvenile prisoners that these prisoners should be released from the jails on condition that they promise to settle in the Salvation Army colony at Jail Road, and remarks that prisoners will prefer the freedom of living in the colony to their prison life, with the result that they will be easily induced to adopt Christianity.

The editor asks the people of the Punjab to move Government in the matter, and warns them of the danger of the absorption of a large number of their co-religionists in Christianity.

He expresses apprehension that the proposal might be adopted in other provinces also, and urges his countrymen to apprise Government of their opinion on the subject early.

He says that Government has always been neutral in religious matters, and that, if these proposals be adopted, it will afford the public an opportunity to say that Government supports Christianity, with the result that it will produce undesirable effect on Government. He asks Government to disapprove the suggestions made by clergymen, and expresses the hope that the Punjab Government will reconsider its decision on the subject, seeing that it is likely to wound the religious feelings of both the Hindus and Muhammadans.

RAHBAR, 28th June 1912.

Prevention of crime.

36. A correspondent, who signs himself "UMRAO SINGH OF AMBALA," contributes an article to the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th June 1912 (received on the 6th July), in which he refers to the suggestion that part of the proceeds realized out of the sale of jail manufactures should be deposited in the name of each prisoner, and should be utilized to give a start in life to the prisoner when he is released from jail after having served out his sentence, and says that, instead of making suggestions, the Indian leaders should themselves devise means to prevent the increase of crime in the country. He attributes the increase in crime to lack of education, unemployment and poverty of the people, and asserts that the present system of education has demoralized Indians and is, by increasing their wants, leading them to commit crimes in order to satisfy those wants.

He urges that Hindus should take the education of their children into their own hands, and should so reform the system as to produce good and virtuous citizens.

37. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 8th July), suggests, as a means of checking crime in the country, the desirability of all criminal laws being translated in simple language in the vernaculars of the country and steps being taken to make the people acquainted with them. The editor remarks that a knowledge of the various sentences of punishment for different offences will serve as an effective deterrent to the commission of crime.

as such was less than it was in 1906-7, and that the increases in the intervening years were due only to the revision of records. The editor says that the observations of the Board of Revenue go to show that the provisions for ensuring permanency of tenure have after all not fulfilled the purpose for which they were framed, and he invites attention to the report of 1906-7 in which the Board observed that "the law has been ineffective to prevent or even check ejectments by means of the provisions requiring complete dispossession of a tenant for a year."

He takes exception to the importance attached in the reports to the protection afforded by the Act and to the growth of "protected area," and points out that the protected areas formed by long leases do not at all better the position of tenants, as contemplated by the Act, or restrict the powers of the landlord to secure the best terms for his land.

He says that even under the old Rent Act an occupation of twelve years or more of a non-occupancy holding conferred the right of occupancy, and says that if the area of such holdings has increased, very little of it is due to the special provisions of the present Act. He expresses regret that instead of effecting any improvement in the condition of tenants the Act has increased ruinous litigation, with the result that it has impoverished both tenants and landlords.

45. A correspondent, who signs himself "Chandra Mohan Seth from Benares," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 6th July 1912, in which he invites the attention of the authorities to the unsatisfactory condition of the management of the Benares Dufferin bridge. He states that vehicles are unnecessarily delayed by the officials in charge of the bridge gate who are said to demand an unauthorized toll of one anna per oxen.

ADVOCATE, 7th July 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

46. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th July 1912, expresses agreement with the protest of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce against the amalgamation of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, but disapproves of the Chamber's counter-proposal for its amalgamation with the East Indian Railway.

The editor protests against the manner in which the Railway Board is treating the question as a purely railway concern, and insists that the United Provinces Government and the people of the province, who are the parties most interested in the matter rather than the traders of Bombay or Calcutta, should be consulted. He attributes the lower earnings per mile and the larger percentage of working expenses on earnings of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the absence of coal fields, jute mills, rush of passengers and of any considerable trade except that of export, and he suggests that rolling stock and the comforts of passengers should be increased in order to increase the income from the pilgrim traffic on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

He urges that in case it be found advisable to withdraw State management from the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, instead of making it over to the East Indian Railway, which has its head quarters at Calcutta, a new company should be formed to develop the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway on the lines of the East Indian Railway.

With regard to the Chamber's contention that the amalgamation would permit of the empty waggons, which have to go back from Agra to Calcutta, being collected at Lucknow and used for the downward journey, he suggests that the Railway Board should induce the East Indian Railway to cease to obstruct the entrance of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway at Agra and to allow the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway entry into the port of Calcutta.

He reiterates his protest against the amalgamation, on the ground that the interests of the people of these provinces would suffer greatly. He says that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, which is a State railway, is a large employer of labour and supports hundreds of families in these provinces, and states that their interests are bound to suffer by the transfer of head quarters from Lucknow to Calcutta. He says that the United Provinces have trade connections with Bombay and Karachi, and that it would be unfair to give the East Indian Railway the exclusive right of handling the traffic of the province in the interests of the traders of Calcutta.

The editor urges that the swami should be dismissed from the Mahamandal if the allegations made against his moral character be true. He observes that the Mahamandal has lately been conducting its work very irregularly, and urges the urgent necessity for reforms being effected in its constitution in order to improve its administration.

He says that the approval of Mr. Basu's bill by the Arya Samajists clearly indicates that the teaching of the Satyarth Prakash does not meet adequately with their present requirements, and that they feel obliged to have recourse to legislation to reform their social customs. He expresses satisfaction that the Arya Samajists, who condemned the divorce system obtaining amongst the Muhammadans, are now compelled by circumstances to approve of Mr. Basu's bill which allows divorce.

49. A correspondent, who signs himself "Pandit Vidyaratna Marashar, head master, Arya Middle School, Pathankot," contributes an article to the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th June 1912, in which he deplores the bitter feeling existing among different sects of the Hindus, and suggests that they should all combine to reform the evils of drinking, meat-eating and prostitution. He says that, instead of criticising each other, the different Hindu sects should reform their respective followers.

He invites attention to the religious unity of Muhammadans, and appeals to Hindus not to sacrifice their religious unity to petty sectarian differences.

He recommends inter-provincial marriages as a means of promoting national unity, and proposes to establish a Hindu Reform Union, which will enlist volunteers and prepare them to preach social reform and national unity throughout the country.

He states that the volunteers will have to pay an annual subscription of Rs. 3, and that the funds thus realized will be utilized for the publication of tracts advocating social reform. He goes on to say that a monthly journal, entitled the Hindu Sewak, will be issued on the important festival days of the different Hindu sects, and will preach toleration and unity among Hindus.

He appeals to Hindus to send in their names for volunteer work, and expresses the hope that at any rate five hundred Hindus will be found willing to carry on the work throughout the country.

Social and religious reform among Hindus.

50. In the course of an article contributed to the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 8th July), one Krishna Gopal Sharma refers to an article which appeared in the Brahman Sarvaswa for April 1912 over the signature of Narayan Singh, vakil of Amritsar, describing the Arya Samajists to be atheists for not believing in the shradh ceremony (offering of cakes to manes), and remarks as follows :—

"When Brahmans say that if you will feed them, the food will go to your dead ancestor, you should consider that what you will feed the pandit upon will be converted into blood and semen in his stomach and that the refuse will be passed out in the form of nightsoil. That only can go to your ancestor and nothing else.

Another point to be borne in mind in this connection is to consider in what form your ancestor has taken his re-birth. If God has given him the form of a pig, according to the law of Karma, the pandit should be given to eat in the shradh what is the most delicious food to that animal."

The Arya Samaj and the conversion of persons of undesirable antecedents.

51. A correspondent, who signs himself "RAM CHANDRA DAS, JAIN, MEMBER OF THE Jain Sabha, GADHI ABDULLAH KHAN," contributes an article to the Jain Prachárak (Deoband, Saharanpur), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 10th July), in which he asserts that, in order to increase their number, the Arya Samajists convert all sorts of persons irrespective of their undesirable antecedents.

He states that the Arya Samajists have converted a Khatri of Gadhi Abdullah Khan, who had illicit connection with a married woman, and remarks as follows:—

"Whenever any person has illicit connection with a woman and finds that the woman is pregnant and that miscarriage is impossible, he should immediately apply to the local Arya Samaj to have the punasavana ceremony (performed in the third month of gestation and before the period of quickening) performed, and should get a certificate of shuddhi (purification).

Now, I proclaim this good news to all my brethren who have a bad public reputation on account of their illicit connection with prostitutes or other women, or experience difficulty in controlling their carnal passions in an unmarried state, that they should deposit something in the marriage insurance fund of the followers of Swami Dayanand, and should become Dayanandis either a few days before or after their mistresses become pregnant. Then all their faults would be pardoned, and according to their choice they would be either married or would be permitted to lead a free life without the restraint of marriage until the time that their mistresses become pregnant and would then be purified by the punasavana ceremony.

Those persons who let go this unique opportunity even now would be very unfortunate, seeing that such an opportunity is not always to be found. Some people had expressed disappointment at the rejection of the Hon'ble Mr. Basu's bill, but it is a matter for congratulation that the action of the Dayanandis has obviated the necessity for any such legislation."

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 2nd July 1912.

A complaint about the panda of the Vishwa Nath temple at Benares.

52. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 2nd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), complains of the treatment of the panda of the Vishwa Nath temple at Benares towards the visitors to the temple, stating that he has employed Ahirs to be guardians of the idol who sometimes beat the worshippers who do not offer anything in cash at the temple. The editor says that once Pandit Ganga Dhar Shastri, C.I.E., got hurt as an Ahir attempted to beat a worshipper near him, and that on another occasion the panda refused to allow an agent of Rajendra Singh, a taluqdar of the Sitapur district, to perform the abhishik ceremony (pouring of water in a prescribed manner on the idol) in the temple unless he paid Rs. 50 as fee for it.

He says that the Ahir guardians of the temple take possession of lotas which happen to fall on the ground from the hands of worshippers. He invites the attention of the District Magistrate and the Local Government to the matter, and expresses the hope that steps will be immediately taken to ensure a better management in this place of public worship.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 3rd July 1912.

The Pilibhit Arya Samaj.

53. Lala Munshi Ram writing in the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), refers to the order of Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector of Pilibhit, requiring five office holders of the local Arya Samaj to execute security bonds to keep the public peace on the occasion of its anniversary celebrations, and expresses the opinion that all Arya Samajists should pass a resolution expressing regret at this partial and objectionable proceeding of the deputy collector and send a copy of the resolution to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of these provinces. He says that if there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace on the part of Muhammadans they should also have been bound down with the members of the Arya Samaj to keep the peace. Munshi Ram appeals to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to express his disapproval of the proceeding, after having an independent enquiry made into it, so that it may not cast any discredit on the established reputation of the British Government for its sense of justice.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 3rd July 1912.

The Hon'ble Mirza Abbas Ali Beg on the Muslim parda system and plurality of wives.

54. Referring to the speech on "The Muslim parda system and plurality of wives," delivered by the Hon'ble Mirza Abbas Ali Beg at the Indian National Association (London) on the 3rd June, the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 8th July), asserts that the Hon'ble Mirza was quite mistaken in attributing the ill-health and ignorance of Muslim women to the parda system and in saying that parda was not enjoined by the Qoran. The editor invites attention to a recent Fatwah of the Sheikh-ul-Islam of Constantinople which strictly enjoins parda on all Muslim women. He expresses the opinion that the abolition of parda will prove highly detrimental to the interests of Indian Muslim women.

With regard to the Hon'ble Mirza's strictures on the system of polygamy prevalent among the Hindus and Muhammadans of India, he states that polygamy under certain reasonable restrictions is permitted by Islam, and says that any condemnation of it is an affront to Islam.

Evils of sacrifices.

55. A correspondent, who signs himself "D. SAKVALEKAR," contributes an article to the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 3rd July 1912 (received on the 6th July), in which he points out that, unlike the followers of the Vedic religion who had introduced beneficial sacrifices, the Shaktas introduced sacrifices, which caused outbreaks of disease in the country, and he specifies the materials which were thrown into fire in such sacrifices and the flesh of various animals. SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 3rd July 1912.

He says that meat, when cooked, contaminates the atmosphere and is therefore one of the chief causes of the outbreak of various diseases in the country at the present day. He suggests that in order to undermine this source of disease endeavours should be made to persuade the people to give up meat-eating and become vegetarians.

The alleged conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity at Benares.

56. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 4th July 1912 (received on the 10th July), refers to the alleged conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity by a missionary lady doctor at Benares, and remarks that Christian missionaries having failed to convert people in large numbers by persuasion are now having recourse to compulsion. AL MUSHIR, 4th July 1912.

The editor takes exception to the fact that when a complaint was made to the District Magistrate of Benares of the alleged forced conversion of the girl by her guardian no step was taken by that officer to rescue the girl from the custody of the lady doctor, and observes that if government officials will thus help the propagation of Christianity other religions in India will be soon destroyed.

He enquires whether in these circumstances Government is justified in declaring itself neutral in religious matters, and expresses the hope that Government will show due consideration for the religious susceptibilities of the Indians, and will check the forcible conversion to Christianity, as otherwise there is every likelihood that the religious spirit of the people will be inflamed, with the result that the relations between the rulers and the ruled will become strained.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Afghan money-lenders in Dehra Dun.

57. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun), of the 7th July 1912, complains that the Afghan money-lenders who have settled in Dehra Dun charge usurious rates of interest from ignorant and poor people and even use force in carrying on their trade. The editor says that as the Afghans employ a paid scribe of their own to write the pronotes, there is every facility for making subsequent additions and alterations in them. COSMOPOLITAN, 7th July 1912.

He states that the Afghans sometimes induce a friend of the borrower to sign the pronote as a witness and afterwards sue him as a joint debtor. He suggests that Government should institute a searching enquiry into the matter.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), expresses regret that the Muhammadans of India have slackened their boycott of Italian goods, and urges the ulamas and mashaikhs to preach vigorous boycott of Italian goods to their followers. The editor suggests that the Muhammadans should be reminded of the fact daily at prayer times in mosques, and urges his co-religionists to discard the Turkish fez made in Italy. He asks them to buy English—made caps and, in case this be not possible, to buy only those made in Austria and Germany.

AL BASHIR, 9th July 1912.

The boycott of Italian goods.

2. Referring to the proceedings of a meeting of Calcutta Muhammadans, held on the 14th June 1912, at which resolutions were passed urging the boycott of Russian goods and the despatch of Indian Muhammadan volunteers to Persia and Tripoli, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), says that Government should permit the volunteers to proceed to Persia and Tripoli. The editor admits that England is allied to Russia by the Anglo-Russian convention, but states that the conduct of Russia in Persia has now become so irresponsible that England should either chastise Russia herself or allow her Muhammadan subjects to protect their holy places from Russian desecration and spoliation.

MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers to Persia and Tripoli and the boycott of Russian goods.

With regard to Tripoli, he says that there is no such difficulty seeing that England is neutral and can allow her Muhammadan subjects to proceed as volunteers to that region. He however expresses doubt as to whether the boycott of Russian goods or the despatch of volunteers will be beneficial. He says that the Muhammadans of India are very poor, and have little knowledge of the art of warfare and that they will find it very difficult to cross the seas in order to reach Tripoli.

3. Referring to the resolutions passed at a meeting of Calcutta Muhammadans, held on the 14th June, recommending the boycott of Russian goods and the despatch of Indian Muhammadan volunteers to Persia and Tripoli, the Darbar (Agra), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), says that though it is easy to boycott Russian goods, it is difficult to collect sufficient subscriptions for sending volunteers.

DARBAR, 9th July 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers to Persia and Tripoli and the boycott of Russian goods.

The editor says that the British Government has shown every sympathy for the feelings of Indian Muhammadans during the recent events in Tripoli and Persia, and that the Muhammadans should prove that they are fit to serve as volunteers and should collect sufficient subscriptions before they request Government to permit them to proceed to Persia and Tripoli.

4. Referring to a rumour that Italy, Austria, Russia and Germany are planning a simultaneous attack on certain Turkish possessions, the Medina (Bijnor), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), says that this plan must have been thought out at the beginning of hostilities between Italy and Turkey.

MEDINA, 8th July 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

The editor expresses gratification that the British Government has not been a party to this conspiracy.

He deplores the naval weakness of Turkey, and remarks that the deposition of Sultan Abdul Hamid and the introduction of a parliamentary system of government in which non-Muslims and inexperienced politicians were included has proved disastrous to the interests of the Turkish empire.

He invites attention to the bravery of Muslim volunteers in Tripoli, and reminds Europe that the Sultan of Turkey is the guardian of the holy places of Islam, and that Muhammadans all over the world will shed their last drop of blood to protect their holy places. He asks the European Powers to follow the policy adopted by the British Government which practises strict neutrality and tolerance in religious matters.

5. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), has the following :—

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

The Turkish relief fund.

"The students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, opened a subscription list at the very beginning of hostilities between Italy and Turkey for the relief of the widows and orphans of the sufferers in the war. Purely out of Islamic zeal and sympathy they contributed considerably to the fund by curtailing their private expenses and by selling the furniture of their rooms. Many of the students (who were fond of fashionable dress) kept (for their own use) a few suits of ordinary clothes, and presented their fine dresses to the fund.

A sale of the clothes fetched hundreds of rupees for the fund. Besides, the students determined to abstain totally from eating zarda, biryani and firinee (different rich dishes) which were given to them every week in addition to ordinary food, as long as the war lasted, in order to contribute the saving thus caused to the Turkish relief fund.

The students have very cheerfully conformed to this arrangement up to this time.

Rupees six thousand and five hundred were remitted to Constantinople up to May 1912 through the Principal of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and that formal printed receipts for the first and second instalments have been received.

The third instalment has only recently been sent.

The students of the college, after the evening prayers on the 6th July, have decided to make cash collections for the relief fund, and have resolved that the successful students at the last University examination, who have rejoined the college, instead of entertaining their friends, should contribute the money thus saved to the relief fund.

They have also decided to travel in the third instead of in the intermediate class when going home for the long vacation, and to give the amount thus saved to the fund.

The students have begun to realize subscriptions for the fund, and it is hoped that a good sum will be realized in this week."

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

6. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), publishes the translation of the appeal made by Mr. C. F. Dixon-Johnson, Director of the British Red Crescent Mission to Tripoli, to the British public for the relief of the Turk and Arab sufferers in the Italian-Turkish war, and urges the Indian Muhammadans to contribute their mite to the Turkish relief fund.

The Turkish relief fund.

The editor says that the Italian-Turkish war is not only a war between the Turks and the Italians, but that it is a war between the whole Muslim world and Italy, and remarks that if the Turks lose however slightly in it, the prestige of the entire Muslim world will be lowered.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

7. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), refers to Amin Raihani's article entitled "The Muslim Peril" contributed to the Forum (New York) (vide Selections No. 28, paragraph 2), and remarks that Amin Raihani is mistaken in thinking that the armies of the European Powers consisting of Muhammadans would obey the dictates of any Sheikh-ul-Islam and would join in a general war of independence (jehad) against the European nations.

The Muslim peril.

The editor says that Indian Muhammadans are absolutely loyal, and urges the British Government to promote their loyalty by respecting the religious and political feelings of its Muhammadan subjects. He admits that Russian and Italian goods are being boycotted by Muhammadans, and remarks that though the Muhammadan feeling against Italy and Russia may not take the form of a jehad (holy war) it is fraught with danger to the European Powers.

He suggests that France and Italy should withdraw their forces from Morocco and Tripoli respectively in order to avert a general rising of African Muhammadans.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), reproduces an article from the Hablul Matin (Calcutta) in which it was said that the desecration of Meshed and the Italian aggression in Tripoli had deeply wounded the feelings of Muhammadans, and that the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans towards the British Government would be impaired in case their desires were not satisfied. The editor expresses the opinion that Government should as far as possible try to assuage the feelings of Muhammadans by practical means and not by means of empty words. He says that the British Government should demonstrate that it sympathizes with the religious and political aspirations of Muhammadans.

(b)—Home.

9. The Bhaskar (Meerut), for May 1912 (received on the 12th July), publishes a short story entitled "Ramadevi" over the signature of one Piare Lal, Tiwari, in which the following forms part of a lecture delivered by a teacher to his pupils :— BHASKAR, May 1912.

The regeneration of India.

"The first claims are those of the motherland, which is superior even to the actual mother, for whereas the mother keeps the child within her womb for only nine or ten months, the earth supports him on its bosom for the whole of his life and lovingly keeps him in its lap even after death. The country addresses them 'O youths, my honour is in your hands; exert yourselves in such a way that I may not be trampled down by anyone, that all the people inhabiting me may pass their lives happily without oppressing one another. Destroy the oppressors. You are powerful. All my hopes rest on you. Take steps to relieve the distress of weak, helpless and disabled persons who depend upon you as their only means of support. Improve the condition of the helpless people who come to you for help. Know your rights and protect them. Enhance your respect and honour.' In other words take care that your country is not outstripped by other countries making wonderful progress, and adopt all those measures which are calculated to add to the wealth and knowledge of the country."

10. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), suggests that in order to secure greater efficiency in the work of administration the whole country should be divided into large presidencies, each having a number of provinces under it. MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

Administration of India.

The editor says that each presidency should be administered by a Governor with legislative powers, while the provinces under it should be governed by Lieutenant Governors or Chief Commissioners who will look into purely local matters and will thus be able to safeguard the special interests of the different communities. He also suggests that the Governors should be made responsible for relations with native states and that a prince of Royal blood should be appointed as the Viceroy of India. He says that this scheme of provincial autonomy will make it possible for the Viceroy to devote greater attention to foreign affairs. He states that as all legislative work will be done by the Legislative Councils at the head quarters of the presidencies, the Provincial Legislative Councils will have to devote themselves to purely local matters and the Lieutenant Governors and Chief Commissioners will thus be relieved of the most irksome part of their duties, and will be able to devote more time to other useful work.

11. Referring to Lord Crewe's pronouncement about Indian autonomy, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), contends that when the partition of Bengal has been revoked, there is no reason why, if persistent efforts be made, Lord Crewe's decision about the future of colonial self-government in India should not be reversed. The editor expresses regret that the Hindus and Muhammadans distrust each other, and urges Indians to make themselves fit for self-government. He appeals to Indians to carry on their agitation for colonial self-government with renewed spirit, and says that their efforts will be crowned with success. RAHBAR, 7th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

12. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), refers to Lord Crewe's statement in the House of Lords on Indian autonomy, and remarks that if the statement had been made by His Lordship in his private capacity it would not have caused such widespread disappointment amongst the Indian public. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

The editor says that the statement of Lord Crewe was quite inopportune, and that he should have only stated that for the present Indians were not fit for self-government.

He goes on to say that His Lordship by his statement not only under-estimated the intellectual capacity of the Indians, but has also cast a slur on the fair name of England for the uplifting of backward races.

He states that Indians are desirous of getting self-government, though they are not fitted at present for the task.

He says that Indians do not demand self-government for the present, but that they wish to be afforded opportunities to get themselves trained for it.

He adds that it is not very difficult for the Indians to get self-government, seeing that they have managed to secure local self-government and the reformed councils.

He says that the goal is still far off, and urges his countrymen to be firm in their determination, seeing that English politicians and statesmen are divided amongst themselves with regard to the question, and quotes a passage from the speech of Mr. Montagu, delivered at Cambridge, in which he is said to have stated that the British policy was to create several autonomous governments under the supervision of the Government of India.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 10th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

13. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), says that the recent pronouncement of Lord Crewe regarding Indian autonomy has caused disappointment among a section of Indians, and remarks that there is no reason why they should be overwhelmed with despair. The editor observes that it was foolish on their part to have formed extravagant hopes over an ambiguous passage of the Government of India despatch, and that they would disclose utter want of moral courage in them if they were to give up their political struggle on Lord Crewe's statement. He urges that they should do all in their power to improve the social, religious and material condition of the country by all legitimate and constitutional means, bearing in mind that its destiny was in the hands of God, the ruler of all rulers.

OUDH AKHBAR, 10th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

14. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), refers to Lord Crewe's statement regarding Indian autonomy during the debate on the Government of India Bill in the House of Lords, and expresses regret that the statement has frustrated all hopes of the Indians about the possibility of getting a form of government for India analogous to that of Australia and Canada. The editor enquires whether the Government of India's despatch was purposely written in equivocal terms on which different interpretations might be put.

He says that the pronouncement of the Secretary of State for India might damp the spirit of the supporters of the Indian National Congress, but observes that sincere workers in the national cause are never despondent.

He goes on to say that even great men often change their views, and that it is quite possible for Lord Crewe to change his views hereafter.

He expresses the hope that Lord Crewe's statement will be disapproved by Liberals and Englishmen who sympathize with Indian aspirations, and that Congressmen will not lose heart and relax their efforts to attain their goal.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

15. Referring to Lord Crewe's pronouncement about Indian autonomy, the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), expresses regret that Lord Crewe has shown his weakness by going back on the promise held out in the Government of India's despatch of August 25. The editor says that the permanency of British rule in India depends on the trust reposed in Indians by their rulers, and says that the British Government cannot better demonstrate their faith than by granting self-government on colonial lines to India. He admits that Hindus and Muhammadans at present distrust each other, but expresses the hope that a time will come when they will sink their differences, with the result that Government will have to accede to their joint demand for a colonial form of self-government.

KAISER-I-HIND, 11th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

16. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 11th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), expresses regret that Lord Crewe has, by his recent pronouncement on Indian autonomy, shattered all hopes raised in the hearts of Indians about the political future of India, by paragraph 3 of the Government of India's despatch of the 25th August. The editor says that Lord Crewe's interpretation of the passage in paragraph 3 of the despatch is an insult to the intelligence of educated Indians, and asserts that the interpretation, which is now sought to be repudiated, was given to the passage by all high placed Indian officials and even by Lord Crewe himself.

He expresses the opinion that if Indians give up their mutual discord and agitate with an united voice for the grant of their legitimate rights and privileges, the British Government will grant them self-government on colonial lines as soon as it finds that they are really fit for it.

He asserts that the political future of India lies in the hands of Indians, and expresses the hope that Government will not fail to satisfy the just aspirations of Indians.

He goes on to say that the revocation of the partition of Bengal has proved that there is now no such thing as a "settled fact" in Indian politics, and remarks that if persistent efforts are made, there is no reason why Lord Crewe's decision about the future of self-government in India may not be reversed.

17. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, expresses surprise at Lord Crewe's declaration that the ideal of colonial self-government is an impossibility for India, and says that it is the duty of England to make Indians fit for self-government and to grant India self-government on colonial lines. TAFRIH, 14th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

The editor asks Indians not to be depressed by Lord Crewe's pronouncement, and expresses the hope that a time will come when the benign British Government will grant to India the same boon of self-government which it has given to Canada and Australia.

18. Referring to the recent pronouncement of Lord Crewe regarding the impossibility of the grant of the colonial form of government to India at any time, the Prem (Brindaban), of the 15th July 1912, says that such a pronouncement should not convert the Indians into extremists but that it should serve to prove to them the futility of the policy of the moderates. The editor remarks that their future programme should be to diffuse education among their countrymen, and to adopt all those measures which are calculated to better their daily life. He observes that they should not waste their time in idleness, but devote themselves to practical work for the good of their countrymen. He says that they should take care of the present, leaving the future to God's providence. PREM, 15th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

19. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 13th July 1912, refers to Mr. Montagu's speech on the third reading of the Government of India Bill, and congratulates him for admitting that the policy of "settled fact" should not be permitted to impede the progress of a quickly changing and developing country like India. The editor expresses agreement with Mr. Montagu in his justification of the move to Delhi, on the ground that the Viceroy should be freed from the influence of the Calcutta Anglo-Indian community which had tormented Lord Canning and Lord Ripon for their pro-Indian policy. He asserts that Mr. Montagu is the most gifted and sensible Under Secretary that India has ever had, and says that he deserves a more important official position in connection with India. LEADER, 13th July 1912.

Mr. Montagu's work as Under Secretary of State for India.

20. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th July 1912, says that no one can find fault with the Western nations for their conquest of Asiatic countries, seeing that, those who are powerful and efficient deserve to be the rulers of the world. The editor remarks that now the question at issue is how long can a nation maintain its domination over another nation, and remarks that, however unwilling imperialists may be to attempt an answer to this question, they will have to do so not only because some eminent statesmen now advocate war and conquest to be injurious to the interests of the conquerors, but because a spirit of liberty, whether due to their own awakening or as a result of contact with their conquerors, has begun to spring up in the subject and backward countries. ABHYUDAYA, 14th July 1912.

He observes that this awakening, which has produced new ideas and a change of conditions in those countries, demands that the Europeans should change their selfish attitude towards them, and that the British press freely recognizes the necessity for it. He says that the Europeans must have felt by this time that the Asiatics can no longer be deceived, and that they are now determined to reassert themselves after such a long period of degradation and suffering. He affirms that 'Indians are very fortunate,' in that Providence has brought them into contact with the English who are great lovers of liberty, and the object of whose rule in India, as elsewhere, is to uplift the backward people and make them as civilized as themselves.

He states that the English have not come into India for love of power, and urges that they, as lovers of liberty, should be therefore glad to give self-government to Indians, especially when they have been so law-abiding and loyal to the British Government.

He says that Japan and China are already making rapid progress, and that Europeans will not be able to expand their territories in the latter country now that its inhabitants have been awakened and are taking steps to strengthen themselves. He remarks that the Eastern Archipelago is also showing signs of awakening, and that Persia is doing all in her power to maintain her independence. He expresses the opinion that all this shows that Asiatics now want an equality of treatment with Europeans, and that the latter will have to change their present policy with regard to them.

DARBAR, 9th July 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

21. The Darbar (Agra), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), deplores the present strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, and says that by quarrelling among themselves they court the ridicule and contempt of other races.

The editor appeals to the leaders of both communities and to the editors of newspapers to make efforts to effect a rapprochement between the two communities, and asserts that there can be no progress without unity. He asks the Hindus and Muhammadans to realize that their interests are identical.

MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

22. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), refers to the speeches made by the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan, Nawab Mozammil-ullah Khan and Nawab Mushtaq Husain on the occasion of the visit of the Maharaja of Darbhanga to the Aligarh College, and says that though the Hindu and Muhammadan leaders are anxious to promote good feelings between the two communities the people take no effective steps towards that end.

The editor says that the present system of education and the diffusion of Western ideas is responsible for the strained relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and observes that until they recognize the importance of unity of purpose between them there can be no real progress in the country.

He expresses the opinion that no hopes could be entertained for an Indian nationality, seeing that the Muhammadans and the Arya Samajists can never merge their religious differences, and asks the leaders to do something practical to effect a rapprochement between the two communities instead of making speeches.

OUDH AKHBAR, 10th July 1912.

Relations between Hindus, Muhammadans and Englishmen.

23. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), publishes the views of Mr. Nazir Ahmad (Alig) on the relations between Hindus, Muhammadans and Englishmen.

Mr. Nazir Ahmad says that the Muhammadans, who love their religion above all things in the world, should first consolidate themselves into a united body and take care to safeguard their interests, and he observes that they should not grudge if other communities inhabiting India should make similar efforts to preserve their religious traditions.

He goes on to say that there will be real unity amongst the different communities only when they are assured of the protection of their separate interests and political rights, and entertain no apprehension of any encroachment on their respective political rights.

He emphasizes the fact that until the Muhammadans take part in advancing the material progress of India they will never be able to improve their condition, and remarks that it is incumbent on both Hindus and Muhammadans to help in the material, intellectual, moral and political progress of the country.

He urges the Muhammadans not to limit their exertions to improving the condition of their own co-religionists but try to uplift the masses without any distinction of caste or creed.

He then refers to the relations subsisting between the rulers and the ruled under the Moghul Emperors, and remarks that the Moghul Empire fared well as long as the rulers and the ruled had confidence in each other.

He lays particular stress on improving the relations between Indians and Englishmen, and remarks that in the absence of absolute confidence between each other India can make no real progress.

Executive Council for the United Provinces.

24. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912, has the following :— LEADER, 11th July 1912.

"The London correspondent of a contemporary writes :—

There is a general agreement that the Punjab and the United Provinces cannot be left indefinitely in a lower status than Behar, but the failure to remedy an obvious defect in the constitution of those provinces cannot be urged as a substantial reason for placing Behar in a similar position. Council government will doubtless become the rule in all the major provinces of India at no distant date, but when that comes to pass Lord Curzon's cup of bitterness will be quite full.

Lord Curzon himself said in the course of his speech in the House of Lords : 'Under this Bill they saw the absurd spectacle of one of the backward provinces of India (Behar and Orissa) being given the full machinery of a Lieutenant Governor and an Executive Council, whilst side by side was the most enlightened province (the United Provinces) with a Lieutenant Governor and no Executive Council.' After this from Lord Curzon, who will not feel the confidence that the people of these provinces have not to wait long for council government ? Lord Minto said in the course of the same debate that he himself was in favour of the extension of these Executive Councils."

Executive Council for the United Provinces.

25. Referring to Lord Curzon's speech on the second reading of the Government of India Bill in the House of Lords, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, observes that Lord Curzon was quite justified in pointing out the absurdity of providing an Executive Council for the much smaller province of Behar while the older, more enlightened and more progressive province of Agra and Oudh should be without an Executive Council. ADVOCATE, 14th July 1912.

The editor expresses the hope that Lord Curzon will use all his influence in persuading the Home Government to furnish Sir James Meston with an Executive Council on his assumption of the office of Lieutenant Governor of the United Provinces.

The coming council elections.

26. A correspondent, who signs himself "A MUHAMMADAN," contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), in which he supports the candidature of Babu Ishwar Saran for the membership of the local council as a representative of the municipal and district boards of the Gorakhpur division. MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

He says that Babu Ishwar Saran has rendered meritorious services to his community, and that he is a peace-loving man with no prejudices against the Muhammadans. He urges both Hindus and Muhammadan members of the municipal and district boards of the Gorakhpur division to return him as their representative to the local Legislative Council.

The coming council elections.

27. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), publishes a contributed article in which the writer supports the candidature of the Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid for the membership of the local council as a representative of the Muhammadans of the Gorakhpur, Benares and Allahabad divisions, and asks Mr. Abdur Raof to make efforts to be returned to the council by the mixed electorate. MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

He suggests that as long as Hindus and Muhammadans do not learn to work harmoniously only the orthodox members of both the communities should be returned to the councils.

Royal Commission on Public Services.

28. In continuation of its remarks on the subject (vide Selections No. 27, paragraph 18), the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912 (received on the 14th July), suggests that a person with a wide and intimate experience of the Indian administration, having warm sympathy with the aspirations of Indians, should be appointed to the presidentship of the proposed Royal Commission on the Public Services in India, and expresses agreement with the suggestion of its contemporary, the Bengalee (Calcutta), that Lord MacDonnell is the best fitted person for the office. ABHYUDAYA, 11th July 1912.

The renaming of Delhi.

29. A correspondent, who signs himself "SAIYID MUHAMMAD," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), in which he refers to the remarks of the Rajput Gazette (Lahore) that Muhammadans, AL BASHIR, 9th July 1912.

owing to their prejudice against the Hindus, do not like the continuance of the name Delhi, seeing that it reminds them of Hindu origin and glory, and that they have proposed various names for the new Capital of India, and expresses regret that the editor of the Rajput Gazette should have criticised the Muhammadans generally when only one member of the community, named Saiyid Ahmad of Delhi, suggested that some new name be given to the Capital of India.

He advises his co-religionists to cease proposing any names for new Delhi.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 10th July 1912.

Birthday honours.

30. Referring to the title of Vaidyaratna conferred upon Kaviraj Jogindra Nath Sen of Calcutta, the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), says that it cannot understand why this new title has been created when the title of Mahamahopadhayaya was already in existence. The editor remarks that the former title cannot acquire that distinction which the latter has secured because of its old standing, and that the vaidyas of Bengal have not welcomed the new title with any enthusiasm. He expresses the hope that Government will not confer this title in future, and that vaidyas will be honoured as hitherto with the old title of Mahamahopadhayaya.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th July 1912.

The Press Act.

31. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), urges the repeal of the Press Act, seeing that the purpose for which it was enacted has been accomplished. The editor complains of the provision making district magistrates the sole judges of the attitude and tone of a newspaper, and objects to their decisions being final in the matter of the demand of security.

He suggests that if the immediate repeal of the Press Act be not considered advisable it should be so modified that newspapers which are started in future be exempted from depositing security and that the existing newspapers, which were required to deposit security, be given right of appeal against the decisions of the district magistrates.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th July 1912.

The Press Act.

32. A correspondent, who signs himself as "BRAJNANDAN PRASAD MISRA," contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th July 1912, in which he says the Press Act has stifled the liberty of the press to such an extent that journalists are afraid of commenting even mildly and impartially on the arbitrary actions of officials, and of indulging in honest criticism of administrative measures. He urges that as the circumstances which led to the passing of the Press Act have changed and peace and order reigns in the country, Government should repeal the Act. He advises his contemporaries also to carry on a constitutional agitation against the measure until it is repealed.

AL KHALIL, 8th July 1912.

The Muhammadans and agitation.

33. Al Khalil (Bijnor), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), takes exception to the fact that a section of the Muhammadan press in the Punjab is averse to carrying on agitation against the measures of Government, on the ground that the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan was opposed to it. The editor says that circumstances have quite changed now, and that had Sir Saiyid been alive he too would have modified his views about agitation, seeing that Government is always influenced by it.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

National institutions of Muhammadans.

34. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), publishes a contributed article over the signature of "A LIBERAL AND EDUCATED PERSON," in which the writer complains that Muhammadan national institutions and schools are managed by persons who do not tolerate public criticism and interference. He suggests that all national organizations should invite public criticism and should act in accordance with public opinion, and that matters relating to these institutions should not be kept secret, but should be published in all Muhammadan newspapers.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th July 1912.

Nationalism versus inter-nationalism in India.

present Indians have to concentrate all their energies for the attainment of self-government in order to acquire equality with the nations of the world, and that until they have achieved this object they cannot advantageously take part in any general scheme for the good of the humanity. He remarks that in these circumstances Indians cannot be held to be guilty of selfishness if self-interest be the determining motive of all their actions.

36. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), invites the attention of the Resident of the Kashmir Darbar and the Muslim League to the fact that while Muhammadans form 95 per cent. of the total population of Kashmir, they do not receive their fair share of appointments in the different departments of the State. The editor complains that the Hindu officials of the Kashmir Darbar opposed the collection of funds for the proposed Muslim University, and suggests that a deputation of Punjabi Muhammadans should wait upon the Resident and the Maharaja, and should ask them to redress the grievances of Kashmiri Muhammadans.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

37. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 13th July 1912, expresses dissatisfaction with the position taken up by the Privy Council in its judgment in Mr. Clarke's appeal in the Mymensingh case, and expresses its inability to justify the doctrine that wrong or injury done to another is to go without redress on the ground of the bonâ fide motive of the executive officer. The editor states that the Privy Council agreed with the Calcutta High Court "that Mr. Clarke, not having complied with the preliminary condition prescribed by the Arms Act, could not defend his action under that statute," but absolved him under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. He expresses regret that advantage has been taken of the Privy Council's decision to criticise the constitution of the Calcutta High Court, and asserts that in the knowledge of law an ordinarily good barrister or vakil judge far excels the civilian judge and that judicial reform lies in the direction of increasing the number of barrister and vakil judges.

AL MUSHIR, 11th July 1912.

Separate electorates for Muhammadans.

39. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912, has the following :—

LEADER, 11th July 1912.

The water-supply at Allahabad.

"The following telegram is found in our contemporaries of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta, but no information of the letter of the Lieutenant Governor has been available to papers here—we do not know why. We trust the full text of the letter will be published without any delay as it deals with a subject of the utmost importance to all the people of this city :—

'Sir John Hewett, in a letter to the Commissioner of Allahabad, circulated for information, comments very severely on the present deficient state of water-supply in Allahabad, and the delay in supplying the new engine. His Honour says that it appears that the Municipal Board, Commissioner, Sanitary Engineer and Sanitary Board are all, in some degree, responsible for the delay, in a matter of urgent public importance, which has few parallels in His Honour's recollection. The Lieutenant Governor considers that the whole transaction regarding the project to instal the new engine and the duplicate rising main was conducted in a highly discreditable manner. His Honour trusts that it may never again be necessary to comment on such failure to carry out one of the most important duties of the municipal board, namely the provision of an adequate supply of water for the use of the residents in the municipality.'

The above is severe censure, but not severer than the circumstances called for. The water-supply arrangements for now four months have been simply a scandal, and we are led to apprehend that there will be no appreciable improvement in the situation for some months yet. The remission of one month's water-rate is no adequate relief to the rate-payers. We trust the condemnation of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor will produce a quickening effect upon the authorities concerned."

LEADER, 16th July 1912.

The Lucknow Municipality.

40. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th July 1912, reviews the annual administration report of the Lucknow Municipality for the year 1911-12, and referring to the sanitary improvements in the city remarks as follows :—

"There is one man in the Lucknow Municipality to whose civic enlightenment, above everything else, are these sanitary improvements due. It is due to the high purpose, devoted activity and inspiring personality of the Hon'ble Babu Ganga Prasad Varma, senior vice-chairman of the board, that Lucknow promises to be to-day one of the best sanitarily administered towns. The report gives him no more than he deserves when it observes that the chairman was indebted to him for his invaluable assistance in every branch of municipal administration and that 'his services in connection with the improvements of the city in the past three years were deservedly acknowledged by His Excellency the Viceroy in his reply to the municipal address on February 19, 1912.' Here is a citizen who commands the universal esteem and confidence both of the Government and the people and who has shown practically that he possesses a civic capacity of the highest order. Would it be too much to ask that, in recognition of his public spirit, sound judgment and administrative fitness, he should be made the non-official chairman of the Lucknow Municipality? There may be narrow-minded men in that town whose personal interest may have suffered in the working out of the improvement schemes which owe so much to his initiative,—who may have petty objections to urge against his pure and unselfish personality,—but no right-minded man can but view with the greatest satisfaction his election as a non-official chairman of the Lucknow Municipality."

MEDINA, 8th July 1912.

Sale of beef at Kairana, district Muzaffarnagar.

41. The Medina (Bijnor), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 12th July), reports that butchers of Kairana in the Muzaffarnagar district have gone on strike from the 22nd June 1912.

The editor attributes this strike to the action of the local Hindus, who have opened a gaushala and have been buying cows from the butchers in order to stop their slaughter. He states that the Hindu officials of the local municipal board after having prohibited the opening of hide godowns, verbally ordered the butchers to desist from slaughtering cows and asked them to slaughter buffaloes instead. He asserts that though renewed efforts have been made and even police intimidation has been used, the butchers refuse to return to their business and desire permission to open hide godowns.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

The new rules regarding school fees.

42. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), complains about the recent order requiring students who appear for a second time for the same examination to pay double fees, while those who fail twice have to pay treble fees, or are liable to expulsion from the school, and remarks that fresh obstacles are being constantly placed in these provinces in the way of education.

The editor remarks that the new rules will entail great hardship upon poor students, and expresses the hope that the Education Department will be induced to withdraw them.

43. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912, refers to the fact that no less than six out of the ten State technical scholarships recently awarded by the Government of India have been granted to encourage the study of mechanical and electrical engineering, and says that such a disproportionate distribution will probably be justified, on the ground that the students of mechanical and electrical engineering will readily find employment. The editor expresses the hope that Government will give preference to special aptitude and ability for a special line of work, and he suggests that associations like the association for the advancement of scientific and industrial education in Bengal should be formed in each province and should supplement the efforts of Government. He says that suitable avenues of employment should be provided for technically trained young men on their return in the existing industries in the first instance, and when they have picked up sufficient practical experience, by the starting of new industries.

Technical, educational and industrial progress.

He invites attention to the increasing importance which is attached to technical education as a means of industrial progress in all advanced countries, and asserts that India stands very badly in need of technical education.

44. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), expresses regret that out of ten scholarships awarded by Government for technical education in Europe not one single scholarship has been awarded to any Muhammadan. The editor expresses surprise that His Excellency Lord Hardinge and Sir Harcourt Butler could not find a single Muhammadan worthy of the State scholarship, and urges the Muslim League to memoralize the Government of India on the subject.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 8th July 1912.

State technical scholarships.

45. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 11th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), expresses regret that out of the ten students who have been granted State technical scholarships this year to proceed to foreign countries, not even one belongs to Bombay or the United Provinces, and that none of them is a Muhammadan. The editor insists that the claims of such major provinces like Bombay and the United Provinces and those of the Muhammadans should not be overlooked.

AL MUSHIR, 11th July 1912.

State technical scholarships.

46. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 17th July 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer asserts that the staff of the King George Medical College is poorer than even that of the Calcutta or Lahore Medical College and is much more so than that of a first class British institution. He says that the allotment of the two important teacherships of Pharmacology and Forensic medicine to Military Assistant Surgeons, who are men of admittedly poor qualifications, is a deliberate sacrifice of efficiency to vested interests. He objects to the assignment of the second surgeoncy of the hospital to the Professor of Pathology, and remarks that the objection of contact with dead bodies is as much applicable to the Professor of Pathology as to the Professor of Anatomy, to whom no hospital duties have been given on this ground. He invites attention to the anomaly of assigning hospital duties and allowing the privilege of taking up consulting practice to the Professor of Physiology, who is an Indian Medical Service man, while his colleague, the Professor of Anatomy, an Indian, has not been given similar privileges.

The King George Medical College.

He suggests that every subject taught in the college should have a chair assigned to it, which should be occupied by the man possessing the highest professional qualifications and attainments, without any regard for the service to which he belongs, and that lecturers, if it be necessary to appoint them, should be in addition to the professors, and should hold at least a registrable qualification.

He says that with a view to encourage research work and specialization, no hospital duties should be assigned to the Professors of Pathology and Physiology, but the second surgeoncy of the hospital should be given either to the Professor of Ophthalmology or to the Professor of Anatomy, as these subjects do not offer much scope for research work.

He expresses the opinion that the Professor of Materia Medica should be a well-paid Indian of high qualifications, and an assistant, a research scholar, and that physiological laboratories should be placed at his disposal for research in the pharmacology of indigenous drugs, and that he should be also second physician to the hospital.

He urges that lecturers and demonstrators should be made eligible for certain professorships, if they possess or bring out British qualifications after ten or fifteen years' service.

He insists that the privileges vouchsafed to the superior staff of the King George Medical College should not be withheld from the subordinate staff, and urges that the latter should be assured permanency of tenure and adequate allowance, and should be granted exemption from grade examination and permission to engage in consulting practice.

He objects to the proposal to limit the tenure of senior demonstratorships to four or five years, and remarks that the quality of practical instruction in anatomy, physiology and pathology is bound to suffer when experienced demonstrators will be transferred to the general line at the very time that they are beginning to be really useful to the college. He asserts that the prospect of transfer to the general line will not encourage demonstrators to specialize in their subjects.

He contends that it is absurd to require professors who teach a special subject to appear in grade examinations, and expresses the hope that they will not be subjected to the harassing and humiliating ordeal of grade examinations.

He says that in view of the considerations that only men of special talents will be appointed on the staff of the college and that they will be given no free quarters, that they will have no prospect of enjoying a lucrative practice, it is necessary that the demonstrators should be given a monthly allowance of at least Rs. 150 in the third grade and Rs. 175, Rs. 200 and Rs. 225 in the second, first and senior grades respectively.

He invites attention to the invidious distinction made between the professors (excluding the Indian Professor of Anatomy) and the demonstrators in the matter of consulting practice, and states that there is no medical college or school in India where consulting practice is not allowed to demonstrators.

With regard to the contention that demonstrators are given an allowance to compensate them for the loss of practice, he points out that while the professors get a similar allowance they are not debarred from consulting practice, and expresses the hope that Government will do away with this ungenerous and unjust distinction.

ADVOCATE, 11th July 1912.

The Allahabad University examinations.

47. Referring to the comments of the Comrade (Calcutta) on the large percentage of failures in the Allahabad University examinations, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th July 1912, says that every college is manned by able professors, but expresses doubt as to whether all of them work equally hard with their students. The editor invites attention to the fact that as a result of the large percentage of failures failed students experience great difficulty in getting admission in any college, and suggests that they should be asked to work at home and should, at the end of the year, be required to satisfy the examiners only in the subjects in which they had failed in order to avoid overcrowding in the second and fourth-year classes.

The Allahabad University examinations.

48. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 13th July 1912, publishes a contributed article over the signature of "MEDITATOR," in which he attributes the large percentage of failures in the Matriculation and Intermediate examinations to the present curriculum which forces young boys to grapple with a long course in arithmetic in very low standards which could have been very easily mastered at a higher stage and to the abolition of the middle English examination which served as a useful check for the lazy students.

He asserts that early marriage debilitates the students and incapacitates them for sustained mental questions, and suggests that the educational authorities should insist upon a minimum standard of physical strength for every examination instead of a minimum age.

ADVOCATE, 14th July 1912.

The Allahabad University examinations.

49. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, publishes an article under the signature of a correspondent who signs himself "JUSTICE," in which the writer invites attention to the disastrous results in this year's previous M.A. examination, and asserts that candidates going up for the M.A. degree generally select subjects for which they have a special taste and study intelligently and seriously, and attributes the large percentage of failures either to incompetency of the teaching staff or to some such high standard of judgment formed by the examiners which it is almost impossible for a student to satisfy.

He suggests that the University should appoint a committee to inspect the teaching staff of colleges and should ask the examiners to be less strict in future.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

50. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), publishes a contributed article from the pen of "A LIBERAL MUSSALMAN," in which the writer opposes the idea of affiliating other schools and colleges to the proposed Muslim University and making it an examining body. He enquires whether the ideal of Muhammadans had been a residential or an examining university for the last forty years, and expresses doubt as to whether Government would place the education of Indian Muhammadans entirely into the hands of the Muslim University and that of the Hindus entirely into the hands of the Hindu University. He asserts that the educational ideal for which Sir Saiyid established the Aligarh College can never be attained by means of an examining University, and says that the mistaken desire of Muhammadans for such a University is due to their ignorance of the educational conditions prevailing in civilized countries all over the world. He says that a constant and exclusive acquaintance with examining universities had led Indians to believe, though wrongly, that examination is the most important function of a modern University. He reminds Muhammadans that their own ancient universities were, without exception, residential, and that all modern universities in France, England and Germany were founded on their example. He expresses the opinion that examining universities can turn out only clerks or imperfectly educated men, and says that if the ideal of Muhammadans be so low, they may rest content with the existing State universities and may make some provision for religious education in them. He insists that the proposed Muslim University should be modelled on the lines of the Oxford and Cambridge Universities, and asserts that it is impossible for the Muslim University to attempt to guide and control the education of the entire Muhammadan population inhabiting the vast country extending from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. He assures his readers that Government would never assent to such a proposal. He says that when the Muhammadans cannot manage even small institutions, it is unwise of them to dream of attempting to put their hands to such a stupendous task.

He remarks that persons acquainted with the political conditions of India must feel convinced that Government can never grant the power of affiliation to the Muslim University, and expresses regret that the Muslim press is wasting its energy over a mistaken and impracticable proposal. He appeals to the Muslim press to direct its attention to matters in which a compromise is possible with Government and which are essential for the success of the University.

He lays stress on the fact that the University should be wholely and solely under the management of Muhammadans, and that the Board of Trustees should have the powers of a Senate. He says that in this respect the draft regulations are open to grave objections. He urges that Muhammadans should never accept the reservation of certain professorships and provostships for Europeans.

He reminds Muhammadans of the troubles which they had to suffer in the Aligarh College on account of the European Principal and Professors, and expresses regret that Muhammadans have not realized the importance of this question. He expresses approval of the appointment of Europeans as provosts and professors, on condition that their appointments should be made in such a way that they may be made to work as servants of the college and not to rule over the trustees, and he therefore insists that clauses making the appointment of Europeans compulsory should be expunged from the regulations. He says that if the principalship and provostships be closed to Muhammadans, the proposed University would not be a national institution. He points out that even in the State universities there are no restrictions against the appointment of Muhammadans, and says that there would be no equality of treatment between European and Muhammadan professors if such invidious distinctions are made. He expresses the hope that persons who are acquainted with the inner working of the Aligarh College and with the degrading, humiliating and injurious effects of the system of preferential treatment for Europeans, will never tolerate the imposition of similar restrictions in the proposed Muslim University. He appeals to the Muslim press to agitate with one voice against any restriction to the appointment of Muhammadans to the highest posts in the University, and asserts that the Muslim press is following a suicidal policy in neglecting this most important question and in running after the vain, impossible and imaginary idea of gaining the power of affiliation for the proposed University. He expresses regret that the criticisms of the Muhammadan newspapers are directed to fruitless channels, and asks the press to devote its attention to questions which admit of solution and to suggestions which Government can accept. He invites the attention of the Muhammadan public to the question of confirmation of professors of the University with the assent of the Viceroy, and says that, in case the Viceroy be given such authority, the professors will become practically government servants and will always have their eyes turned towards Government. He considers that such professors would not care for Muhammadans, and says that even now when the appointment and dismissal of the professors of the Aligarh College lies entirely in the hands of Muhammadans, they ignore the trustees.

He says that the position of Muhammadan professors would be very much weakened in this way, and insists that Government should not be given any greater right of interference with the professors of the proposed University than it enjoys with regard to the professors of private colleges. He suggests that in case Government has grave political objections against any professor, the managing committee should be informed of such objections and should either punish the professor or record its reasons for the non-punishment of such professor. He objects to the rule that the courses of the University should not be finally prescribed without the sanction of Government, and says that such excessive State interference is undesirable, seeing that there would be a sufficient number of government nominees on the Senate. He contends that the sanction of Government would practically mean that the courses of the proposed University would be framed by the Education Department, and suggests that Government should be informed of the courses prescribed, and that its objections, if any, should be considered, but its sanction to the courses should not be made compulsory.

He says that there is still time to agitate for these important questions, and expresses the opinion that a University which would not do away with these restrictions would be absolutely useless for the Muhammadan community. He asks Hindus to join in this agitation, seeing that the Hindu University would have to encounter similar difficulties, and that they would not be able to get a better constitution than that granted by Government to the Muslim University.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

51. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), says that the Muhammadan community will gain no advantage by establishing a university of its own if the power of affiliation of other colleges besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, be not granted to it.

The editor says that if the power of affiliation be not granted to the University its sphere of influence will be very limited, and that the Muhammadans of other provinces will not be able to derive full benefit from it.

He advises the authorities of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, to spend the money collected for the establishment of the proposed University in improving the college, in case the power of affiliation be refused to the University, and asks them to make private arrangements for the religious instruction of the Muhammadan students in the schools and colleges in the country, and to open lower primary schools in every village.

He says that if the question of the power of affiliation to the Muslim University be settled according to the wishes of the Muhammadan community, the Muslim educational institutions all over the country will become united and the Indian Muhammadans will become a consolidated body, with the result that it will be easy to effect reforms amongst them and to make them learn how to work under one central authority.

AL KHALIL, 8th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

52. Al Khalil (Bijnor), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), expresses approval of the nomination of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and expresses regret that some people should oppose his nomination on the ground of his being superstitious in religious beliefs.

The editor asks his co-religionists to elect Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan unanimously as secretary of the Aligarh College, seeing that no better qualified man is forthcoming or is willing to accept the post.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

53. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article entitled "Nawab Haji Muhammad Ishaq Khan Bahadur, and the honorary secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh," to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), in which he expresses satisfaction at the criticisms made by some newspapers of the nomination of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Aligrah College, seeing that the criticisms exhibited public interest in the subject.

He refers to the criticisms made by one Mr. Abdul Wadood of Bareilly and the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) that Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan took no part in national movements, and that he has superstitious beliefs in religious matters, and observes that the official duties so admirably performed by Mr. Ishaq Khan should be considered as public services rendered to the community. He says that the wide experience acquired by Mr. Ishaq Khan in the long course of his official life is a sufficient guarantee of the fact that he will take lively interest in the affairs of his national college, the secretaryship of which he has expressed his willingness to accept.

He goes on to say that the community can safely put its confidence in Mr. Ishaq Khan, who has sacrified his own personal interests and has given his consent to accept the honorary secretaryship, if offered by the entire community, and that he will never shirk the responsibility of safeguarding the interests of his co-religionists. He adds that Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan has always favoured the view that the Muslim University should be so organized as to meet the needs of the Muhammadans, and that the Muhammadans should enjoy reasonable liberty in controlling its affairs.

With regard to the remarks that Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan has superstitious belief in religious matters, he says that Mr. Ishaq Khan has very great love for the Prophet, and that if he was deceived by some cheat who pretended to possess some sacred relics and showed due reverence to the alleged relics it cannot be said that he is superstitious.

He goes on to say that the irreligiousness of the young generation can only be checked by the association of men of the type of Mr. Ishaq Khan, and he asks the critics to mention the names of other persons whom they think fit for the post and wish to propose. He says that since the Hon'ble Mr. Ali Imam and the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan, whose names have been proposed by Mr. Abdul Wadood, are unable at present to accept the honorary secretaryship of the Aligarh College, Mr. Ishaq Khan should be persuaded by every possible means to accept the post.

He expresses apprehension that the inopportune criticism of Mr. Ishaq Khan's nomination might lead him to decline the offer of the post of secretary, and observes that it is absurd to suggest that Mr. Ishaq Khan should resign his post under Government and should settle at Aligarh in order to learn the work of the secretary under the present incumbent.

With reference to the remarks of the Muslim Gazette that possession of wealth has been made one of the necessary qualifications for the candidate for the post of the secretary of the college, he denies the allegation and observes that the nomination of Mr. Ishaq Khan has not been made on that ground.

He invites the attention of the editor of the Muslim Gazette to the agenda attached to the copy of the proposal to appoint Mr. Ishaq Khan, sent to every trustee of the college, in which the following six qualifications have been mentioned to be essential for the secretary of the college :—

"That the secretary should be an orthodox Muhammadan ; that he should not be self-interested ; that his cynosure should be only the college and the community ; that he should be able to devote his whole time to the affairs of the college ; that he be fully trusted by Government ; that an English-knowing person should be preferred for the post ; and that he should be elected, as far as possible, unanimously."

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

54. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), in a supplement to the issue of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), publishes a contributed article from the pen of "AN ENLIGHTENED PATRIOT," in which the writer refers to the article supporting the nomination of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Aligarh College, contributed by Nawab Mushtaq Husain to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (vide para. supra), and expresses regret that the date of the special meeting of the trustees has been fixed so early as the 21st July that public opinion will not be able to declare itself in so short a time. He takes exception to the fact that the name of only one candidate has been put forward, and that only the local trustees have been consulted in such an important matter.

He says that the decision of the local trustees should have been published and the public should have been asked to suggest other names, and that when after the lapse of a reasonable period the names of different candidates had become known, they should have been placed before the trustees. He observes that such a procedure would have been eminently reasonable and would have perfectly satisfied the Muhammadan public. He states that, excepting Nawab Mushtaq Husain, there is no other trustee about whom there are not varying opinions in the Muhammadan community, and says that the best course would have been to nominate as many candidates as were available and then to ask the trustees to select the best man from amongst them.

He points out that Nawab Mushtaq Husain himself admits that the secretary should be a person about whom there be no difference of opinion in the Muhammadan public, and asserts that there is considerable difference of opinion about the suitability of Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the post. He emphasizes the importance of the post of secretary of the Aligarh College and asserts that the secretary is considered to be the successor of Sir Saiyid and the leader of Indian Musalmans. He expresses regret that public opinion was not consulted in the matter of such vital importance. He says that a list of the trustees of the college stating their respective qualifications and occupations should have been published in order to enable the public to select some suitable candidate.

With regard to the qualifications necessary for the secretary of the Aligarh College, he says that while orthodox in religious matters the secretary should be liberal and free from sectarianism, and should be able to lead the educated classes. He asserts that the secretary should be a public-spirited man who has already given satisfactory evidence of public-spiritedness in such a way that the community may be sure of deriving benefit from him in future.

He suggests the name of Saiyid Karamat Husain for the secretaryship, and states that he belongs to a famous and educated family and is himself a great Arabic scholar. He says that Mr. Karamat Husain is a very good Arabic writer and is thoroughly versed in ancient Muhammadan law and literature. He expresses appreciation of Mr. Karamat Husain's knowledge of English literature, philosophy, science and law, and says that it is very difficult to find such a learned man amongst the trustees of the college. He goes on to say that Mr. Karamat Husain is very orthodox in religious matters, is trusted by Government, and is a well-wisher of the Aligarh College and the Muhammadan community. He states that Mr. Karamat Husain is liberal-minded and though a Shiah is entirely free from sectarianism. He assures his readers that Mr. Karamat Husain will be trusted alike by Muhammadans of the old and new type, and asserts that he possesses moral courage of a high order which, though wrongly described by some people as obstinacy, is only the firm determination of a matured judgment. He points out that Sir Saiyid and Nawab Mushtaq Husain have been greatly respected for their firmness, and says that in the present situation it is absolutely necessary for the secretary to be a man who is not easily shaken in his determination by the opinion of every individual.

With regard to Mr. Karamat Husain's public-spiritedness he states that he recently made an endowment of Rs. 1,80,000 for the education of Muslim girls, and says that the way in which he has given away his personally earned wealth establishes his great sympathy for the cause of education.

He points out that the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain will satisfy the Shiahs, who have been complaining that their interests are not properly looked after in the Aligarh College, while his liberal-mindedness and freedom from sectarianism will make him acceptable to the Sunnis also.

Referring to the question as to whether Mr. Karamat Husain will be willing to reside at Aligarh and to devote his full time to the college, he says that the officials of the college should enquire from him. He suggests that Muhammadans should convene meetings to express their confidence in Mr. Karamat Husain and to ask him to work as secretary of the Aligarh College, and he expresses the hope that the public-spiritedness of Mr. Karamat Husain will never permit him to refuse to work for his community.

He disclaims any intention of under-rating the abilities of Mr. Ishaq Khan or of making the secretaryship of the Aligarh College a Shiah-Sunni question.

He urges both Shiahs and Sunnis to merge their petty differences, and asks them to treat all national questions from a non-sectarian standpoint. He appeals to Muhammadans to select the most suitable man without any consideration as to whether he is a Shiah or a Sunni.

With regard to the suggestion that Major Saiyid Husain Bilgrami should be made secretary of the Aligarh College, he expresses the opinion that the major is more fitted for the secretaryship of the All-India Muslim League and should be appointed to that post.

He concludes by appealing to the trustees not to be hasty in deciding such an important question as the appointment of a secretary for the college, and urges them to postpone the consideration of the question for a reasonable time so that the merits of the different candidates may be thoroughly discussed and public opinion may have time to declare itself clearly on the subject.

Nawab Mushtaq Husain and the word sarghana.

55. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 15th July), in which he denies the allegation made by the Watan (Lahore) that he used the word sarghana (leader, used in bad sense) about some of the local trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and asserts that the word was a mere reproduction from the article of Mr. Ghulamus-Saqlain which appeared in the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore) of the 22nd June.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 10th July 1912.

He makes Mr. Ghulamus-Saqlain responsible for the use of the word sarghana, and says that he is sufficiently acquainted with the Urdu language to know the meaning of the word and to avoid its use for a gentleman.

The Almora District High School.

56. The Almora Akhbar for June 1912 (received on the 15th July), says that as the matriculation class of the Almora District High School will be abolished from July next and as there are no more seats available in the Mission High School, those boys who got plucked in the last Matriculation examination will not be able to continue their studies. The editor says that owing to their straitened circumstances they cannot proceed to the plains for the purpose, and urges the citizens of Almora to asks Government to allow the local District High School to prepare students as heretofore for the matriculation examination.

ALMORA AKHBAR, June 1912.

The editor incidentally refers to the need for a college at Almora, and urges that Government should be asked to establish one. He says that its cost should be met by public subscription and by grant-in-aid from Government.

A theatrical performance in the Government High School, Bijnor.

57. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), publishes the account of a theatrical performance given in the premises of the Government High School, Bijnor, and questions the propriety of such performances by students. The editor says that taking part in theatrical performances is against the rules of decency and morality, and he objects to the permission given by the head master of the Bijnor High School to his students to play the drama.

Muhammadan boarders of the Ahmedabad Training College.

58. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), in the issue of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 12th July), asserts that the statement made by the Bombay Government that the Muhammadan boarders of the Ahmedabad Training School did not take meat at their homes was not based on facts, and expresses dissatisfaction at the attitude of the Bombay Government.

59. The Hindi Vyapari and Karigar (Benares), of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 12th July), says that a cotton-picking machine has been invented in America which is largely used in Texas, and urges the desirability of the department of Agriculture indenting it in order to experiment with it in Indian farms and, if successful, to popularize it among the Indian farmers.

Use of intoxicants among students.

60. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 10th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), expresses regret that the use of intoxicants is steadily increasing among Indian students, and says that while smoking is freely indulged in by almost all students it has been observed in several places that some of them have begun taking cocaine also. The editor refers to the evil effects of the cocaine habit, and urges that Government and parents alike should take steps to prevent students from falling victims to it.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th July 1912.

Swadeshi fairs in Bengal.

61. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), expresses commendation of the proposal to hold swadeshi fairs at Calcutta and other important centres in Bengal to exhibit the produce of indigenous arts and industries, and remarks that they will give a great stimulus to the swadeshi movement as well as to indigenous enterprise.

The editor observes that as long as Government does not fully realize its responsibility with regard to the industrial development of the country the Indians should utilize all their energy and money in this direction, and emphasizes the need for such fairs being held in every part of the country.

LEADER, 12th July 1912.

Swadeshi movement in Bengal.

62. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th July 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer gives the figures about the exports and imports of Bengal and about the activities of joint stock companies in order to demonstrate that the swadeshi movement had made little progress in Bengal during the years 1905 to 1910.

He asserts that most of the joint stock companies of Bengal are working with foreign capital and are registered in England, and says that the jute companies registered in India have got European firms as their managing agents, employ Europeans in their superior managing and engineering staff and use very little Indian capital.

With regard to the tea trade, he states that out of the twenty-five crores of capital invested in that business only about seven lakhs or ·03 per cent. is Indian.

With regard to the coal industry, he remarks that though several large coal companies are owned and managed by Indians, most of them are in a bad state owing to defective management.

He says that the fact that these companies prosper when transferred to more capable foreign hands, shows that Indians lack in capacity for organization and management.

He goes on to say that light railways, tramways and cotton mills are almost exclusively in foreign hands, and states that the staple industries of Bengal, though they give employment to a large number of labourers, have not produced practical businessmen and experts among the people of Bengal.

He quotes figures of imports and exports for 1905 and 1910, and points out that, with the exception of apparel, machinery and mill works, unwrought metals and woollen goods, there was an increase in the import of all other manufactured articles.

He attributes the decrease in the import of woollen goods to the increased activity of European-managed woollen mills in Upper India, and says that the decrease in the imports of machinery and mill works indicates a general slackening in industrial activity. He states that the decrease in unwrought metals has been more than counterbalanced by the increase in wrought metals, and says that the increase under other heads of imports shows that the swadeshi movement has not been successful.

Referring to the increase in exports, he asserts that the improvement in the jute and tea industry is due mostly to Europeans, and says that the exports of raw commodities, such as grains, seeds, hides and skins, depend mainly on the enterprise of non-Bengalis.

He expresses the opinion that the swadeshi movement has failed because the people of Bengal, instead of firstly developing the natural resources of their own country, began at the wrong end by trying to avoid foreign articles. He asserts that every country is suited by nature to produce and manufacture certain commodities better than other countries, and expresses regret that the people of India, instead of taking advantage of the potentialities placed ready in their hands by a generous nature, devote their attention to competing in industries, through mawkish sentimentality, for which another country is better suited and thus mock at true swadeshi. He states that means of transport, research work, free exchange and security, which are essential for commercial success, have been provided by the British Government in India, and says that India requires only able, honest and patient captains of industry to develop the industries for which the country is best suited.

63. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 13th July 1912, expresses regret at the death of Mr. Malabari, and eulogizes his work in connection with the Indian Spectator (Bombay), the East and West (Bombay), the Seva Sadan and the King Edward sanatorium. The editor states that Mr. Malabari had many acquaintances and friends among great men in India and England, he was a Gujrati and English scholar and was an active social reformer in the earlier years of his life.

The death of Mr. Malabari.

64. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, expresses regret at the death of Mr. Malabari, and eulogizes his work in connection with the Indian Spectator (Bombay), the East and West (Bombay), the Seva Sadan and the King Edward sanatorium. The editor states that Mr. Malabari was a quiet worker and an able Gujrati scholar, and that he achieved great success in his philanthropic movements owing to the influence he had with the princes of India.

ADVOCATE, 14th July 1912.

The death of Mr. Malabari.

65. Referring to the rule proposed by the Police Commissioner of Calcutta that no person "shall, without reasonable excuse, walk on or along the carriage way in any of the streets mentioned in column 2 of the schedule, except in such portions of such streets as have no side footpath for the exclusive use of foot passengers," the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, remarks that almost every street or lane of any importance in Calcutta has been included in the schedule, with the result that thousands of innocent and ignorant persons will be placed every day at the mercy of the subordinate police. The editor expresses the hope that the Governor in Council will not sanction the proposed rules.

ADVOCATE, 14th July 1912.

The proposed rules for the regulation of pedestrian traffic in Calcutta.

66. Referring to the speech delivered by Mr. J. Russell, who presided over the annual meeting of the Tea Association of London, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, expresses gratification at the fact that tea planters have begun to see the injury caused to the community by the system of indentured labour and now feel that they can carry on their operations without State help. The editor expresses the hope that the Government of India will remove the disabilities from which the tea planters of Assam suffer in the recruiting districts.

He invites attention to the fact that Indian labour has become so scarce that Indian industries suffer, and states that the recruiting agents have now transferred their scene of operations from the interior of the country to the railway stations where they entrap unwary passengers by objectionable practices. He expresses the hope that the tea planters of Assam will support the views of Mr. Russell and urges the total abolition of the degrading system of indentured labour which is being carried on throughout India and is looked upon with dread by the mass of the people.

ADVOCATE, 14th July 1912.

Indentured labour in India.

67. Al Khalil (Bijnor), of the 16th July 1912, refers to the annual report of the Inspector General of Prisons in which he has suggested that more consideration should be shown for the first offenders and that they should be dealt with under section 562, Indian

AL KHALIL, 16th July 1912.

The increase of crime in the United Provinces.

Penal Code, and remarks that in the Bijnor district section 562 of the Indian Penal Code is never applied in the case of first offenders.

The editor says that if a man is once convicted and imprisoned in jail his whole life is ruined, seeing that the police keep surveillance over him after his release from the jail, and avail itself of the first opportunity to implicate him in some crime and get him again convicted, with the result that he becomes a hardened criminal and takes to the life of a dakait or robber after he is released a second time from the jail.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and remarks that no efforts to check the growth of crimes in the United Provinces will meet with any success unless the real cause of the evil is ascertained and checked.

LEADER, 17th July 1912.

India's sugar industry.

68. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 17th July 1912, refers to the import figures of sugar into India during the years 1905-6 and 1910-11, and expresses surprise at the increase in the import of sugar into India when she is the home of the sugarcane and is still the largest sugar-producing country in the world. The editor expresses regret that the indigenous industry is threatened by the competition of Java, Mauritius, Austria and Hungary, and attributes the decline of the industry to the lack of improved and better methods. He urges the establishment of large central sugar manufactories and the use of adequate machinery for extracting cane-juice, and expresses the hope that these will result in economies which will "more than cover the existing discrepancy between the cost of production in India and Java."

V.—Legislation.

MASHRIQ, 9th July 1912.

The Agra Tenancy Act.

69. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 9th July 1912, recognizes the necessity for amendments being made in the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, and states that the definition of "land" given in the Act is defective, seeing that land can be held to include rivers, pools and habitations. The editor invites attention to the defective definitions of "cultivator" and "land revenue," and says that though section 34 of the Act implies that rent can be collected from a person who cultivates a piece of land without the consent of the landlord, it is doubtful whether such a person can be called a tenant and can be dispossessed. He takes exception to section 22 of the Act on the ground that it is not in accordance with the Hindu and Muhammadan laws of succession.

He invites attention to the conflict of opinion between the revenue courts and the High Court about the meaning of the different sections of the Act, and says that the law relating to dispossession stands urgently in need of amendment. He expresses regret that litigation is increasing, and asserts that the Act is ruining the cultivator instead of benefiting him. He suggests that revenue officers who decide cases should be given a legal training, and urges that due consideration should be shown for the interests of landlords also.

VI.—Railway.

ZIA-UL-ISLAM, 1st July 1912.

Railway accidents.

70. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), in the issue of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 12th July), refers to the collision between Fatehganj and Miranpur Katra, near Shahjahanpur on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, on the 5th June, and expresses doubt as to the truth of the statement that only five persons were killed and five injured.

He urges that the Railway Board should institute a searching enquiry into the conduct of the guilty railway officials, and devise means to make such accidents impossible in future.

ANAND, 11th July 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

71. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 11th July 1912 (received on the 17th July), says that neither the interests of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce nor those of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce should have any weight with Government in considering the question of the future working of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and urges that the Upper India Chamber of Commerce and the inhabitants of the United Provinces, who are most interested in the question, should be consulted before any final decision is arrived at in the matter.

72. Referring to the comments of the Times of India (Bombay) and the Pioneer (Allahabad) against the proposed transfer of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway administration to the East Indian Railway, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th July 1912, says that the Government of India should remember the fact that Karachi will never favour the proposal of the transfer of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the East Indian Railway or the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. The editor suggests that, in view of the fact that the principal outlet for all the traffic between Meerut and Chandausi is the port of Bombay, the Government of India should sanction the extension of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway system from Aligarh to Agra. He contends that it would be inadvisable to hand over the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to a company when it is yielding a good return.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

He suggests that the Government of India should make further allotments of capital expenditure in order to provide double track from Lucknow to Moradabad and arrange to bring the main stations of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway nearer to the cities. He asserts that the doubling of lines would bring about a swifter service of trains between Delhi and Lucknow and would render the risk of accidents lesser. He expresses the hope that the Government of India will now feel convinced of the opposition of Indian and Anglo-India opinion outside Calcutta to the transfer of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and will therefore refuse to sanction a transfer which will be prejudicial to the interests of the people of the United Provinces.

73. Referring to the proposal for the amalgamation of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with the East Indian Railway, and the counter proposal for its amalgamation with some railway having its terminus at Bombay, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 12th July 1912, says that it would have been a great advantage to the public if the grounds on which the Bombay lines based their claim for the transfer of the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to them were made known. The editor expresses the opinion that it is desirable to have a change of management in the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, but disapproves of the suggestion to form a new company to take over its management, on the ground that it would be unwise to place the affairs of so important a concern in untried and inexperienced hands. He states that, seeing that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the East Indian Railway are co-terminous and touch each other at more than half a dozen points, and the traffic on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the East Indian Railway is much heavier in the downward and upward direction respectively, an amalgamation of the two railways would lead to a considerable saving in the haulage of wagons, and would result in public convenience and in economical and efficient working. He invites attention to the lower earnings per mile and the larger percentage of working expenses on earnings of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and asserts that in this respect also the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway stands to gain by an amalgamation with the more prosperous and economical East Indian Railway.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

He does not attach much weight to the argument that the East Indian Railway head quarters are some 600 miles away from the part of the country which the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway serves, and says that the people of the United Provinces will continue to find employment in the amalgamated railway through the divisional offices which are sure to be opened in these provinces. He asserts that the suggested amalgamation will not interfere with the liberty of traders to deal with the ports of Karachi or Bombay, and says that the rivalry of the lines leading to Calcutta and Bombay (and Karachi) ports may stimulate a freight war which is sure to prove advantageous to the interests of trade and industries.

TAFRIH, 14th July 1912.

74. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th July 1912, objects to the amalgamation of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with the East Indian Railway, on the ground that the former has already yielded profits of 10½ lakhs and 35 lakhs during the years 1910 and 1911 respectively.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

The editor asserts that the East Indian Railway has always been trying to injure the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the trade of these provinces, and that accordingly the merchants of Bombay and Karachi are opposed to the amalgamation of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with the East Indian Railway. He says that the proposed abolition of octroi will stimulate trade in these provinces, and will increase the profits of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. He urges that in view of the injury to the interests of the people of the United Provinces, Karachi and Bombay, and taking into account the loss to the employés of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, it should not be amalgamated with the East Indian Railway, but should be kept under government control.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th July 1912.

Pilgrim traffic to Jagannathpuri.

75. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th July 1912, complains that the railway authorities have not made proper arrangements for carrying the pilgrim traffic from Allahabad to Puri where the car festival is soon to be held, and says that pilgrims could not obtain accommodation in trains even after staying for three days at the Allahabad railway station. The editor points out that many of them had to go back to their homes disappointed and suffered the loss of money spent on purchasing the ticket. He urges that on such occasions special trains should have been run, and enquires as to why the railway authorities issue tickets when they cannot provide accommodation to their holders.

LEADER, 16th July 1912.

The Trans-Persian Railway.

76. A correspondent, who signs himself "KHUDA BAKHSH," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 16th July 1912, in which he remarks that the Trans-Persian Railway will give a great stimulus to trade and commerce, and says that it will be only the first of a series of other railway enterprises in that direction. He states that the Government of India had got surveyed a coast line from Karachi to Bushire but did not take it in hand, probably on account of the Trans-Persian Railway scheme. He says that a railway from Karachi to Bunder Abbas will form part of the Trans-Persian Railway, and suggests that Government should construct a line from Bunder Abbas to Bussorah via Bushire. He points out that as Bussorah is a station on the proposed Baghdad extension, which is already connected with Mecca and Medina, this railway will give great comfort to Haj pilgrims by obviating the necessity of proceeding to Mecca and Medina by sea. He urges the Government of India to construct this line, and says that it will be blessed by its Muhammadan subjects for thus helping them in performing their religious duties.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, March and April 1912.

The value-payable system.

77. A correspondent, who signs himself "SHAMS-UL-DIN, MERCHANT OF LAHORE," contributes an article to the Postal Magazine (Agra), for the months of March and April 1912 (received on the 15th July), in which he suggests that in cases in which value-payable articles are refused by the addressee and payment is not made, the money order commission should be refunded to the sender, and that in view of the fact that the Postal Department prosecutes those persons who cannot show bonâ fide orders for the value-payable articles despatched by them, the department should also prosecute those addressees who refuse to make payment and to take delivery of value-payable articles for which they have given bonâ fide orders.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

VAISHYA HITKARI, June 1912.

The cow-protection movement.

78. The Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut), for the month of June 1912 (received on the 17th July), publishes a firman of the Emperor Akbar prohibiting the slaughter of cows within his dominions, which is said to be in the possession of the present Maharaja Scindhia of Gwalior, and invites the attention of Muhammadans to that portion of the firman in which it is said that cow-killing is against the precepts of Islam.

The editor enlarges upon the benefits which accrue to mankind and agriculture from cows.

ARYA MITRA, 8th July 1912.

Disposal of orphans in Benares.

79. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), refers to the refusal of the District Magistrate of Benares to grant an application made by the secretary of the local Arya Samaj asking for the custody of a Hindu orphan girl who had been made over to some missionary society, and says that such a proceeding on the part of the magistrate is contrary to the provisions of the Famine Code, and is calculated to cause resentment among Hindus and Arya Samajists. The editor asks the Local Government to direct the magistrate to be more careful in such cases in future.

80. A correspondent signing himself "SADANAND TIWARI FROM UDAIPUR," contributes an article to the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), in which he refers to the activities of Christian missionaries in making converts among Brahmans, Rajputs and Bhils in Rajputana, and says that several Hindus, including widows of respectable families, have been converted to Islam also. He urges that in order to preserve the Hindu community the native chiefs should support the Arya Samaj and help it in propagating the Vedic religion in their states. He also asks the Arya Pratinidhi Sabha, Rajputana, to conduct its propaganda work more energetically in order to prevent Hindus being converted to Islam or Christianity in any large number.

Conversions to Christianity and Islam in Rajputana.

ARYA MITRA, 8th July 1912.

81. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), in the issue of the 1st July 1912 (received on the 12th July), urges Muhammadans to give up the dangerous and extravagant habit of discharging fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

Fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

ZIA-UL-ISLAM, 1st July 1912.

82. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 9th July 1912 (received on the 13th July), takes exception to the efforts made by some Muhammadans of Lahore to stop the display of fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat, and says that Muhammadans should continue the practice of discharging fireworks in order to preserve their martial spirit. The editor expresses regret that the Muhammadans of India are growing effeminate, seeing that they have given up taking part in manly sports, and deprecates the idea of compelling the Muhammadans by law to cease to discharge fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat.

Fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-barat festival.

AL BASHIR, 9th July 1912.

83. A correspondent, who signs himself "J. MCINTOSH," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 11th July 1912, in which he refers to an article which appeared in the Leader of the 2nd June 1912, in which it was said that it was "highly unjust that money raised from Hindus and Moslems should be devoted to the maintenance of organizations of alien faith" (vide Selections No. 23, paragraph 62), and asserts that the amount spent by the Government of India in aid of the Christian church was nothing compared with the large sum drawn from Christian sources in taxes and duties.

LEADER, 11th July 1912.

The editor states that while the non-Christians also contribute to the revenues of the Government of India, there are no State establishments in connection with their religion, and asserts that this is a clear case of unequal treatment.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, July 1912.

1. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for July 1912, contains an article by R. G. Pradhan, B.A., LL.B., M.R.A.S., in which the writer invites the attention of Indians to the strenuous efforts made by the Japanese to remove all internal evils and abuses before they sought to compete with the great Powers, and to the marked use they made of literature as an instrument of national education and enlightenment. He observes that if Japan had not awakened to the needs of the time when the European Powers sought intercourse with her, she would, in all probability, have met the same fate as India. He states that as soon as Japan realized the necessity for self-improvement, she abandoned old usages and customs, and sought knowledge throughout the world, with the result that the maladies that afflicted the nation were speedily eradicated. He describes the reforms effected in Japan in a surprisingly short time, and remarks that though Government is to some extent to blame for the slow progress of India, Indians are still more to blame themselves. He states that though Indians clamour for political reforms whenever social legislation is undertaken by the Government of India, they raise the cry that their religion is in danger, and he says that the bane of India is not so much the alien character of her government as her utter conservatism, her supreme vanity and her utter lack of the spirit of progress and union.

The reform movement in Japan and the progress of India.

He admits that there can be some political progress even before all social evils are removed, but observes that there are certain political institutions and conditions which imply a certain social and moral order and cannot be successfully and permanently established without the previous existence of that order.

He remarks that a one-sided and pessimistic view of life, the general ignorance of the masses, caste, early marriage, the low position of women, and priestly domination have sapped the life of the people and greatly impaired their capacity for progress, and he urges that these evils should be removed if India is to be renovated and is to attain a worthy place in the great federation of nations.

He warns Indians that their social backwardness will always be urged by the opponents of their political progress as a disqualification for self-government.

He denies that immediately after the reorganization of the Indian social system, the British Government will grant self-government to India, but says that the fitness of Indians for self-government will command the sympathy and the moral support of the civilized world for the Indian political movement, and that the persistent efforts of Indians themselves will eventually lead to the grant of self-government.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

2. Referring to the list of the contributions made by the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, to the Turkish relief fund, published in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 10th July 1912 (vide Selections No. 29, paragraph 5), the editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), in the issue of the 17th July 1912, says that the Muhammadan community should be grateful to Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk for infusing this patriotic spirit among the students. He observes that the growth of this new spirit augurs well for the future of the community, and he appeals to Muhammadan youths, who do not belong to the Aligarh College, to curtail their expenses, and to contribute liberally for the help of their brave brethren who are shedding their blood for the defence of their country and religion.

MASHRIQ, 16th July 1912.

3. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), asks the British Government to demand from the Government of Russia an account of the property that Russian soldiers took away from the shrine of Imam Raza at Meshed. The editor says that the Anglo-Russian Convention was not made with a view to giving Russia a free hand in Persia, and he expresses the hope that England will break her alliance with Russia, and that she will devise measures to put a stop to further Russian aggression and tyranny in Persia.

The situation in Persia.

MASHRIQ, 16th July 1912.

4. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), discusses the question of the balance of power in Europe, and remarks that it is all a farce in that every European country is secretly trying to gain as much power and to acquire as much territory as possible.

The balance of power in Europe.

The editor says that Russia is trying to gain the friendship of Germany in order to divide the Asiatic countries between the two countries. He goes on to say that if an alliance between Russia and Germany is effected, the Near East will become an easy prey to them and the safety of India and Afghanistan will also be jeopardized. He advises England to make an alliance with Turkey and so gain the sympathy and co-operation of the Islamic world. He states that the naval power of England will prove of no avail against the concerted military array of Russia and Germany.

He asks the British Government to be more watchful and to keep her position strong in the present political grouping of the Powers.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

5. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 17th July 1912, invites attention to the unjust occupation of Morocco by France, and urges Indian Muhammadans to hold meetings to express their feelings of disgust and indignation at the action of France.

Boycott of French goods.

The editor urges Indian Muhammadans to boycott French goods.

TRISHUL, 17th July 1912.

6. A correspondent, who signs himself "BHOLA NATH VIDYASHRANI," contributes an article under the heading "The present adversity and its remedy" to the Trishul (Benares), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 24th July), in which he deplores the present state of India. He says that India, which was once a wealthy country, has now become so poor that her people are obliged to be slaves to obtain their daily bread, and that the country which once dispelled the darkness of ignorance of other countries is now generally ignored in intellectual matters. The writer ascribes the downfall of India to the irreligiousness of the people and to the neglect of hereditary professions. He urges Hindus to follow the professions prescribed for them, and to reform society at any cost.

The present adversity of India and its remedy.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, July 1912.

The West and the East: in special relation to the progress of British India.

He suggests that in order to control social and religious practices the Legislature should be fully representative of all classes, and should be entirely independent of extraneous control. He advocates for this purpose special class representation, and observes that the British element in the Provincial Legislative Councils should abstain from throwing its weight on the balance in matters of purely Indian, social and religious reforms. He admits that a conflict of interests as between the various Indian elements themselves, and particularly as between the British and Indian factors, may arise, but he expresses the hope that the progress of the Indian nation, in spite of certain reverses, will prove fairly steady, though slow.

With regard to the relations between the British and Indian elements of the community and the difference between the West and the East, he asserts that this difference is but a mere accident, the result of fuller development of certain active qualities in the West. He observes that the West despises the East because the same standard of judgment does not prevail in the West and the East, and that the West considers its standard to be the very highest to judge humanity by. He insists that the West should try to understand the spirituality of the East and should develop true sympathy with it. He points out that while the West advertises its excellent qualities, the East seeks to cover up its beauty under the veil of modesty, and would rather allow its blemishes than its excellences to meet the stranger's gaze. He remarks that while the West puts its faith in the laws of man, and in the endeavour to attain success in life would hardly feel much scruple in circumventing the laws of God, the East puts its faith in the laws of God, and in her quest of a living would show little or no scruple to violate the laws of man. He says that while the Westerner regards success in life as his all in all, the Oriental considers this life as a means of preparation for the next, and hence he deduces the greater efficiency of the West and the greater dignity of the East. He concludes by observing that the West cannot properly understand the East unless it constantly keeps this divergence of ideals in view.

The British Government and the Indian Empire.

8. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), takes exception to the views expressed by Mr. Skepton in the Empire Review (London), to the effect that the continuance of the British Government in India depends on the support of the English-speaking domiciled races in India, and observes that such remarks are calculated to make one community unduly proud and the other unnecessarily dejected. MASHRIQ, 16th July 1912.

The editor asserts that almost every Indian is sincerely loyal to the British Government, and he suggests that Indians should be given military training and that capable Indians should be advanced to high military rank.

He says that if ten crores of Indians out of a population of thirty-two crores are given military training, the Government of India will no longer feel bound to look to England for help for the defence of India.

He says that even in the event of a change of government there will be no chaos in the country, and that Indians by mutual understanding will be able to make proper arrangements for the administration of the country.

British rule in India.

9. Mr. Hamid Ali Khan of Lucknow contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 19th July 1912, in which he makes some suggestions for popularizing British rule in India. After stating that he has attempted to popularize British rule in India by circulating poems intended to impress upon Indians the benefits of British rule, he asserts that in order to attain this object it is also necessary to bring the wrongs and grievances of Indians to the notice of Government, and to endeavour to obtain their redress. LEADER, 19th July 1912.

He says that bitter feelings are excited among Indians by their treatment at the hands of Anglo-Indians, and he refuses to believe that Anglo-Indians run the risk of losing their respect and prestige and of becoming less successful in their official work by cultivating more genial relations with Indians. He gives instances of Anglo-Indians who have been successful in their official careers while they have cultivated satisfactory relations with Indians, but he admits that while Indians keep their ladies in parda, they cannot expect Englishmen to admit them to the society of their ladies. He urges that an Englishman should accord to an Indian gentleman the same treatment that one gentleman accords to another, and he says that the attitude of Englishmen towards Indians is responsible for the introduction of an expensive and inconvenient style of dress among the latter as they adopt it under the impression that they will command respect and will not be subjected to insult when dressed as Europeans. He complains of the lack of sympathy shown by present-day Anglo-Indian officials towards Indian aspirations, though he admits that the Anglo-Indians of the present day are not destitute of the quality of sympathy. He asserts however that they do not evince it as often as the Anglo-Indians of former days did, and he consider that the result has been estrangement and want of confidence between the rulers and the ruled. He says that the Anglo-Indian of the present day takes a wrong view of the character of Indians because he has less opportunities of observing Indians who are outside the class of service-seekers or title-hunters.

He invites attention to the difficulty experienced by poor people in presenting petitions to the higher authorities, and suggests that the authorities should be more accessible to the people and more considerate of their needs.

LEADER, 25th July 1912.

How to popularize the British Government in India.

10. Mr. Iswar Saran contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th July 1912, in which he asserts that the continuance of British rule in India is essential for the progress of the country, and says that it is absurd to suppose that any intelligent Indian can be disloyal to the British Government. He, however, expresses regret that servility is taken to imply loyalty and that manliness is treated as a sign of disloyalty, and he remarks that it will be a happy day for India when Indians as well as Europeans regard patriotism and loyalty as convertible terms.

With regard to the question of the treatment of Indians by Englishmen, he remarks that the future progress of the country depends in a large measure on the right adjustment of the relations between the two communities, and he notes that the writings of Indians cannot be expected to throw much light on the subject as they do not dare to express themselves candidly. He states that while the white races are in the van of progress most of the coloured races are either retrograding or are progressing only very slowly and fitfully. He goes on to say that while the imperious Englishman possesses all the power, the Indian masses, leaving aside the microscopic educated minority, are steeped in ignorance, poverty and superstition and are wanting in the qualities of virility and manhood which alone extort the respect of Westerners. He expresses gratification at the fact that Englishmen are beginning to understand Indian civilization, and that Indians are also making some progress, and he expresses the hope that a time will come when Englishmen and Indians will treat each other on equal terms as subjects of the Crown.

He admires those Englishmen who treat Indians as friends and equals, but asserts that social intercourse between the two communities is impossible.

In conclusion he says that the poor ryot will be satisfied if he gets his two meals a day, whilst the educated will not be contented unless they are permitted to enjoy the full rights of British citizenship.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 17th July 1912.

Lala Har Dayal on modern civilization.

11. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), publishes a translation of an article entitled "What the world wants: a glance at the dreadful condition of the modern civilized world," contributed by Lala Har Dayal to the Open Court in which he denounces the exclusively materialistic tendencies of the modern civilized world, and points out that the future salvation of humanity lies in self-renunciation and in endeavouring to attain to high spiritual ideals.

ABHYUDAYA, 18th July 1912.

Treatment of Indians in the colonies.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), in the course of a long article discusses the ethics of the ill-treatment of one race by another and invites attention to the indignities to which Indians are subjected in the colonies. The editor admits that the colonists are perfectly justified in trying to oust Indians in order to safeguard their own interests, but he complains that they go to extremes in trying to achieve their purpose. He asserts that the colonists can, without any prejudice to their interests, easily afford to be a little more lenient to Indians, and he remarks that if the Indians were a self-governing people, they would show the colonists that they could retaliate for the wrongs done to their countrymen in the colonies. He expresses regret that the Government of India disregards the sufferings of its subjects, and observes that the only hope for Indians lies in their own efforts. He urges Indians to prove to the Government of India by their persistent agitation that they know how to defend the rights of their fellow-countrymen in foreign countries. He says that the rights of Indians in foreign countries will be properly safeguarded only when the number and powers of non-official members in the Indian Legislative Councils are increased and when colonial self-government is granted to India.

LEADER, 20th July 1912.

Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

13. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 20th July 1912, has the following:—

"We do not know why, but the announcement that Mr. Montagu has an invitation from Lord Hardinge to visit India and witness the first meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council in the new Capital, has given fresh occasion to our superior Anglo-Indian contemporaries to have some ill-mannered flings at the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for India. The Anglo-Indian papers have ever affected a supercilious dislike for Mr. Montagu. This could be for no other reason but that, unlike many another politicians in his position (Mr. Hobhouse, for instance, or Lord Emott) Mr. Montagu has dared to be sympathetic and to show courage in dealing with the affairs of India. He has given evidence of ability and knowledge and has good debating power besides. All this the Anglo-Indian press does not relish. Itself a courtier press, the organ of the permanent officials and of the exploiting merchants who do not make their home in India, the Anglo-Indian press would have preferred Mr. Montagu to be a dummy Under Secretary crossing the t's and dotting the i's of Sir John David Rees, and then it would have written of him in terms of endearment. As he has however elected to be a statesman with an individuality of his own and with broad progressive sympathies, he must be made light of and ridiculed . . .

On behalf of the Indian community we may assure Mr. Montagu of a most cordial and respectful welcome to our country with which he has high official connection and to which he has been doing such great good."

ABHYUDAYA, 21st July 1912.

Self-government in India.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st July 1912, in its leading article entitled "Self-reliance," discusses the effects of subjection upon a conquered people, and points out that they lose all capacity for initiative in course of time and that the conquerors have to undertake the administration of their country. He observes that the defence of a large Empire like the British Empire both against internal commotion and external invasion is a very difficult task, and notes that when this fact was realized by Englishmen in the nineteenth century, the principle of self-government was recognized and Canada, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa were constituted into self-governing colonies. He says that these colonies have since been progressing rapidly and will soon be able to render efficient help to the mother country in time of emergency. He then refers to the condition of the people of India and points out that they are dependent upon others in all departments of life, that the avenues for their progress are narrow and that because of their subjection they have no opportunities for improvement and that the struggle for existence has become very hard to them. He goes on to say that terrible epidemics and ever-recurring famines have imperilled their lives, and that they are incapable of maintaining their self-respect, with the result that they are trampled down like beasts. He observes that the reason of this undesirable state of affairs is that they have not been taught the lessons of self-help and self-reliance. He affirms that such an indigent, distressed, and disarmed people are not only of no use to their own nation and country but are absolutely incapable of rendering any substantial help to the British Government in the hour of emergency.

He says that the problem of the defence of India is becoming complex every day, and is of paramount importance in all the political and international problems which at present confront the British Government.

He expresses the opinion that if the Indians had been taught to be self-reliant by the grant of self-government, the British Government would not have felt concerned for the defence of India at the development of rival Powers like Germany and Russia, and that if loyal Indians had been made civilized citizens of the British Empire, they would have helped it in every possible way. He says that the British Government could have during its one hundred and fifty years of rule in India made Indians the strongest supporters of its Empire by diffusing higher education among them and by granting them political rights. He remarks that such a policy would have made the name of the British Government famous throughout the world, and would have removed all grounds for anxiety regarding the protection of the Empire.

He says that Mr. P. C. Roy in his recent speech in England truly voiced the sentiments of Indians when he declared that the one and sole goal of all Indians was the attainment of self-government on colonial lines. He expresses the opinion that it is very desirable and expedient that their loyalty should be strengthened by fulfilling this long cherished desire of theirs at an early date, but he deplores the fact that Lord Crewe, the Secretary of State for India, is still not prepared to recognize the claims of the people of India to administer their own country.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy and the new Capital of India.

15. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), expresses approval of the frank statement of Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy, and remarks that His Lordship's statement will not deter Indian leaders from making efforts to realize their legitimate aspirations. The editor objects to the transfer of the Capital to Delhi on the ground that Delhi is associated with the rise and fall of several Empires, and he says that the frank expression of his opinion on the subject will not be resented. He however expresses the hope that in the case of its British rulers the new Capital of India at Delhi will not witness the overthrow of the reigning dynasty, and he warns Government to take a lesson from the old ruins of the place, and to remember the fact that the king is like a tree while his subjects are the root.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 17th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

16. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), refers to the comments made by the Aligarh Institute Gazette (vide Selections No. 28, paragraph 16), on Lord Crewe's statement on Indian autonomy, and remarks that whatever may be the political differences between Indian Muhammadans and other communities they too advocate the grant of self-government to India. The editor observes that the Italian-Turkish war seems to have changed the views of Muhammadans as the leading journal of the community appears to have struck a note of independence in criticising Lord Crewe's speech so freely.

AL MUSHIR, 18th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

17. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), refers to Lord Crewe's statement on Indian autonomy, and remarks that the idea that Indians are quite incapable of carrying on the administration of their country and that they will ever remain so is a serious attack on the intellectual capabilities of Indians.

The editor says that the statement of Lord Crewe has been received by Indians with pained surprise, and he observes that it would have been better if the Secretary of State for India could have explained the necessary qualifications for self-government.

KAISER-I-HIND, 18th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

18. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), expresses regret that Lord Crewe has, by his recent pronouncement on Indian autonomy, shattered all the hopes raised in the hearts of Indians in regard to the political future of India.

The editor says that His Lordship by his statement not only under-estimated the intellectual capacity of Indians, but has also cast a slur on the fair name of England as regards the uplifting of backward races.

He calls attention to the opposition raised throughout India against Lord Crewe's pronouncement, and remarks that if the statement had been made by His Lordship in his private capacity it would not have caused such widespread disappointment to the public.

He admits that for the present Indians are not fit for self-government, but contends that Lord Crewe was not justified in going further and asserting that the colonial form of self-government was an impossible ideal for India.

He asserts that all classes of Indians are desirous of self-government, and expresses the hope that the time is not far distant when they will prove themselves fit for it.

He says that Indians do not demand self-government for the present, but that they wish to be afforded opportunities of acquiring the necessary training for it.

He adds that it should not be very difficult for Indians to get self-government, when they have secured local self-government and the reformed councils.

He says that Indians will, in the course of time, prove themselves able to administer the affairs of their country, and remarks that when that auspicious moment arrives, Lord Crewe will be proved a false prophet.

19. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th July 1912, takes exception to the pronouncement of Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy, and remarks that His Lordship's statement is only an expression of his private opinion, and that it cannot be regarded as an expression of the views of Government. The editor refers to the Royal Proclamations of the late Queen Victoria and of His late Majesty King Edward the VII in which promises were made to Indians that they would be given their rights and privileges when they proved themselves fit for them, and he remarks that the delay in the conferment of the rights is due only to the incapacity of Indians, and that as soon as they will prove their ability to carry on the administration of their country Government will grant them self-government.

OUDH AKHBAR, 24th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

20. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), publishes a contributed article by the pen of a "WELL-INFORMED AND EDUCATED MUHAMMADAN," in which the writer expresses regret at the dearth of public men amongst the Muhammadans, and at the apathy of capable Muhammadans as regards public movements.

MASHRIQ, 16th July 1912.

The coming council elections.

He supports the candidature of the Hon'ble Raja Sir Ali Muhammad Khan Bahadur for the membership of the Imperial Legislative Council on the ground that he will be better able to explain and discuss the university bill which has been prepared under his direct supervision.

He also supports the candidature of the Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid for the membership of the local Council, and warns the Muhammadans against the dangers of sending an inexperienced and irrational man to the Council.

He expresses appreciation of the work done by the Hon'ble Raja Sir Tassadduq Rasul Khan in the Council in connection with the Court of Wards Act, and urges the constituents of the Fyzabad division to return him to the Council again.

He expresses regret that the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan is not inclined to seek re-election, and urges Nawab Muzammil-ullah Khan to offer himself as a candidate in his place.

He asks the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand division to send a capable Muhammadan as their representative to the local Council, a man who will be loyal to Government, who will keep himself aloof from movements calculated to estrange the feelings of Hindus and Muhammadans, and who will also be patriotic and be in a position to devote his whole time to performing his public duties.

He expresses great admiration for the work done by the Hon'ble Munshi Ganga Prasad Varma as a councillor, and urges the Muhammadan members of the Council to do their work with zeal and energy.

21. A correspondent, who signs himself "A RADICAL FROM BHOPAL," contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), in which he states that though Government has introduced the non-official element into the Legislative Councils in order to ascertain public opinion, the Muhammadan councillors do not represent the views of their community. He asserts that almost all the Muhammadan representatives are weak-minded flatterers, and that they seek election in order to enhance their respect in the eyes of the public and Government, to be called honourables and to be invited to dinners and parties.

KAISER-I-HIND, 18th July 1912.

The coming council elections.

He asserts that the voters are generally rich people who are either title-holders or have been demoralized by the influence of European society, and says that representatives elected by such voters cannot possibly have any knowledge of the genuine needs of the Muhammadans. He observes that the Muhammadan members do not take any interest in council work and are a disgrace to their community.

He urges a radical change in the system of election, and suggests that a circular should be issued to Muhammadan voters asking them to take the opinion of the Muhammadan public about proposed candidates. He says that in case public opinion is found to be against the election of any particular candidate his election should be declared null and void.

22. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), lends its support to the candidature of Mr. Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B., for the membership of the local Legislative Council as a representative of the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions, and says that Mr. Raza Ali is the best available person to represent them. The editor invites attention of the Muhammadan constituents to the appeal published by Kazi Muhammad Shaukat Husain and others, and expresses the hope that they will return Mr. Raza Ali to the Council.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st July 1912.

The coming council elections.

23. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st July 1912, takes exception to the publication of the appeal in support of Mr. Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B.'s candidature for the membership of the local Legislative Council as the representative of the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions, and remarks that a man who holds no substantial views on the political policy of the Muhammadans and who begs an Anglo-Indian paper to enlighten him on the subject cannot be a fit representative of the Muhammadans in the Council.

With regard to Khan Bahadur Saiyid Asghar Ali, the editor says that having little time at his disposal he did not do any useful work in the Council and so the editor advises him to retire.

He adds that the Khan Bahadur holds political views of the Congress school, and that he cannot conscientiously discharge his duties as a representative of the Muhammadans. He lends his support to the candidature of Mr. Riyaz-ud-din, B.A., LL.B., of Shahjahanpur, and remarks that he is a man of sound views and vast knowledge, that he belongs to an ancient and respectable family and is the most suitable person to represent the Muhammadans of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun divisions.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st July 1912.

The coming council elections.

24. The Agra Akhbar of the 21st July 1912 lends its support to the candidature of the Hon'ble Saiyid Al-i-Nabi, B.A., LL.B., for the membership of the local Council as a representative of the Muhammadans of the Agra and Meerut divisions.

The editor objects to the election of Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain to the local Council on the ground that he is a self-willed and obstinate person, and he urges the Muhammadans of the Agra and Meerut divisions to recognize the merits of the Hon'ble Saiyid Al-i-Nabi and to return him to the Council as their representative.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

The political progress of Muhammadans.

25. A correspondent, who signs himself "MUHAMMAD AHSAN HUSAIN," contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 17th July 1912, in which he traces the growth and progress of political feeling among Muhammadans from the time of Sir Saiyid and the Hindi-Urdu controversy, and asserts that the Muslim League has not been successful in effecting any considerable improvement in the political life of the community.

He states that when the Muhammadan deputation waited on Lord Minto, a meeting of Muhammadan leaders from all parts of the country had been convened to determine the policy of the community, and that, in view of the altered situation, which has been created by the Darbar changes, another similar meeting should be held in order to enunciate the future political programme of the Muhammadans. He asserts that the Muslim League does not now enjoy public confidence, and suggests that its present constitution should be changed in order to avoid a split among the leading members of the community.

He appeals to the present office holders to resign their offices and to hold a thoroughly representative meeting of Muhammadan leaders, which should define the new policy of the League and should elect new office holders.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

RAHBAR, 14th July 1912.

The Privy Council's decision in Mr. Clarke's appeal in the Mymensingh case.

26. Referring to the decision of the Privy Council in Mr. Clarke's appeal in the Mymensingh case, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), says that Mr. Clarke deserves no compensation, seeing that the expenses of his case have been borne by Government. The editor states that Dinesh Chandra Sen, one of the accused in the Dacca conspiracy case, was discharged after being in custody for about eight months, as Government did not want to prosecute him, and he suggests that some member should put a question in the Council regarding his receiving compensation.

The Privy Council's decision in Mr. Clarke's appeal in the Mymensingh case.

27. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 25th July 1912, has the following:— LEADER, 25th July 1912.

"It is really too much of a good thing, this cry for an enquiry into what is called the breakdown of the judicial system in India, based on no higher ground than that the Privy Council in its wisdom thought it right to reverse the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Mr. Clarke. If there is a failure of justice, it has occurred when the Privy Council reversed the High Court's judgment and not when Their Lordships of the High Court awarded damages against Mr. Clarke. Let there be an enquiry into the administration of justice; we shall not object, nay, we shall welcome it if the enquiry be conducted by an impartial Commission for then we may hope for the long-looked-for and too long postponed separation of judicial from executive functions, and the recruitment of the judiciary mainly from the ranks of the legal profession—two reforms which will result in an immense improvement in the administration of justice."

The Calcutta High Court.

28. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), expresses gratification at the celebration of the jubilee of the Calcutta High Court, and says that this Court has always enjoyed the confidence of the public for its justice and independence. The editor remarks that during the years of unrest the Calcutta High Court did its best to reassure the public mind by its impartial and independent findings. SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 17th July 1912.

The subordinate judicial and executive services.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st July 1912, expresses gratification at the decision of the Government to appoint a Public Service Commission, and invites attention to the slowness of promotion among the executive and judicial branches of the Provincial Service. The editor says that it will cause great disappointment if the reorganization of these branches of the service is postponed on account of the appointment of a Royal Commission. He states that a reference to the latest civil list of the United Provinces will reveal a sad state of affairs and demonstrate the extreme slowness of promotion in the executive and judicial branches of the Provincial Service. He complains of the injustice of giving yearly increments to men in the Engineering, Telegraph, Customs and Survey Departments of the Provincial Service, while the members of the judicial and executive branches of the service are to be condemned to the slow method of promotion until the recommendations of the proposed Royal Commission are given effect to. He asserts that it will take a long time before the Royal Commission makes its report and a still longer time before its recommendations are given effect to, and suggests that the time-scale pay system should be immediately introduced in the judicial and executive branches of the service. ADVOCATE, 21st July 1912.

Separate electorates.

30. The Lucknow Gazette of the 15th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), urges the extension of separate electorates to municipal and district boards in order to safeguard the interests of the Muhammadan community. The editor ridicules the objection that the extension of separate electorates would widen the cleavage between Hindus and Muhammadans. He asserts that Muhammadans do not get adequate representation under the present system, and that those who are elected by the mixed electorates do not represent the views of the Muhammadan community. He invites attention to the resolution of the Allahabad District Muslim League that the Muhammadans of Allahabad would have nothing to do with LUCKNOW GAZETTE, 15th July 1912.

municipal and district boards if separate electorates were not extended to them. He appeals to the Muhammadan associations of these provinces to continue their agitation until separate electorates for local bodies are granted by Government.

ADVOCATE, 18th July 1912.

Municipal engineers.

31. Referring to the letter addressed by the Lieutenant Governor to the Commissioner of Allahabad on the breakdown of the water works engines at Allahabad, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 18th July 1912, says that the censure ought to be taken as a warning, and urges that not only the Allahabad Municipal Board but also other boards should set their houses in order. The editor invites attention to the fact that the civilian chairmen and members of municipal boards know nothing about engines, and asserts that affairs would not have come to such a pass if the engine drivers and superintendent of the Allahabad water works had been properly qualified and competent men. He urges the necessity for making suitable arrangements for the supply of mechanical engineers, and suggests that, until the opening of the Cawnpure Technical College, the boards should combine in maintaining at least two apprentice Indian mechanical engineers of the Roorkee College every year in large firms at Bombay and Calcutta for practical training. He insists that the water works service should be organized in the same manner as the health department, and states that the Chief Engineer and Sanitary Engineer, not being experts in mechanical engineering, do not possess the necessary qualifications for controlling mechanical engineers. In conclusion he suggests that the Sanitary Engineer should have an expert mechanical engineer under him who should examine all new mechanical and electrical schemes.

BHARAT JIWAN, 15th July 1912.

The Benares Municipality.

32. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 15th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), complains of defective lighting in Benares and of the deplorable condition of several roads and lanes of the city. The editor invites special attention to the Dal-ki-Mandi road, the Sapta Sagar lane, the Qazipura road and the lanes of Hankar Tola, Kachouri Gali and Nepali Khapra, and says that they have become dangerous to human traffic partly through the accumulation of mud and partly through the breaking of the stone slabs with which some of them are paved. He adds that the Kashipura road west of the Bula Nala crossing and the road leading from Machharhatta to Karnaghanta also demand immediate attention. He observes that the municipality should show the same alertness in removing the grievances of the rate-payers as it does in collecting taxes from them. He reminds the Health Officer that the public health of the locality cannot be preserved when the municipality does not properly look after the cleanliness of lanes and roads, and he urges that immediate action is called for in this direction.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd July 1912.

The Gorakhpur Municipality.

33. The Hindustani (Gorakhpur), of the 22nd July 1912, publishes two contributed articles on the mismanagement of the Gorakhpur Municipality.

In the first article the writer invites attention to the bad condition of the roads, and attributes it to the dishonesty of the contractors who mix earth with the concrete. He suggests that a member of the municipal board should be entrusted with the supervision of the repairs of roads. He complains of the general uncleanliness of the city, and says that it is due to the carelessness of the members who have been entrusted with the supervision of conservancy work.

In the second letter the writer invites the attention of Government to the vexatious rules about obtaining permission for making petty alterations to houses. He also complains of the rule requiring that when a demolished building is rebuilt the new foundation shall be removed backwards to a distance of at least six feet from the old foundation. He asserts that the municipal board has been guilty of gross neglect in the matter of cleanliness, and urges that all the drains and roads should be metalled. He also suggests the construction of ekka stands in Urdu Bazar.

TAFRIH, 21st July 1912.

The segregation of prostitutes.

34. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st July 1912, publishes three contributed articles on the subject of the segregation of prostitutes in Lucknow.

In the first article the writer invites the attention of the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow to the demoralizing effects of the presence of prostitutes in places of public resort, and appeals to him to save the young men of the city from ruin by segregating prostitutes. He invites attention to the fact that certain municipalities have taken steps in this direction, and states that a largely-signed petition on the subject will shortly be submitted to the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow.

In the second article the writer says that it is a mistake to think that the segregation of prostitutes would embolden persons who did not dare visit them in places of public resort, and he asserts that evil-minded persons would not be restrained from immoral actions by fear of publicity.

In the third article the writer affirms that there would be no loss to trade through the segregation of prostitutes, and remarks that there is no justification for showing any sympathy with moral lepers like prostitutes.

35. A correspondent, who signs himself "BHAIRAV SINGH VARMA," contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st July 1912, in which he says that prostitutes occupying prominent quarters in the central places of the Allahabad city constitute a serious danger to public morality, and asks the citizens to urge upon the municipality the necessity for segregating them in sequestered places.

36. The Lucknow Gazette of the 15th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), expresses regret that the claims of seventy millions of Indian Muhammadans have been overlooked, and that out of ten State scholarships granted to Indian students proceeding to foreign countries for technical education, not even one has been awarded to a Muhammadan. The editor says that the Muhammadan leaders should have represented to Government the claims of Muhammadan students before the scholarships were awarded, and he urges them to keep the claims of their community constantly before Government.

LUCKNOW GAZETTE, 15th July 1912.

State technical scholarships.

37. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th July 1912, says that the Dacca University should not be made a residential university, but that it should be given the power of affiliating other colleges and schools.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th July 1912.

The Dacca University.

The editor asserts that a residential university would be of no use to Muhammadans, and urges Government not to be influenced by the Hindu opposition to the Dacca University scheme.

38. The Agra Akhbar of the 21st July 1912 takes exception to the order issued by the Principal of the Agra Medical School prohibiting the students from subscribing to any Muhammadan newspapers.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st July 1912.

The Agra Medical School.

The editor fails to understand why papers like the Comrade (Calcutta), the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore) and the Review of Religions (Qadian), should be prohibited while Hindu papers like the Leader (Allahabad), the Tribune (Lahore) and the Indian Review (Madras) should be taken in by the medical students.

He says that the Principal of the Medical school has only recently taken charge of the school, and that he has no experience of Hindu and Muhammadan papers. He accordingly holds the Hindu professors of the school responsible for the order issued by the Principal with regard to the prohibition of Muhammadan newspapers.

He also complains that a professor of the school while lecturing recently made some adverse remarks about the Muhammadans, stating that rape cases were very common amongst them, because they ate flesh which acted as a stimulent.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and asks the professor to avoid making any such remarks in future. In conclusion he urges the need for appointing an equal number of Hindu and Muhammadan professors in the Medical school.

39. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th July 1912, refers to the letter addressed by Sir George Clarke to the Bombay University with regard to the measures to be introduced for the development of the University as a teaching institution and for the improvement of the inspection of affiliated colleges, and expresses approval of the suggestion to bring out from Great Britian scholars of accepted authority to deliver a course of lectures at Bombay and Poona during the cold weather. The editor commends the proposal to improve the central university library and to send out to Europe a well-qualified Indian graduate for special training in library work with a view to his appointment as university librarian. He expresses doubt as to whether it would be wise to requisition for two years the services of an expert from the London Board of Education, and suggests that a qualified Indian educationist should be deputed to Europe and America to study the working of universities in those countries. With regard to the establishment of university chairs for higher teaching in special subjects, he urges that Indian professors of distinction should not be neglected in favour of English scholars, and insists that the advancement of high education in the country should rest mainly with the children of the soil.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

40. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 21st July 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the statement made by the president of the Muslim University committee to the effect that the criticisms made by the public on the constitution of the University were premature, and remarks that when the constitution was published in order to invite public criticism any criticism made cannot be called premature.

He admits that reasonable control by Government in the management of the Aligarh College is necessary, but objects to the Muslim University becoming a State University.

He enquires whether the Viceroy intimated to the members of the committee his desire to be appointed Chancellor of the University or whether they decided without consulting the public to appoint His Excellency the Chancellor. He urges the members of the constitution committee to make alterations in the constitution according to popular desires, and observes that if the establishment of the Muslim University according to the ideals of the Muham madans is impossible the subscriptions realized should be refunded to the donors.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University.

41. Khawja Ghulam-us-Saqlain, B.A. LL.B., of Meerut, contributes an article to the Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st July 1912, in response to Nawab Mushtaq Husain's reply to his article entitled "Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk Bahadur and the drama of the Muslim University" (vide Selections No. 27, paragraphs 41 and 42), in which he refers to his previous observations about the resignation of Nawab Mushtaq Husain from the post of general superintendent in the Collector's office, Aligarh, and about the support given to Nawab Mushtaq Husain by the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan, and states that his remarks were based on the authority of Sir Saiyid's private letters and biography, the "Hayat Javed."

With regard to the question of his election as a trustee of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, he says that he himself withdrew his name from the list of the candidates for the trusteeship, seeing that a man of firm convictions and strong character had no hope of being ever elected. He urges the organizers of the Muslim University scheme to carry on their agitation in England till the power of affiliation of other colleges, besides the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, is granted to the Muslim University, and observes that, in case the power of affiliation is not granted the money realized for the purpose should not be wasted in establishing a nominal university.

Referring to the desire expressed by Nawab Mushtaq Husain that he (Ghulam-us-Saqlain) should help in the realization of the funds for the proposed University, he expresses his inability to do so on the ground that he has no faith in the patriotism and sincerity of the organizers of the University scheme.

ADVOCATE, 21st July 1912.

The scope of the proposed Hindu and Muslim universities.

42. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st July 1912, has the following:—

"The following communiqué has been issued: 'It has been finally decided that the educational scope of a university at Aligarh or Benares should be limited to the locality in which it may be established.' The communiqué must have been read throughout the country with feelings of keen disappointment and regret. No reason has been given why the Government of India has resolved definitely to adopt such an attitude which vitally affects the scope of usefulness of the Hindu and Muhammadan universities without consulting the promoters of the schemes. If the examiners of the universities at Aligarh and Benares will be competent enough to keep control over four or eight colleges in one centre, why should they be considered incompetent to examine students of colleges situated, say, at a distance of fifty miles from them? Why should the universities be not permitted to have colleges at more than one centre? We hope that the Government will yet keep an open mind on the subject, and if the Hindus and Muhammadans are able to convince that the universities at Aligarh and Benares are likely to be more useful if they are allowed to affiliate colleges outside Aligarh or Benares, we hope that it will reconsider its decision and graciously accede to the wishes of the two communities."

43. Referring to the article supporting the appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain as secretary of the Aligarh College, that appeared in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (vide Selections No. 29, paragraph 54), the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th July 1912, asserts that the question of the appointment of a secretary has been before the public for the last twelve months, and that Nawab Mushtaq Husain has proposed the name of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan after careful consideration. The editor says that there are a number of Shiah trustees and that they are welcome to propose any names they choose, and remarks that it would be unwise to make the secretaryship of the college a Shiah-Sunni question.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM 19th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

He states that though the name of Mr. Karamat Husain was proposed several times for the trusteeship of the college, he allowed his name to be put forward only last March and even that under certain conditions. He goes on to say that Mr. Karamat Husain deserves the gratitude of the country for his munificent gift to the Crosthwaite Girls' School at Allahabad, but regrets to have to record the fact that Mr. Karamat Husain has rendered no help to the cause of Muhammadan education or of the Muslim University so far. He asserts that in these circumstances Mr. Karamat Husain does not deserve to be made secretary of the Aligarh College.

44. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), takes exception to the criticism made by some people that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan is weak-minded and superstitious, and that therefore he should not be appointed as secretary of the Aligarh College. The editor remarks that in considering the merits of a candidate for the secretaryship his personal beliefs should not be questioned, seeing that the first two secretaries of the college held religious views that were at variance with those of the general Muhammadan public.

AL BASHIR, 16th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

He further says that the candidate for the post should be an unprejudiced Muhammadan who should always be prepared to help his co-religionists without regard to sect.

He lends his support to the candidature of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship, and remarks that he is in every way qualified for the post.

45. A correspondent who signs himself "MAZHAR-UL-HAQ, OF RUDAULI, NAIB RIASAT (ASSISTANT MANAGER), USMANPUR," contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), in which he takes exception to Mr. Abdul Wadood's observations made in his letter that appeared in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 3rd July (vide Selections No. 28, paragraph 29), with regard to Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan's belief in religious matters.

MASHRIQ, 16th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

He also objects to Mr. Abdul Wadood's calling the religious leaders of the Muhammadans a group of false pretenders and cheats.

He asks Mr. Wadood and his supporters to cease making such objectionable remarks, as otherwise the Muhammadans will no longer trust the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College and will cease contributing to its funds and subscribing for the proposed university.

He supports the candidature of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and remarks that if he is not appointed on the ground of his orthodoxy, the Muhammadan public will have just cause to say that the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College has become the home of athiests and agnostics.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

46. A correspondent who signs himself "ABDUL WADOOD FROM BAREILLY," contributes the second instalment of his article entitled "The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh" (vide Selections No. 28, paragraph 29) to the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), in which he disclaims any intention of introducing a religious or sectarian element into the discussion about the secretaryship. He asserts that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan's weak-mindedness and superstitious nature unfit him for the post of the secretary of the college. He objects to limiting the sphere of selection for the secretaryship of the Aligarh College to rich men, and says that, in case a suitable man is not available among the richer classes, the secretary should be chosen from the middle classes. He asserts that rich men are generally sensitive about their prestige, and says that it is not desirable to appoint a rich man who is wanting in moral courage, either as secretary of the Aligarh College or as Vice-Chancellor of the Muslim University.

He suggests that the Nizam and the Begam of Bhopal should be asked to make a recurring grant for the support of the secretary, and remarks that the payment of a certain remuneration would enable scholars of the middle classes to work for the college.

He says that the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan is eminently fitted by his work in the field of education to perform the duties of the secretary of the Aligarh College.

He also suggests the name of the Hon'ble Saiyid Ali Imam, who is said to have once expressed a desire to serve the college, and remarks that if he is approached he will probably be found willing to resign the Law Membership for the secretaryship of the Aligarh College. He also mentions the name of Saiyid Karamat Husain, and with regard to his qualification refers to the article that appeared in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July 1912 (vide Selections No. 29, paragraph 54).

He also suggests the names of Mr. Muhammad Ali, B.A. (Oxon) and Khwaja Ghulam-us-Saqlain, and asserts that either of them would discharge the duties of the secretary of the Aligarh College far more satisfactorily than Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan. He insists that the public should be given time to suggest more names, and that no hasty decision should be arrived at in such an important matter.

AL MUSHIR, 18th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

47. Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the observations made by Mr. Abdul Wadood of Bareilly and some other critics with regard to the nomination of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and remarks that the writers were actuated by personal motives and that they had not the good of their community in view.

He denies the allegation that Mr. Ishaq Khan is a credulous and superstitious Muhammadan, and adds that his appointment as secretary of the college is most opportune and desirable in order to check the growing irreligiousness amongst the younger generation.

He remarks that the leader of the Muhammadans should be a man of orthodox views in religious matters and should possess a tender heart so that he may be able to comprehend the troubles of his co-religionists. He says that there is no one else in the community besides Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan capable of adequately discharging the duties of the secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

48. Maulana Abdul Halim Sharar contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), in which he expresses regret at the untimely retirement of Nawab Mushtaq Husain from the secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and observes that the question of the selection of a new secretary for the college has placed the Muhammadans in a very difficult position.

He says that independence, self-sacrifice, and honesty of purpose have now ceased to exist, and that the present age is one of self-aggrandizement and vanity.

He goes on to say that the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College is no longer an educational centre but has become a resort of ambitious time-servers.

He adds that there are many who wish to become the secretary of the Aligarh College, but that there is no one willing to sacrifice his personal interests for the welfare of the community.

He takes exception to the formation of parties amongst the trustees of the college and to the determined efforts of each party to hold the affairs of the Aligarh College in its own hands.

He objects to the candidature of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan for the secretaryship of the college, and remarks that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq's name is not associated with any of the public movements started by the Muhammadans, and that he is not known to the Muhammadan public either as a benefactor or as a reformer.

He goes on to remark that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan is not altogether free from moral defects, and that it would be a great mistake to elect him secretary of the college.

He suggests Mr. Karamat Husain as the most fitted for the post of secretary, and says that he is very honest and independent, and that he will never be influenced by official pressure.

He also says that by the election of Mr. Karamat Husain as secretary, the complaint of the Shias that a Shia has not yet been appointed as secretary of the college will be removed, and remarks that it will be a great misfortune for the Muhammadans if they do not elect Mr. Karamat Husain as secretary of the college.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

49. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), in which he refers to the suggestion made in the supplement to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 10th July (vide Selections No. 29, paragraph 54), that Saiyid Karamat Husain should be elected as secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and expresses his regret that Saiyid Karamat Husain is not eligible for election as he is not a trustee of the college. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

He refutes the allegation made by the writer in the supplement to the Muslim Gazette that no efforts were made by the college authorities to find a suitable candidate for the secretaryship, and asserts that the authorities did all in their power to find a qualified person, but that having failed in their efforts they at last requested Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan to accept the post.

He remarks that the suggestion of names in the press for the secretaryship will prove of no avail unless the consent of the persons proposed is obtained beforehand, and they are formally elected trustees of the college.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

50. A correspondent who signs himself "SYED AL-AHMAD, HONORARY MAGISTRATE, AMROHA," contributes an article to the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th July 1912, in which he contends that the trustees of the Aligarh College, who represent the community, are fully authorized to appoint a secretary, and that they are not bound to consult public opinion beforehand. He says that the discussion in the press about the secretaryship is creating discord among the Muhammadans, and that some of the newspapers are trying to make the secretaryship of the Aligarh College a Shiah-Sunni question. He expresses disapproval of the suggestion that a large number of names should be proposed for the secretaryship, and that after full consideration the best man should be appointed. He says that such a procedure would lead to indulgence in personalities and mutual recriminations, and he urges Muhammadans to accept unanimously the nomination of Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th July 1912.

KAISER-I-HIND, 18th July 1912.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

51. A correspondent who signs himself "A RADICAL FROM BHOPAL," contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), in which he asserts that the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, has not been in good condition since the death of Sir Saiyid, and expresses regret that its management is now going to be handed over to Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan, who has never shown any interest in educational work and who has always been under the influence of Europeans.

He attributes the resignation of Nawab Mushtaq Husain to the undesirable activities of the joint secretary, who expects to make Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan a tool in his hands.

He states that the joint secretary is ambitious, selfish and quarrelsome and does not want Nawab Mushtaq Husain to continue in his post, seeing that the Nawab is a strong man and the joint secretary is not able to have his own way while the Nawab is in office. He insists that the services of the present joint secretary should be dispensed with in order to save the college from ruin.

Commenting on the above the editor asserts that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq is in every way fitted for the secretaryship of the college, and says that it is a mistake to think that all government servants are flatterers and are influenced by European society. He says that Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan is the only person who has offered his services, and he urges Muhammadans to ask him unanimously to accept the secretaryship of the college.

Muhammadan students in government schools.

52. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 16th July 1912, suggests that, in view of the difficulty experienced by students in gaining admission to schools, the Muhammadan members of the Council should ask Government to allot a certain number of seats in each class of every government school to Muhammadan students. The editor says that unless some such provision is made the education of Muhammadans will suffer, and he urges Muhammadan councillors not to relax their efforts until Government grants their request.

ANAND, 18th July 1912.

The failures of the last matriculation examination.

53. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), says that as the school-leaving certificate class has been substituted for the matriculation class in several schools this year with the result that a large percentage of the students who failed at the last matriculation examination are thereby precluded from continuing their studies.

The editor urges that if accommodation cannot be found for them in the existing matriculation classes, new sections should be opened to provide room for them.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st July 1912.

The last Sanskrit examination of the Punjab University.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, July 1912.

55. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for July 1912, contains an article contributed by Shridhar V. Ketkar, M.A., Ph.D., in which he discusses the difficulties of Indian historiography, and observes that though the past history of India is replete with instances of bitter strife between Marattas, Hindus, Muhammadans and the British, a recapitulation of which would only serve to stir up enmity where peace now dwells, the suppression of historical research is not the proper method to maintain and promote good-will among races which once fought with one another. He expresses the opinion that in order to solve this difficult problem both historians and readers should be educated and efforts should be made to bring both classes to a higher level.

The difficulties of Indian historiography.

He notes that the idea as to how readers will like a plain statement of facts is one that influences the minds of most writers, and says that, in order to prevent the historian being subjected to popular eulogy or resentment, the public should be taught to revere truth, however unpalatable. He asks Indians to be willing to admit the fact when their forefathers have done any wrong, and he insists that people of the present day should not be blamed for the actions of their forefathers. He suggests that the Muhammadans, the Marattas and the British, who have been the chief aggressors in the past, should acknowledge the wrongs done by their forefathers, and should express their desire to refrain from further aggression in future. He deplores the differences between the higher and the lower castes of the Hindus, and urges that the latter should not censure the former and that men of high caste should not presume on their social position.

With regard to the duties of a historian he observes that he should not try to seek popularity by flattering the prejudices of a section of his readers, and especially those of his own caste and tribe, and he asserts that in the present age the speaking of truth has become a political necessity. He says that there is now greater danger of a falsehood being exposed, and impresses upon historians the necessity of being stringently judicial in administering praise or blame. He remarks that while writing on the misdeeds of various people no attempt should be made to cast a slur on the present members of the community, and urges that unpleasant truth should be presented in such a way as to cause the least possible ill-feeling. He complains of the anti-Indian and pro-English tone of the writings of British historians, and remarks that now that Indians and Englishmen have become fellow-subjects it will be a serious matter if one community in the Empire inveighs against another. He states that the introduction of books of a controversial nature into a school curriculum leads the public to suspect that Government is interested in impressing one side of the question only on students. Such books cause students to believe that English historians are not to be relied on and compel Indian historians to express themselves with unnecessary vehemence.

He expresses himself gratified that the English public has become more critical and anxious to learn the truth, but expresses regret that though misstatements regarding India appear too often in the English and American press, the editors show too great an unwillingness to represent the cause of India. He deplores the absence of high class English journals in India, conducted by critical scholars of Indian history for the purpose of historical research. He expresses his intention of publishing from London a series of historical monographs upon the political history of India, and suggests that all historical works in the vernacular should be translated into English until an Indian dialect is accepted as a common language in the country.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 17th July 1912.

56. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), expresses regret at the untimely death of Mr. Malabari, and remarks that India has lost one of her renowned journalists.

The death of Mr. Malabari.

The editor terms Mr. Malabari the stead of India, and says that the country has sustained an irrepairable loss in his death.

He observes that India stands in urgent need of men of the type of Mr. Malabari.

ABHYUDAYA, 18th July 1912.

57. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 18th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), characterizes as unreasonable the demand of the Bengalis for the inclusion of the Bengali-speaking districts of Behar and Assam in the Bengal Presidency. The editor contends that the fact that only a part of the population in the districts of the Sonthal Pergannahs, Purneah, Manbhum speaks Bengali, does not justify the inclusion of these districts in the Bengal Presidency. He expresses regret that Government has decided to transfer the Rajmahal and Jamtara sub-divisions of the Sonthal Pergannahs to Bengal, and remarks that this redistribution will cause resentment among the Beharis.

The inclusion of Bengali-speaking districts in the Bengal Presidency.

ADVOCATE, 25th July 1912.

58. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th July 1912, expresses gratification at the success that has attended the temperance deputation which waited on Lord Crewe under the leadership of Sir Herbert Roberts. The editor concedes that all licensing officers do not try to increase the sales of liquor in order to secure a larger revenue, but asserts that the present policy tends to foster the growth of the drink traffic. He suggests that the Excise Department should confine its functions to preventing all illicit consumption of intoxicants and to controlling their sale, and he insists that the revenue officers should have nothing to do with the sanctioning of licences so that all revenue considerations might cease to exist. While conceding that the Advisory Committees should not be made licensing committees, he urges that their opinion should carry greater weight and the people should have a greater voice in the administration of the Excise Department. He expresses satisfaction at the fact that Lord Crewe has promised to ask the Government of India to make these committees really useful, and expresses the hope that Local Governments will agree with the views expressed by the Secretary of State. He denies that the increased consumption of liquor is due to increased prosperity, and ascribes it to the increased facilities for the sale of liquor.

Temperance deputation to Lord Crewe.

GARHWALI, June 1912.

59. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun), for June 1912 (received on the 22nd July), expresses regret that the Forest Settlement Officer should have been assaulted by villagers in mauza Bhayansu Seula, but points out that he is said to have been the aggressor in the quarrel.

Forest settlement in Garhwal.

The editor observes that the villagers do not understand that the settlement of the forest has been undertaken under government orders and for their own good, and labour under the misapprehension that they will have no rights in the reserved forest area. He assures them of the good intentions of Government, and urges that if, instead of obstructing settlement officials they help them in their operations and get their rights registered, the projected settlement will do much good to the country.

He says that hillmen have no trade or industry and that agriculture is their exclusive occupation, and he expresses the hope that Government will make ample arrangements for grazing grounds in the forest.

He refers to the speech delivered by the Lieutenant Governor on the occasion of the opening ceremony of the Berthoud Hospital in Haldwani in which His Honour stated that the profit accruing from the re-settlement of the forest would be distributed between the district boards of the Kumaun division, and he urges that as the needs of the inhabitants for grass and firewoods are more urgent than those of the district boards for sanitation and education, Government should allow the products of the reserved forest to the value of the estimated profits to be distributed free of charge among the villagers.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, June 1912.

60. In continuation of its remarks on the subject (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 62), the Garhwal Samáchár (Dogadda, Garhwal), for June 1912 (received on the 16th July), expresses gratification at the statement made by the Lieutenant Governor in his speech on the occasion of the opening of the Berthoud Hospital in Haldwani, that the proceeds accruing from the forest re-settlement would be distributed among the district boards of the Kumaun division for purposes of education and sanitation. The editor urges that the settlement should be so carried out as to cause no trouble to the villagers, and that the wanton destruction of the trees should be stopped.

Forest settlement in Garhwal.

He takes exception to His Honour's statement that the inhabitants of Kumaun have no proprietary rights in the forests, and that if they had any they have been entrusted to Government, and asserts that since the time of native rulers they have been enjoying such rights. He says that so far as he knows Government never acquired those rights unless it be that the people were deprived of their rights in the forests when Government rescued them from the oppressive rule of the Gurkhas.

He points out that the forests adjoining the villages have been reared and protected by the villagers, and that it is but mere justice to leave them in their possession.

He urges that people should be given adequate rights in the reserved forest for taking grass and wood for their daily needs, and that steps should be taken to prevent forest patrols from oppressing them, and that the enumeration of cattle should take place every ten years.

He observes that the private uninhabited land on which forests have grown up should not be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, and that no tax should be levied on goats which carry on transport work in Garhwal and Tibet, and he suggests that if grazing facilities are provided for them, trade will develop and the people will not have to pay heavy transport rates.

He also urges that pilgrims should be allowed as hitherto to take home padam and timroo wood as a sacred relic of their visit to the Badrinath temple, that there should be no prohibition against the use of the medical herbs of the forests by the public, and that villagers who earn their livelihood by selling grass and wood at paraos (halting stages) should not be deprived of their right to do so.

He says that if any untoward incident should take place through the ignorance or fault of any particular village the whole division should not be made to suffer for it through the settlement regulations being more stringent and exacting. He remarks that it should be more clearly explained to the people that they should get their rights in the various forests registered by the settlement officials and that they should be secured in those rights.

He suggests that the settlement officials should deal with the villagers tactfully and should be most scrupulous in registering their rights, and says that the higher authorities should see that subordinates do not oppress the villagers in connection with the forced supply of provisions and labour. He observes that there are vague impressions obtaining among the villagers with regard to the forest policy of the Government, and he urges that steps should be taken to remove them.

He says that the boundary posts of the forests should not be set up too near the villages as this would bring forest patrols and villagers into conflict and give the former a chance of exacting illegal gratification from the latter. In conclusion he remarks that the settlement of the forests will be a boon to all parties if the right of the villagers are justly treated and are not ignored.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, June 1912.

Assault on the Settlement Officer at Bhayansu (Garhwal).

61. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dogadda, Garhwal), for June 1912 (received on the 16th July), referring to the assault case at Bhayansu, blames the villagers for their unforbearing attitude, but remarks that the Settlement Officer also acted rashly in beating the padhan. The editor observes that settlement officials should behave very tactfully towards villagers, for the latter are already discontented with the settlement operations and it will be a great injustice to them if they are treated harshly.

V.—Legislation.

ARYA MITRA, 16th July 1912.

The protection of minor girls and the suppression of the traffic in women.

62. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), lends its support to the measures to be introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy and the Hon'ble Mr. Madge for the protection of minor girls and for the suppression of traffic in women, and expresses the opinion that the passing of these measures will tend to the reform of Indian society.

VI.—Railway.

LEADER, 18th July 1912.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

63. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 18th July 1912, takes exception to the special pleading of the Pioneer (Allahabad) in favour of the efficiency of the present administration of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and against the rumoured transfer of its management. The editor, while admitting the increase in the volume of traffic and earnings, due probably to the Allahabad Exhibition and the Coronation Darbar, asserts that economy, efficiency and convenience are not the strong points of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway administration. He quotes figures to show that the percentage of working expenses is far higher in the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway than in the East Indian Railway, and urges the transfer of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway into other and more efficient hands. He concludes with the following remarks:—

"Rightly or wrongly the belief is widely prevalent that company lines are more amenable to public demands and are better managed than State railway systems, whether in the fear that they are more strictly sat upon by Government or what we cannot exactly say."

LEADER, 20th July 1912.

The Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

64. A correspondent who signs himself "A pleader," writes from Bareilly to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 20th July 1912, as follows:—

"The merchants of Bareilly have for long been suffering a great deal from the bad arrangement of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway Company at the Bareilly City goods shed.

The merchants refuse at all to pay the loading and unloading charges on their goods at the high rate of one rupee per hundred bags. Why should the merchants pay when the railway has engaged coolies for the purpose? But as the merchants do not pay anything in this way their agents are subjected to much annoyance. At last, being unable to tolerate this any more, a deputation of merchants waited upon the Traffic Superintendent at Shahamatganj on the 9th instant. But the Traffic Superintendent, far from listening to anything and promising to take steps to safeguard the interests of the merchants, addressed them in a most contemptuous way, saying 'chale jao abhi nikal jao. Ham nahin sunne mangta, yeh sab badmashi hai, &c.' I do not know why the Traffic Superintendent was rough in his dealings. Although the Traffic Superintendent is an officer of high rank and position, having under his subordination several railway servants, yet he should understand thoroughly that he too is a railway servant and the rule of the railway that 'the railway servants should be civil and obliging in their dealings with the public,' is applicable to every one from the highest railway official down to the lowest ticket collector."

MUSAFIR, 19th July 1912.

The Arya Musáfir Vidyalaya.

65. Pandit Bhoj Dat contributes an article to the Musáfir (Agra), of the 19th July 1912 (received on the 24th July), in which he deplores the lack of trained preachers among the Arya Samajists, and expresses regret that the enthusiasm for the propagation of the Arya faith roused by the martyrdom (sic) of Pandit Lekh Ram, Arya Musáfir, has gradually died out. He states that while the Muhammadans have opened various institutions for the training of religious preachers, the Aryas have no institution of that nature. He announces that on the 1st September the Bharat Shuddhi Sabha intends to open at Agra a theological seminary named the Arya Musáfir Vidyalaya in memory of the late Pandit Lekh Ram, in which instruction in Arabic, Sanskrit and in the Christian and Islamic systems of religion will be imparted, and where students will be trained to carry on religious discussions and to deliver religious lectures. He states that the course will extend over two years, and that successful students will be given the degree of "Arya Musáfir." He adds that the students, who will receive free board and lodging, will be required to enter into a contract of five years' service with the sabha, and that a breach of contract will make a student liable to a penalty of Rs. 250. Only students between eighteen and twenty-five years of age will be admitted and certain tests as to physical fitness and general knowledge will be prescribed for admission; only ten students will be admitted in this year. He appeals for funds for providing scholarships for the students and for helping the work of the sabha.

66. The Nava Jiwan (Benares), for May and June 1912 (received on the 17th July), refers to the handing over of a Hindu orphan by the District Magistrate of Benares to some missionary society, and urges that such a proceeding on the part of the magistrate was contrary to the provisions of the Famine Code. The editor says that the Arya Samaj was given no information about the orphan, and observes that the girl should have been handed over to the secretary of the samaj when the latter applied to the magistrate for her custody.

67. A correspondent who signs himself "UMRAO SINGH FROM UMBALLA," contributes an article to the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th July 1912 (received on the 22nd July), in which he states that people sell their cows in times of famine to butchers at very low prices and thus assist in the slaughter of cattle. He asserts that starving Hindus sometimes eat beef and thus break their vows. He suggests that in times of scarcity gaushalas should be started in the affected areas, and that arrangements should be made to transport cheap fodder there. He appeals to the Vaishya Mahasabha and the Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut) to support the proposal.

RAHBAR, 14th July 1912.

The cow-protection movement.

68. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), invites the attention of Government to the fact that the Bhandars of Benares ill-treat the ignorant pilgrims who come from the villages to visit the various temples of the city and that they do not exhibit the metal badges with which they were supplied sometime back by the district authorities.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 16th July 1912.

The Bhandars of Benares.

69. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 16th July 1912 (received on the 20th July), invites attention to the mismanagement of the Vishwa Nath temple at Benares, and says that constant complaints are being received against the staff employed at the temple. The editor urges the pandas to see that no cause for complaint is given to the public, and remarks that a continuance of the present mismanagement will compel Government either to take over the management of the temple itself or to place it in the hands of a Hindu committee.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 16th July 1912.

The Vishwa Nath temple at Benares.

He asks the pandas to refute the allegations made in the columns of his paper.

70. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 17th July 1912 (received on the 19th July), refers to the row between Hindus and Muhammadans which took place at Batala (Punjab) over a meat shop, and states on the authority of the Panjabee (Lahore) that the Muhammadans beat the Hindus and defiled their wells by throwing cow bones into them. The editor expresses regret that Hindus and Muhammadans should have quarrelled over such a trifle, and invites the attention of Government to the matter.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 17th July 1912.

A fraças between Hindus and Muhammadans at Batala (Punjab).

71. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st July 1912, says that a number of Muhammadans come to the Baluaghat every evening and disturb the Hindus in their bathing and religious ceremonies by their prayers in a loud voice. The editor says that no Muhammadan would like a Hindu to blow a conch in a mosque, and that the Muhammadans are not therefore justified in calling the azan (call to prayer) in the immediate neighbourhood of Hindu temples. He points out that such an act on the part of these Muhammadans is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, and he observes that the District Magistrate was once asked to interfere but nothing was done in the matter. He remarks that a policeman is only to be seen in the locality in the morning. In conclusion he invites the attention of the District Magistrate to the matter, and expresses the hope that after having an enquiry made into it he will punish the offenders and make adequate arrangements to post policemen at the place in question in order to prevent the recurrence of such incidents in future.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. A correspondent who signs himself "Khamosh from Moradabad," contributes an article to Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 25th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), in which he says that if the Persians rise in arms against Russia the disturbance will spread to the British zone and will inflict great loss on British trade.

The situation in Persia.

AL MUSHIR, 25th July 1912.

He remarks that Britain can neither abandon her claims in south Persia nor effect a military occupation of that portion of the country.

He observes that Sir Edward Grey has all along followed a very short-sighted policy and has been helping Russia in all her iniquitous designs by giving her the moral support of England. He urges the British Government to earn the gratitude of its Muhammadan subjects by restraining Russia from her tyrannical actions in Persia.

2. Referring to the Italian attack on the Dardanelles, Al Mushir (Moradabad), of the 25th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), says that the Turks will be compelled to close the Dardanelles again. The editor expresses apprehension lest the Powers may ask Turkey to open the Straits, and remarks that if they do so it will be a clear breach of neutrality and an unjust and mean action.

The Italian-Turkish war.

AL MUSHIR, 25th July 1912.

3. The Maryada (Allahabad), for June 1912 (received on the 29th July), expresses its gratification at the appointment of two Indian scholars, Lala Har Dayal, M.A., and Mr. Sudhindra Bose, M.A., as professors in American universities, and remarks that this should teach the Government of India to be more generous towards Indians who are not appointed to high posts in the Indian Educational Service.

4. Referring to the persistent demands made by the Muhammadan press for a strong feeling of unity among Muhammadans, the editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore), in the combined issue for the months of May and June 1912 (received on the 29th July), remarks that this feeling of unity is not the sole monopoly of the Muhammadan races as it also exists among Hindu and Christian races. He admits, however, that the feeling of unity among Muhammadans has been brought prominently before the public eye owing to the common adversities from which the different Muslim states are suffering.

Unity among Muhammadans.

ZAMANA, May and June 1912.

5. A correspondent who signs himself "Nazir Ahmad (Alig)," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), in which he remarks that Muhammadans should tolerate the religion of the Hindus and co-operate with them in all movements of mutual benefit, but should at the same time cling to their own religion and protect their special interests.

The political policy of Muhammadans.

AL BASHIR, 23rd July 1912.

He urges Muhammadans to cultivate good relations with the British rulers of the country, and says that no progress is possible unless the rulers and the ruled trust each other. He expresses regret that the Muslim League is losing its influence and weight owing to the machinations of a few upstarts who want to arrogate to themselves the leadership of the Muhammadan community. He asserts that Government has during the last two or three years been finding it very difficult to ascertain the true views of the Muhammadan community, and he therefore asks the Muhammadans to elect some capable leaders and to place implicit confidence in them. He expresses the hope that Muhammadans will give up their extremism, and will cultivate friendly relations with the Hindus as well as with Englishmen, and that they will thus progress gradually towards the ultimate goal of colonial self-government.

6. A correspondent who signs himself "A liberal Musalman," contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), in which he asserts that the unanimous protest raised by the Muhammadan press against Lord Crewe's pronouncement on Indian autonomy shows that Muhammadans have now come to accept self-government as their ideal. He says that the Muslim League is also now realizing the value of agitation, but he expresses regret that Muhammadans do not as yet possess sufficient moral courage to voice their opinions freely. He deplores the dearth of disinterested patriots in the Muhammadan community, and states that the present leaders are for the most part inspired by selfish motives. He says that the Muhammadan press also fails to recognize its duties, and he notes what altruistic workers are generally stigmatized as anarchists. He, however, predicts that the time is fast approaching when the self-seeking leaders of the present day will be discarded and when the suggestions of those who are at present styled carping critics, will mould the policy of the community.

Muhammadans and politics.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

He says that progress will come from traders, artizans, agriculturists, educationists, theologians and from political writers and leaders, and he expresses the hope that when the right time comes, the enlightened and benign British Government will not fail to rescind Lord Crewe's decision and to grant India self-government on colonial lines.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 24th July 1912.

The appointment of a Royal Viceroy for India.

7. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), says that the suggestion of the Edinburgh Review that a member of the Royal family should be appointed the Diwan of India will commend itself to the approval of all Indians. The editor observes that since the King-Emperor chose to celebrate his coronation in India, the claim of Indians to be governed by a member of the Royal family has been all the more strengthened.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 24th July 1912.

Lord Carmichael.

8. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), expresses its gratification that Lord Carmichael is gaining popularity by his solicitude for the welfare of the inhabitants of his province. The editor says that His Excellency has rightly set about the proposed partition of the Mymensingh district in that he has invited an expression of public opinion on the question before taking any steps in the matter and he remarks that this shows that His Excellency does not subscribe to the Curzonian dictum that consulting the public in administrative affairs tends to impair the prestige of the Government. He also commends His Excellency's practice of mixing freely with Indians with a view to ascertaining their grievances.

LEADER, 27th July 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

9. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th July 1912, has the following:—

"The Times is at the old game again. Taking time by the forelock, it has already begun to argue against simultaneous examinations and against a reduction in the number of European officials. Well, if there should be no such reduction there could be no increased employment of Indians, and the status quo would remain. Why then should a Commission be appointed at all? We are glad to think that the Times is not the spokesman of the Government."

LEADER, 27th July 1912.

Congress party and the council elections.

10. A correspondent who signs himself "A CONGRESSMAN," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 27th July 1912, in which he invites attention to the presence in the Councils of men who are neither Congressmen nor Muslim Leaguers and possess no permanent political creed. He expresses regret that these political non-descripts sometimes receive the passive support of Congress leaders, and asserts that the result has been that only three or four genuine Congressmen were successful at the last elections. He says that Congressmen who seek election are not backed by the Congress leaders, and he states that the Council has been captured by zamindars, title-holders and the moneyed classes. He expresses apprehension lest the constitution of the next Council may be still worse, and remarks that the expanded councils have proved of little benefit to the country on account of the negligence of the Congress party. He warns Congressmen against letting things drift for themselves, and urges that something should be done to secure the greater representation of the party in the Councils.

LEADER, 28th July 1912.

Congress party and the council elections.

11. Mr. Iswar Saran contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, in which he suggests that in order to extend the sphere of interest in the council elections and to make them more real, the regulations should be recast and some radical changes should be introduced in them. He expresses regret that most of the candidates for election to the councils are actuated by a desire for fame and importance and are either ignorant of politics or have endeavoured to thwart all progressive movement. He invites attention to the growth of an unreliable and dangerous class of dilettante politicians who become Congressmen and anti-Congressmen by turns according to the demands of the situation, but possess no permanent political creed. He asserts that the presence of such colourless men in the councils constitutes a public danger, and he urges that the Congress party should nominate one Congress candidate for each seat. He says that where there are more Congressmen than one competing for the same seat, the Congress leaders should make one their official nominee. He deprecates the formation of parties on private and personal grounds, and observes that all private differences should be made subservient to principle and policy. He says that in political warfare of the Western type, the recognized political weapons of the West should be used, and he expresses the hope that the nomination of candidates by the Congress leaders will be productive of immense good in the near future.

12. Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 1st August 1912, in which he suggests that the publication of the names, educational qualifications, and past services of all candidates from each constituency should be insisted upon. LEADER, 1st August 1912.

Council elections.

He urges that each candidate should be made to declare his views upon such burning questions of the day as the amendment of the Agra Tenancy Act and the reform of the Hardwar Municipality.

He says that in each place there should be meetings of electors to discuss the claims of candidates, and that only those whom the majority prefer should be put forward.

He urges the necessity for a better set of men in the local Legislative Council, and expresses the hope that the electors will rise above party feelings and self-interest and will give their votes only in the interests of the public.

13. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 1st August 1912, urges that in view of the increased responsibilities of members of Council the defects in the present method of canvassing should be remedied. The editor impresses upon electors the necessity for showing a more intelligent appreciation of the duty that devolves upon them by returning only the ablest men available,—men who have shown that they possess character and public spirit. He asks voters to demand from candidates an account of their past services and also their opinions on current public questions. He urges candidates to base their claims for the support of the electors only on grounds of public good. He says that the Congress committees and the Hindu sabhas should see that Congressmen and Hindus get an adequate number of seats in the councils. He remarks that, as Muhammadans have separate electorates, the Hindu sabha should see that the Hindus secure all the seats filled up by the mixed electorates. LEADER, 1st August 1912.

Council elections.

14. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, states that the United Provinces Congress Committee will meet to recommend a fit and proper person for election as president of the next Congress, and suggests the nomination of Mr. R. N. Mudholkar. The editor says that the Beharis insist on the election of Mr. Gohkale only because of his views on the Hindu-Muslim question, and he expresses the hope that, in view of the fact that Mr. Mudholkar shares the views of Mr. Gokhale on that question, Behar will not raise any objection to his election. LEADER, 28th July 1912.

The presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress.

He asserts that though lacking in personality, Mr. Mudholkar's public services, knowledge, experience and moderation entitle him to be elected as president, and he strongly urges his nomination.

15. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, has the following :— LEADER, 28th July 1912.

The Press Act.

"It is verily a sight for the gods that Lord Curzon should be found to sympathize with the protests of the press against an official declaration directed against or calculated to interfere with the free expression of opinion. Nor does the situation lose any of its piquancy when it happens that the authority remonstrated with is a Liberal Secretary of State and that the protest on behalf of high principles emanates from Anglo-Indian journalists who were warm-hearted supporters of the Press Act. But Lord Curzon's sympathy is with the aggrieved Anglo-Indians, not with the principle of freedom of the press."

ABHYUDAYA, 28th July 1912.

Treatment of political prisoners in the Andamans.

16. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, refers to the allegations published by the Bengalee (Calcutta) in connection with the harsh treatment of a political prisoner named Indu Bhushan Roy in the Andamans which led to his committing suicide, and remarks that, to say nothing of humane considerations, such treatment cannot be justified even on political grounds. The editor expresses the opinion that the deportation of political prisoners to the penal settlement is in itself objectionable, and to subject them to inhuman treatment in addition is altogether incompatible with the principles of justice. He says that as the penal settlement is under its direct control, the Government of India is responsible for all that happens there, and he expresses the hope that the Viceroy will have a searching enquiry made into the matter referred to and that he will take the necessary steps to ensure a better state of things in the Andamans in future.

ADVOCATE, 28th July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th July 1912, expresses its gratification at the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's protest against Lord Crewe's interpretation of the passage about autonomy in the Government of India's despatch of August 1911, and says that Indians will work steadfastly to bring about the ultimate fulfilment of the solemn pledge contained in the despatch. The editor contrasts the narrow views about the political future of India by present-day Liberals with the liberal ideas of Bright, and asserts that Liberal and Conservative politicians hold almost identical views on the subject. He asserts that Oriental races have been self-governing people in the past, and he invites attention to the progress of the political upheavals in Japan, China Turkey and Persia, and he refuses to admit that Oriental races have no capacity for self-government. He says that fitness is attainable only by evolution from unfitness, and he remarks that the British domination of India will be a plain failure if Indians are not found to be progressing on the path of self-government.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

18. Referring to the recent statement made by Lord Crewe in reply to a question by Lord Inchcape about the right interpretation of the passage on autonomy in the Government of India's despatch of August 1911, the Leader (Allahabad), of the 31st July 1912, expresses agreement with the Secretary of State for India that the passage never meant that swaraj would be conferred on India. The editor remarks that Indian reformers welcomed the Government of India's declaration regarding progress on the line of more or less autonomous provincial government, because this declaration fitted in with their own scheme of things. He expresses the idea that India will at some time become a federation of free and separate states under the British ægis if Indians show increasing capacity and Englishmen are true to their own history and inherited notions. He expresses regret that Lord Crewe is trying to prophesy a distant political future that he cannot control, and he assures His Lordship that Indians are not going to be depressed by such futile prophecies. He states that in spite of Lord Curzon's pronouncement against political concessions, concessions of the most far-reaching character have been granted to Indians, and he expresses satisfaction that Lord Crewe subsequently disclaimed any desire to indulge in positive prophecies about the political future of India.

He expresses gratitude to Lord Crewe for his sympathetic speech and for publicly avowing that it is the definite policy of Government to employ as many Indians as possible in the public service, and he expresses the hope that the Public Service Commission will be guided by this policy.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th July 1912.

Indian indentured labour.

19. Referring to Mr. Montagu's recent statement regarding Indian indentured labour in reply to a question by Mr. Douglas Hall the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 25th July 1912, says that nothing could be more deplorable or surprising than if Government accepted the recommendation of Lord Sanderson's Committee to allow the system of indentured emigration to continue, knowing perfectly well how injurious it has proved to poor Indians and how recruiting agents secured emigrants by practising all sorts of frauds. The editor remarks that Government will not be acting fairly if it disregards the sufferings of its loyal Indian subjects in advancing the interests of the colonies.

Indians in South Africa.

20. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), refers to the account published in the Indian Opinion (Natal) of the harsh treatment to which an Indian female labourer named Jadu Vanshi was subjected in South Africa by her white master. The editor expresses his regret that a civilized Government could condone such an outrage and enquires if even this incident will not impress upon the Government of India the necessity for legislating against the emigration of Indian labour to South Africa.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 24th July 1912.

Indians in South Africa.

21. Mr. H. S. L. Polak from Bombay contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th July 1912, in which he protests against the petulant tone of remonstrance adopted by Lord Emmott in reply to Lord Ampthill's strictures on the present situation in South Africa. He accuses the present ministry of having made matters worse by sanctioning the Registration Act of 1907, the Vrededorp Stands Act of 1907, the Immigration Act and the Gold Law of 1908.

LEADER, 26th July 1912.

He asserts that the only action which the Liberal Government can show to its credit is the vetoing of the anti-Indian legislation of southern Rhodesia and the ruinous licensing legislation of Natal, and he attributes this pro-Indian action not to the firmness of Lord Elgin but to the fear of an extension of the Indian passive resistance movement to those territories. He expresses regret that the Colonial office has forgotten its duties as an Imperial department of the State and has thought fit to become a mouthpiece of colonial resentment instead of trying to save the honour and safeguard the future of the voiceless Indian victims of colonial oppression. He refuses to admit that the problem of South African Indians is a question of interest rather to a Unionist than to a Liberal administration, and regrets that instead of rebuking South Africa for its deliberately adopted and long continued policy of pin-pricks, Lord Emmott, as the spokesman of the Liberal Government, should have shown the childish impertenence he exhibited when the ever-friendly and untiring Lord Ampthill rose to do a truly imperial act of service to His Majesty's most loyal Indian subjects.

The editor invites attention to the thorough exposure of the Liberal Government's record in dealing with the question of Indians in South Africa. He expresses regret that at the time of the South African settlement effected by Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman or at the time of the establishment of the Union Parliament and Government or when the Transvaal loan was negotiated, the Liberal Government did not make any stipulations for the protection of Indian interests in South Africa.

Indians in South Africa.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, in an article entitled "What is it if not slavery ?" says that although the Hon'ble Mr. Clarke tried to prove in the course of a debate raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale in the Imperial Legislative Council, that the indentured Indian labourer in the colonies was better off, and was not treated like a slave, yet it is a hard fact that his condition is just as bad as that of a slave. The editor states that the account of the repeated imprisonment of an Indian female labourer named Jadu Vanshi in South Africa for refusing to work in a particular locality because her son was burnt to death there as reported in the Indian Opinion (Natal) clearly demonstrates, notwithstanding the protestations of the Hon'ble Mr. Clarke, that the indenture system of labour is nothing but slavery under a different name. He contends that mere speeches in the Legislative Councils and appeals to the British Parliament and public will do no good, and he expresses the opinion that the sufferings of their countrymen in South Africa will not be put an end to unless Indians bear in mind that they too are human beings and have been created by the same God who made Europeans and Africans, that they are as capable as the white men and that they should therefore have the same freedom that the latter enjoy.

ABHYUDAYA, 28th July 1912.

He remarks that their miseries will never cease and that all their hopes for peace and happiness will ever remain unfulfilled unless they make strenuous efforts for the attainment and protection of those rights which Mr. Jefferson describes as the unalienable rights of life and liberty with which all men have been endowed by their creator.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th July 1912.

Hindus in Afghanistan.

23. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 25th July 1912, complains that Hindu residents in Afghanistan are nowadays much oppressed, and that the Amir does nothing to redress their grievances. The editor gives three particular cases of oppression which relate to the forcible conversion of a married Hindu woman and her remarrige with an Afghan, the imposition of a tax on Hindus for the maintenance of the family of an Afghan who had been murdered, although the crime was not committed by Hindus, and the forcible realization of Rs. 700 by an Afghan master from the father of his Hindu servant, and he points out that such incidents are matters of every-day occurrence. He says that under the strong rule of Amir Abdul Rahman no distinction was made between Hindu and Afghan subjects, but that a new order of things has been established since the present ruler came to the throne. He observes that now that Turkey has thrown the burden of khalifate off its shoulders Afghanistan is ready to support her and aspires to be the central power of the Islamic world, and that is why the present Amir has changed the policy which his father adopted towards the Hindus. He remarks that as there is no Hindu power that can exercise its influence to secure the better treatment of Hindus in Afghanistan, they should either take refuge in the British territory or lose their lives peaceably for the sake of their religion. He says that at the present day members of a civilized nation are never oppressed for religious differences, and he urges that the British Government, which is the sole protector of the Hindus, should take steps to prevent the ill-treatment of the Hindu residents of Afghanistan just as it has ever tried to protect Turkey in deferenes to the wishes of its Indian Muhammadan subjects.

ADVOCATE, 1st August 1912.

The Calcutta protest meeting.

24. Referring to the protest meeting held by the citizens of Calcutta on Friday, the 26th July 1912, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st August 1912, states that the entire population of Bengal is extremely dissatisfied with the judgment of the Privy Council in the Mymensingh case. The editor says that the ruling of the Privy Council that a magistrate can issue search warrants without even going into the formalities of recording the complaint and the evidence of the complainant, strikes a great below at the liberty of the people. He remarks that magistrates who exercise executive powers and are liable to extraneous influences, may, under the protection of this ruling, do things that will cause serious complications. He expresses apprehension that this new power may be seriously abused by honorary magistrates in the mofassil and that it may make the life of the people unbearable.

He invites attention to the demand for the separation of the executive and judicial functions, and to the admiration expressed for the impartial administration of justice by the Calcutta High Court. He asserts that the Calcutta High Court is a great bulwark against all attempts on the part of the executive to interfere with the rights and privileges of the people, and that no attempt should be made to lessen its influence.

With regard to Lord Crewe's interpretation of the passage about Indian autonomy in the Government of India's despatch of August 1911, he states that the entire Hindu and Muhammadan press has disapproved of this interpretation, and asserts that all classes of the people are unanimous about the ultimate goal of self-government for India. He admits that British officials or British troops cannot be withdrawn from India, but says that self-government is possible even with their presence in the country.

(b)—Police.

Police reform.

25. Referring to the circular recently issued by the Inspector General of Police, United Provinces, regarding enquiry into cases of alleged misconduct on the part of the police, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), observes that the reform of the police depends to a great extent on the vigilance of Superintendents of Police. With regard to the best means of enlisting public co-operation, the editor suggests that it should be proclaimed by beat of drum in every town or village that no person should offer any bribe to a policeman, and that all cases of police oppression should be reported to the Superintendent of Police. He says that the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police should appoint secret vigilance committees in every locality to report cases of police oppression, and that the latter should employ a secret agent to keep himself informed of such cases. He suggests that legislation should be introduced with a view to making it binding on the public to report all cases of Police oppression to the Superintendent. He urges that Superintendents of police should associate themselves more with the public, and that the rules of procedure of the Police Department should be so modified as to make acts of injustice and tyranny impossible.

The preparation of electoral rolls in the Fyzabad Municipality.

26. A correspondent who signs himself "A-RATE-PAYER," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th July 1912, in which he complains that the electoral rolls of the Fyzabad Municipality, as they now stand, contain the names of a large number of persons who are not eligible and omit the names of a large number of qualified persons. He attributes the defective preparation of the electoral rolls to the party feeling which exists between the two factions in the municipality. He asserts that objections and claims are not made before the revising authority owing to the fact that the time fixed for hearing the objections and claims is very inconvenient, the evidence required is of a very strict nature, and the fear of prosecution is very great. He states that the house list is wrongly prepared and he reproduces a portion of the review of the annual administration report of the Fyzabad Municipality by Mr. Dewar, Deputy Commissioner, in which it was asserted that the existence of party feeling in the municipality gave great trouble in the preparation of electoral rolls, and in which it was suggested that every head of a house within municipal limits should be allowed to register himself as a voter on payment of a registration fee of rupees two.

He urges Government to depute a special officer to revise the electoral rolls after a careful and impartial enquiry, and suggests that Government should enjoin that the electoral rolls should not be mutilated at the sweet will of one party or the other.

Official and non-official municipal chairmen.

27. The Leader (Allahabad), of the 26th July 1912, has the following :—

"A correspondent writes: The Allahabad Municipal Board having for its chairman a highly-paid whole-time European Civil Servant, has still been censured by the Government for its want of capacity and forethought. Imagine the sermons that your local contemporary, I mean the Pioneer, and other papers of the same views and political complexion would have preached on the incapacity of Indians for local self-government if we had a 'Babu' chairman—to borrow the graceful expression of one of the municipal employés—instead of the present European incumbent of that office. I am told a similar experiment tried at Cawnpore has not been the success one would have thought it would be. From these facts I draw the lesson that failure is not the monopoly of Indians."

A correspondent who signs himself "SATYAM," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 1st August 1912, in which he refers to the letters published in the Leader complaining about the mal-administration of the Hardwar Municipality, and asserts that great improvements in the lighting and sanitation of the ghats have been effected during the last twenty years. After enumerating the improvements effected he says that the district administration and local affairs in general deserve appreciation instead of blame.

The secretaryship of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

33. A correspondent who signs himself "MUHAMMAD OBEID-ULLAH FARHATI AMROHWI FROM NAGINA," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), in which he disapproves of the tone of the letter contributed by Shaukat Husain Nizami to Al Bashir of the 4th June (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 44), and says that it is undesirable to create disunion among Muhammadans by suggesting that the Secretary of the Aligarh College should belong to the Punjab. He asserts that Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan, Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk and Nawab Mushtaq Husain always kept the college above all sectarian and provincial prejudices, and he urges Muhammadans to select the best man for the secretaryship without any regard to the sect or province to which he belongs. He asserts that discord and disunion have been the bane of Islam, and he states that the Punjab Muhammadans are hopelessly divided among themselves by conflicting sects.

He suggests the names of His Highness the Aga Khan, the Raja of Mahmudabad, Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan, the Hon'ble Nawab Abdul Majid Khan, the Hon'ble Justice Ameer Ali, Nawab Muzmmil-ullah Khan, the Hon'ble Mr. Ali Imam, the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Rafiq and Maulvi Nizam-ud-din Hassan as suitable persons for the secretaryship of the college.

He remarks that the trustees are the best persons to judge of the suitability of a candidate for the secretaryship of the college, and says that the public has no right to discuss the religious convictions of the secretary. He asserts that if the element of religious prejudice is introduced into a discussion of this question, it will be impossible to find a man to satisfy the numerous sects of the Muhammadan community. He states that religious teaching is not compulsory in the Oxford and Cambridge Universities, and observes that it would be better if separate arrangements were made for purely religious teaching in the Aligarh College. He asks Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq Khan to carry on his work heedless of all misguided criticisms.

The editor impresses upon the promoters of the Hindu and Muslim Universities the necessity for making these non-official Universities "the best kind of machines for producing the best kind of men." He eulogizes Sir Theodore Morrison for his vindication of the system of secular education in India.

The chief function of universities.

LEADER, 20th July 1912.

37. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore), in the combined issue for the months of May and June 1912 (received on the 29th July), states that the announcement that the power of affiliation will not be granted to the Muslim University has created profound disappointment and has given rise to counsels of despair among Muhammadans.

He expresses surprise at the indignation expressed by the Muhammadan leaders who decided at the very outset that the proposed university should be of a residential character.

He expresses doubt as to whether the high expectations raised in the minds of the public about the Muslim University will ever be realized, and asserts that the curriculum will differ very little from the courses laid down in some of the existing colleges. He expresses the opinion that the only benefit that Muhammadans can expect from the university is that it will serve as a means of devolping their capacity for administration.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

ZAMANA, May and June 1912.

38. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), urges Muhammadans to submit to the decision of the Government of India regarding the affiliation of colleges outside Aligarh to the Muslim University. The editor asserts that the Islamia College, Lahore, does not and cannot come up to the standard required by the proposed constitution, and says that it is difficult to establish a considerable number of residential colleges. He contends that even if it were possible to open a number of high class residential colleges, it would not be advisable to have them affiliated to the Muslim University, seeing that it would be an untried and therefore risky experiment. He, however, insists that the proposed university should have a network of affiliated schools spread throughout the country. He remarks that unless students are given proper religious and moral training in affiliated schools they cannot derive any benefit from the religious instruction imparted in the Muslim University.

He advises Muhammadans to concentrate their agitation on the question of the excessive powers of the Chancellor, and says that if they cannot get a really useful university they should use the funds collected for some other educational purpose.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

39. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), in which he states that the announcement that the Government of India has finally decided that the educational scope of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities will be confined to the limits of Benares and Aligarh, has caused profound disappointment among Muhammadans. He asserts that Muhammadans all over India subscribed to the Muslim University funds under the impression that Muslim colleges and schools of every province would be affiliated to the University, and that Muhammadans all over the country would be benefited by it. He urges Muhammadans not to submit to this decision of Government in regard to affiliation and thus not lay themselves open to the charge of having betrayed the interest of future generations by accepting it. He asks Muhammadans to state their objections, and expresses the hope that the just and benign British Government will not refuse to listen to reasonable arguments. He says that if this decision has been arrived at by the Secretary of State, it is still more the duty of Muhammadans to state their objections at a time when the Under Secretary of State is coming out to India. He contends that when the institutions to be affiliated to the Muslim University will be of a residential character, and when their affiliation will be subject to the approval of the Chancellor, the Government of India should have no objection in granting the power of affiliation to the University. He asks the Government of India to publish detailed reasons for its decision, and says that the public will submit to the decision of Government if they find that they are in the wrong. He expresses the opinion that the disinclination of Government to grant powers of affiliation to the Muslim University is due to the apprehension that the Muslim University will not be able to exercise effective control and supervision over institutions outside Aligarh, and that the instruction imparted in such institutions would thus be inferior to that imparted in Aligarh itself. He contends that when these institutions are of a residential character, and when proper arrangements for teaching are made in them, there will be no very great difference in the quality of instruction imparted in the different institutions affiliated to the University. He admits that there may be some slight difference, but points out that the superiority of the instruction imparted in the Muir Central College does not necessitate the disaffiliation of all third rate colleges affiliated to the Allahabad University. He says that the inspection of institutions outside Aligarh can be easily carried out by inspectors and Commissions, and remarks that the country is now so well supplied with railways, telegraphs and other conveniences that the inspection of outside institutions becomes only a question of expense. He asserts that there is a large number of highly-educated patriotic Muhammadans who will help in this work. He invites attention to the case of the Islamia High School, Etawah, which is even now to some extent under the control of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and he deplores the injustice involved in precluding the Muslim University from managing the affairs of this institution. He asserts that the funds collected for the University consist mainly of funds contributed by the poorer class of Muhammadans, and says that as poor Muhammadans cannot bear the expense of sending their children to Aligarh, they would like to start local institutions and to get them affiliated to the Muslim University. He says that the action of Government will divert the funds contributed by the poor to the use of the rich. He states that Government has already alienated the sympathies of the poorer classes by increasing the cost of education, and observes that the present policy of Government will create a bad impression on the public.

He enquires whether Government will not permit the Muslim University to affiliate an Islamia institution in Madras if that institution desires to follow the methods of the Muslim University. He then remarks that Government should have waited till the completion of the labours of the constitution committee before announcing its decision, and says that the only result of the Government announcement will be that Muhammadans will stop sending in contributions, and that Government will be guilty of laying the axe at the root of a progressive work.

He urges Muhammadans not to lose heart but to continue to make respectful representations to Government in the hope that the righteous cause will win in the end. He asserts that British rule in India is founded on justice, and he expresses the hope that when the matter comes before the Legislative Council even the English officia. members will vote for a just cause. He asks the Muhammadan public to discuss the question thoroughly in all its bearings and to include their mature views in the draft regulations. He suggests that some Muhammadan member should take it upon himself to introduce the Muslim University Bill in the Council, and he recommends the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad for this task. He urges Muhammadans to use all constitutional means within their power to get their legitimate demands satisfied.

In conclusion he advises Muhammadans not to enter into any discussion as to what should be done in case the Government of India refuses to grant the power of affiliation, but urges them to prepare draft regulations and to collect subscriptions with a hopeful heart.

40. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), remarks that the announcement that the Government of India has decided that the educational scope of the proposed Muslim University will be confined to the limits of Aligarh, has created profound disappointment among Muhammadans. The editor recapitulates the history of the Muslim University movement, and goes on to discuss the objections to granting the power of affiliation to the Muslim University.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He asserts that the colleges affiliated to the Muslim University will not only be of a residential character, but will maintain a standard of teaching as high as that of the proposed University itself. He contends that, while the proposed University will combine examining with its teaching functions, it will be free from the defects of the existing examining universities because it will not grant degrees to students who have not resided for a certain number of terms in a standard college. He states that Muhammadans possess neither the money nor the brains to establish and work a number of Muslim universities in different parts of the country, and adds that they are too poor to support more than one university. He observes that if the power of affiliation is not granted to the Muslim University, the Muhammadans of other provinces will withdraw their further financial support from the scheme. He expresses doubt as to whether the money thus diverted from the Muslim University fund will ever be utilized for establishing local institutions, with the result that the progress of higher education among Muhammadans will thus be retarded.

With regard to the objection that Sir Saiyid wanted the Muslim University to be established on the lines of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge which do not affiliate outside colleges, he contends that the superiority of the latter universities does not lie in their refusal to affiliate outside colleges but in the excellent moral training that they give to their alumni. He goes on to say that though England is rich enough to afford the luxury of a university at every important educational centre, India cannot at present provide for more than one Muslim University which should therefore be granted powers of affiliation.

He assures Government that no fear need be entertained as to any defects in the residential system followed in the affiliated colleges, seeing that all affiliations will be sanctioned by the Chancellor, and the affiliated colleges will be supervised by Commissions.

With regard to the contention that the affiliation of colleges of other provinces with the Muslim University will interfere with the management of the State Universities, he observes that Government will be relieved to some extent of the responsibilities of imparting high education to its subjects. He says that the number of colleges affiliated to the proposed university will be very few, and he expresses the hope that Government will have no objection in permitting colleges of different provinces to be affiliated to a central institution like the Muslim University.

Referring to postgraduate and research work, he says that such work will not be carried on in the affiliated colleges but in the university itself.

He urges the necessity for affiliating schools of a residential character to the Muslim University, and asserts that it is impossible to mould the character of young men who have passed their school days in non-residential institutions.

AL MUSHIR, 25th July 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

KAISER-I-HIND, 25th July 1912.

42. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad), of the 25th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), urges Muhammadans not to submit to the decision of the Government of India that the educational scope of the proposed Muslim University is to be confined to the limits of Aligarh. The editor remarks that the unlimited powers given to the Chancellor should be curtailed, and insists that the clauses in the regulations that authorize the Chancellor to pass final orders without giving his reasons should be amended. He expresses the opinion that unless these defects are removed the Muslim University will be no use to the Muhammadan community.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th July 1912.

43. A correspondent who signs himself "AZAD," contributes an article to the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), in which he suggests that, in case Muhammadans find it impossible to obtain a charter for a free and popular Muslim University, they should utilize the collected funds for establishing Muhammadan boarding houses in every educational centre. He says that these boarding houses should be used for imparting moral and religious instruction to students, and that Government should be requested to grant Muhammadan students a few hours leave on Fridays.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

44. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), says that the news that the Government of India has finally decided that the educational scope of the Hindu and Muslim Universities will be confined to the limits of Benares and Aligarh has created profound disappointment throughout the country. The editor asserts that the poorest classes contributed to the funds of these universities under the impression that all denominational institutions would be affiliated to them. He suggests that meetings should be held all over the province and that resolutions asking for the power of affiliation should be passed. He urges Government to permit Indians to prove their capacity for self-government by opening educational institutions in every town.

He says that if Government refuse to accede to the popular demand, the funds collected should be utilized for scientific, technical and religious education.

45. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 31st July), says that the announcement that the Government of India has decided that the educational scope of the two denominational universities will be confined to the limits of Benares and Aligarh, has caused great sorrow throughout the country. The editor remarks that Muhammadans will have nothing to do with an official university which will not have the power of affiliation.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

46. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), lays stress on the need for agitation in order to protect the interests of the Muhammadan community, and urges both Hindus and Muhammadans to make united efforts to induce the Government of India to grant powers of affiliation to their universities.

The editor says that if Government do not grant the Hindus and Muhammadans full control over their universities they should give up the idea of having officials universities, and should utilize the accumulated funds for granting scholarships or for other educational purposes.

47. The Nayyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), remarks that the announcement that the Government of India has decided that the educational scope of the two denominational universities will be confined to the limits of Aligarh and Benares, has given rise to much sorrow throughout the country. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

The editor expresses surprise at the action of Government which will deprive the proposed universities of much of their utility, and he expresses the hope that Government will rescind its decision in deference to public opinion.

48. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 26th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), expresses regret at the final decision of the Government of India that the educational scope of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities will be confined to the limits of Benares and Aligarh. The editor remarks that this news will cause disappointment to many and will create the impression that the utility of these denominational universities will be very much diminished. He expresses surprise at the fact that the Government of India has stated no reasons for its decision, and expresses the hope that, in deference to public opinion, Government will rescind its decision and permit the proposed universities to teach as well as examine. OUDH AKHBAR, 26th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

49. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th July 1912 (received on the 2nd August), says that though the announcement that powers of affiliation will not be granted to the proposed Aligarh and Benares Universities has cast a gloom over the land, the general tendency is to continue the work in the belief that the Government of India and the Secretary of State will not ultimately be so unreasonable as not to reconsider their decision in the light of new facts and arguments put before them. The editor states that the leaders of both movements have appealed to the people to continue their exertions in the collection of funds without allowing a feeling of despair to overcome them. ADVOCATE, 28th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

50. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th July 1912 (received on the 2nd August), publishes a contributed article in which the writer says that the announcement that the Government of India has finally decided that the educational scope of the two denominational universities will be confined to the limits of Aligarh and Benares has caused much sorrow throughout the country. He invites attention to the increasing difficulty felt by students in gaining admission to schools, and suggests that in case powers of affiliation are not granted to the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities, the accumulated funds should be utilized for establishing high schools in every district. ZUL QARNAIN, 28th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

He says that this scheme will provide educational facilities for students who cannot gain admission to the existing schools for lack of room, and will also supply a sufficient number of F.A. and B.A. students for the Central Hindu College, Benares, and the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

51. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st August 1912, remarks that the second communiqué of the Government of India stating that the decision in regard to affiliation to the proposed universities of Aligarh and Benares is the final decision of the Secretary of State, shows that Government is anxious that there should be no agitation about the question. The editor says that the communiqué will not damp the enthusiasm of the people, and suggests that Hindus and Muhammadans should first build up two first class universities and should then induce Lord Crewe's successor to grant powers of affiliation to their universities. ADVOCATE, 1st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

52. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 29th July), discusses the speech delivered by the Maharaja of Darbhanga at Lucknow, and remarks that the Hindu people in general are not showing any great enthusiasm as regards subscribing to the Hindu University fund just as the Muhammadans have not been paying in their subscriptions since they learnt that the Muslim University is to be an official body, and is not to be granted the power of affiliation. MUSLIM GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

The Hindu University deputation at Lucknow.

Discussing the Hon'ble Mr. Málaviya's speech at Lucknow the editor remarks that the Hindu and Muhammadan leaders should make united efforts to secure the freedom of their denominational universities from official control. He asserts that the leaders of both communities have shown their mutual sympathy by subscribing so generously to the funds of the two universities, and he urges them to utilize this opportunity for cultivating goodwill and establishing a lasting friendship between the two communities.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, July 1912.

A common language for India.

53. The Swadesh Bandhava (Agra), for July 1912 (received on the 31st July), publishes an appeal by Satya Deva to be read at the first anniversary of the Bharti Bhavan Library, Ferozabad, in which he recounts how Aryans in ancient times established an independent colony in India and gradually became masters of the entire country by having one language and by being united and disinterested. He states that their ideal was that their descendants should have but one language, should form one nation and should pass their time in freedom and independence. In conclusion he appeals to all who will be present at the anniversary celebrations to vow that they will have Hindi as the common language of the country and that they will revive the glorious traditions of their ancestors and thereby attain to their high ideals.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 23rd July 1912.

Consumption of cocaine at Benares.

54. An anonymous correspondent writing in the Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), calls attention to the illegal sale of cocaine in Benares, and says that obviously some wealthy persons import large quantities of cocaine from England and supply the drug to retail dealers. He refers to the evil effects of the regular consumption of cocaine, and urges that Government should do all in its power to punish those engaged in the traffic. He asks why the local police take no steps to stop the sale of the drug within the city, and suggests that if they are unable to do so, detectives should be employed for the purpose.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 24th July 1912.

Causes of the high rate of mortality among Indians.

55. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), notes that in the replies to Lala Baijnath's letter to the press regarding the causes of the high rate of mortality among Indians, early marriage and the present system of education are stated to have produced the most harmful effects on the health of educated Indians. The editor expresses agreement with this diagnosis, and observes that it is impossible to expect any improvement in the public health considering local conditions and the methods by which education is imparted in the schools and colleges of the country.

He expresses his gratification that the leaders of the country are however now awakening to a sense of their responsibility in the matter.

OUDH AKHBAR, 25th July 1912.

The English Commission of enquiry into foot-and-mouth disease among English cattle.

56. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th July 1912, states that the Commission of enquiry into foot-and-mouth disease among cattle in England is coming out to India as the latter country affords greater facilities for the observation of that disease. The editor suggests that a few Indian members should be appointed on the Commission at the expense of the Government of India, and that some Indian veterinary experts should be permitted to attend the sittings of the Commission and to take notes.

He says that while involving no loss to England, this procedure would be very beneficial to India.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th July 1912.

The obligations of other provinces towards the Hindi language.

57. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 25th July 1912, says that it is admitted on all hands that for the growth of a united nation in India it is absolutely necessary that all the various communities in the country should use one common language. The editor expresses the opinion that the Hindi language is best fitted to be the lingua franca of the country, but he expresses regret that the advocates of nationalism in all the provinces pay no attention to the importance of the subject, and are afraid to discuss it in the press for fear of causing injury to their respective provincial vernaculars. He observes that far from doing any service to the Hindi language some of them take pains to damage its interests, and in support of his statement he refers to the opposition of the Bengalis to the introduction of Hindi as the court language in some of the sub-divisions of the Sonthal Parganas. He says that even the Bengalee (Calcutta), which is the strongest supporter of the principle of nationalism, has expressed opposition to the measure, and he remarks that if such views are not changed nation-building will receive a severe check. He expresses the hope that the nationalists of all the provinces, particularly the Bengalis who claim to possess high national ideas, will pay due consideration to the importance of having Hindi as the common language of the country.

58. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th July 1912 (received on the 1st August), invites attention to the scarcity of labour for mills and factories, and states that village labourers show a great disinclination to come to cities.

Emigration agents and the scarcity of labour.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th July 1912.

The editor asserts that the few village labourers who are willling to migrate to cities are enticed away by emigration agents who are under the protection of Government. He expresses regret that while other countries are enjoying the benefits of Indian labour, Indian industries are suffering from scarcity of labour, and he expresses surprise that Government is taking no steps to stop the emigration of Indian labourers.

59. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 28th July 1912, refers to the persistent demand of European traders for increased expenditure on railway construction, and says that even the existing expenditure is excessive for an impoverished country like India, and that any further expenditure will necessitate the raising of a loan in foreign countries. The editor remarks that there is no need for railway extension and that any further extension will do more harm than good to the country.

Increased expenditure on railway construction.

ABHYUDAYA, 28th July 1912.

He expresses surprise that no demand is made for more money for irrigation as the opening up of more water courses would increase the food-supply of the country.

60. A correspondent who signs himself "Kaniram Mohanram from Khurja," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad), of the 31st July 1912, in which he complains that consignments are not loaded in order of delivery at railway stations and that preferential booking privileges are granted to certain firms. He urges the Government of India to appoint a Commission consisting of two European and two Indian merchants with the Commerce Member and the Secretary, Railway Board, as chairman and secretary respectively to make an open enquiry into the matter and to suggest remedies.

Railways and merchants.

LEADER, 31st July 1912.

61. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 31st July 1912, invites attention to the insufficiency of rolling stock on Indian railways, and says that this shortage causes great loss and inconvenience to merchants and passengers. The editor suggests that the Government of India should create a fund to which all the railway companies of India should contribute and should keep a reserve stock of engines and carriages at all important railway centres for use in cases of emergency.

Shortage of rolling stock on Indian railways.

62. A correspondent in the Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares), of the 23rd July 1912 (received on the 29th July), expresses regret that the Hindu public has taken no action on the complaints published in its columns about the objectionable conduct of the panda of the Vishwa Nath temple towards visitors. He says that the Hindus should have asked the Local Government to transfer the management of the temple to the hands of a committee, and remarks that if they continue indifferent to the matter Government will sooner or later assume the management. He says that the complaints made against the panda are not new but are of long standing, and he urges that the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal should justify its existence by taking steps to remove them.

A complaint about the panda of the Vishwa Nath temple at Benares.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th July 1912.

The importation of the Islamic Fraternity (Tokyo) into India.

63. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th July 1912 (received on the 31st July), expresses regret that the Government of India has forbidden the importation into India of the Islamic Fraternity (Tokyo). The editor expresses the hope that Government will show consideration for the feelings of its Muhammadan subjects by withdrawing the restriction against the importation of this religious paper.

1. The Stri Darpan (Allahabad) for the month of July 1912 (received on the 5th August) publishes a lecture delivered at the Mahila Samiti by Shrimati Savitri Devi in which she urged Indian women to take their part in the regeneration of their country. She said that the absence of all feeling of unity, nationality and patriotism had been the bane of India, and she deplored the fact that the country that was once the pride and glory of Aryans was now in every way dependent upon others [(lit.) fettered by the chains of subjection]. She appealed to Indian women to spread the spirit of nationalism among their children, and she invited attention to the part played by women in the national regeneration of Japan.

STRI DARPAN, July 1912.

The spirit of nationalism among Indian women.

She expressed admiration for the heroism displayed by English suffragists, and urged Indian women to fight for their rights with equal vigour.

2. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 30th July 1912 (received on the 2nd August), characterizes Western civilization as irreligious and unnatural, and dwells at length on its evil effects on India. He states that the advent of British rule in India compelled Indians to study the English language and also led them to imitate blindly the manners of their conquerors. He says that the adoption of European dress by Indians has increased their expenses very largely and has made their women lazy and extravagant. He asserts that the women of the present day, while ignorant of their necessary household duties, have become imbued with improper ideas about liberty and equality. He expresses the opinion that the Western system of education makes Indian women lazy, unskilled, weak, ease-loving and extravagant, and he expresses the hope that, in view of the fact that Western civilization will only make future generations still more lazy and selfish, Indian leaders will devise means to save Indian youths and girls from its baneful effects.

3. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 31st July 1912 (received on the 5th August) refers to the attempts of the colonists in South Africa to exclude Indians from their country, and remarks that such action on their part is an insult to Indians and also to the Government of India. The editor urges that Government should realize its responsibility in the matter and take effective measures to ensure better treatment for Indians in South Africa.

Indians in South Africa.

4. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st August 1912 compares the agitation raised in England against the sentence of Miss Maleca in Russia which ultimately lead to her release with the indifference with which Indians have received the report of the maltreatment of one of their countrywomen named Jadu Vanshi in South Africa, and remarks that this difference in the attitude of two peoples can be accounted for by the fact that while the English are a living nation there is no feeling of nationality at all among the Indians. The editor expresses regret at this deplorable state of affairs, and says that as long as Indians do not consider the disgrace of even the humblest among them as their own they do not deserve to be called a nation, and will continue to be maltreated and insulted by other nations. He urges that a combined effort should be made in every village and town in India to remove the sufferings of Indian residents in South Africa, and that Indians should carry on an active agitation and allow no peace to Government until all the grievances of their countrymen in the colonies are redressed.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st August 1912.

Indians in South Africa.

5. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 expresses regret at the death of Mr. Hume, and eulogizes his work in connection with the Indian National Congress. The editor notes that Mr. Hume kept up his interest in Congress work even after he left India and even when he ceased to be its general secretary. He expresses appreciation of Mr. Hume's work as a Collector and as Secretary to the Government of

The death of Mr. Hume.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 4th August 1912 expresses deep regret at the death of Mr. Hume, and eulogizes his qualities and his work in connection with India. The editor describes Mr. Hume's official career and remarks that had it not been for his great interest in the political advancement of India, he would certainly have received a lieutenant-governorship. After recapitulating Mr. Hume's services to the sciences of ornithology and botany he expresses appreciation of his labours in founding and developing the Indian National Congress, and he urges Indians to perpetuate his memory by emulating his unswerving faith in the cause of progress.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th August 1912.

The death of Mr. Hume.

7. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 expresses profound regret at the death of Mr. Hume, and recapitulates with appreciation all the work done by him in connection with the Indian National Congress. The editor remarks that it is but natural that Indians should be overwhelmed with grief at the death of one who, though an Englishman and a civil servant, did all in his power to show them the way to better their condition, and he notes that it was Mr. Hume who in 1885 laid the foundation of the new awakening, the signs of which are now apparent on all sides.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans in the Punjab.

8. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 expresses regret that, notwithstanding the fact that Hindus, Muhammadans and Europeans all agree that there can be no progress in the country unless there is a better understanding between Hindus and Muhammadans, there is a section of Muhammadans ever ready to foster feelings of animosity between the two communities. The editor says that the efforts of some of the vernacular papers of the Punjab, especially the Zamindar (Lahore), to attribute the murder of Inspector Habib Ali of Lahore by a Hindu constable named Tulsa Singh to a Hindu conspiracy is the latest instance in this connection.

He urges the Government of India to take severe notice of such conduct which his opinion is likely to excite racial feelings between the two communities.

LEADER, 8th August 1912.

Loyalty among Hindus and Muhammadans.

9. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912 has the following:—

"A militant organ of the Muslim community thus philosophises over the government communiqué on the affiliation of outside colleges by the Muslim University: 'Loyalty in these days is very much like virtue, for it certainly seems to be its own reward. The Muhammadans of India have been made to feel this often enough during more than a year past, and the latest illustration of this was the innocent-looking press communiqué issued by the Education Department,' &c. These are the persons who put a certain price upon their loyalty and let off their 'dynamic force' at every step, who have had the coolness to cast doubts upon Hindu loyalty. They must have only acted upon the theory that audacity was an indispensable element of success in politics. The Hindus do not make a bombast of their loyalty. They make no profession of it, they do not place it on the market. They are loyal because the British Government has done good to their country and will do more good if they deserve it, and in order that the people may prosper and be happy and contented under it they unhesitatingly ask for the rectification of administrative abuses and the introduction of constitutional reforms in conformity with the spirit of the times and the temper of the people. Many more than one communiqué of the kind referred to by the Muslim paper which we have quoted will not make the Hindus lament indecently that loyalty like virtue is its own reward. In connection with the university schemes themselves they are more grateful for the Government permission for their establishment and the Government recognition of them than discontented with the communiqué which is being made so much of by the Muslim press."

LEADER, 2nd August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

10. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 expresses disappointment at the composition of the Public Service Commission, and expresses regret that, while six out of fifteen members who constituted the Commission of 1886 were Indians, only three out of the twelve members of the present Commission are Indians. The editor considers that Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim has been appointed to the Commission to represent the Muslim League, and he expresses the hope that he will fully justify his nomination. He says that Mr. Gokhale will represent the Congress view but he expresses his inability to understand the appointment of a colourless politician like the Hon'ble Mr. Chaubal. He complains of the inadequate representation of the Indian community of all the provinces.

With regard to the European members of the Commission, he admits Lord Islington's qualifications for the office of president, but remarks that the appointment of a pronounced Liberal with a judicial training would have been better. He takes exception to the appointment of Lord Ronaldshay and Sir Valentine Chirol, and expresses pained surprise that a Liberal government should show so much weakness for enemies of Liberalism. He welcomes the appointment of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, and expresses the opinion that Sir Theodore Morrison and the Hon'ble Mr. Madge have been appointed to represent the non-official Europeans and Eurasians. He expresses the hope that Sir Murray Hammick and Mr. F. G. Sly will protect the interests of the Civil Service, but expresses his inability to understand the appointment of Mr. Laurius Fisher.

He concludes his note with the remark that he entertains a certain amount of misgiving as to the result of the Commission.

11. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 expresses dissatisfaction at the composition of the Public Service Commission. The editor remarks that a single non-official like the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale cannot do much on a Commission consisting of reactionaries like Sir Valentine Chirol.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 4th August 1912 expresses gratification at the appointment of the Public Service Commission but disapproves of its personnel. The editor expresses regret that while there is only one non-official Indian on the Commission, there are two such avowed opponents of educated Indians as Lord Ronaldshay and Sir Valentine Chirol. He protests against the absence of a member from Upper India, and urges that the United Provinces should be represented. He concludes by expressing his approval of the appointment of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim.

ADVOCATE, 4th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

13. A correspondent who signs himself "A CONGRESSMAN" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 6th August 1912, in which he complains that while the Civil Service and other European services are fully represented on the Public Service Commission by civilians like Sir Murray Hammick and Mr. Sly and by non-official Europeans like Sir Valentine Chirol and the Earl of Ronaldshay, the representation of the Indian community in general and of the Hindus in particular is not only poor in numbers but extremely unsatisfactory in its nature.

LEADER, 6th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

He expresses surprise at the demand of the Anglo-Indian press for a larger representation of the Civil Service, and he deplores the attempt made to discredit a true friend of India like Mr. Ramsay Macdonald. He assures Indians that they should expect nothing from a reactionary like Sir Valentine Chirol and he tells Muhammadans that though the Earl of Ronaldshay has sought to protect their interests in the House of Commons, they need not expect much from him when the point at issue is one between Indians and Anglo-Indians.

He characterizes the Earl of Ronaldshay as a most pronounced opponent to Indian progress and considers him a greater reactionary than even Sir John Rees. He expresses the opinion that Muslim interests will be safe-guarded by Sir Theodore Morrison and Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim whilst Mr. Madge will see that the interests of Anglo-Indians are not overlooked.

He says that though the chairman and Mr. Laurius Fisher possess open minds they have no knowledge of Indian conditions. Mr. Chaubal he terms a political nonentity.

He protests against the non-inclusion in the Commission of representatives from Bengal, Behar, United Provinces and the Punjab, and he urges Indians to proclaim their want of confidence in the Commission and to agitate for the inclusion of more Indian members.

Commenting on the above, the editor says that the appointment of Lord Ronaldshay and Sir Valentine Chirol is an insult to educated Indians, and he expresses regret that the Tory and the Anglo-Indian press should have asked for the withdrawal of an able and a just and high-minded Englishman like Mr. Ramsay Macdonald from the Commission.

He urges the appointment of three more Indians so that as in the case of the Public Service Commission of 1886, there may be six Indians on the Commission.

He recommends the appointment of two Congress leaders and he urges that Raja Sir Harnam Singh should be selected as the representative of the Indian Christian community.

In conclusion he invites attention to the deep disappointment produced throughout India by the constitution of the Commission as evidenced by the protest resolution of the United Provinces Congress committee.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th August 1912.

Indians in the public services.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 states, on the authority of the India (London), that only eighteen out of the three hundred and ninety-seven higher appointments under the Government of India are filled by Indians. The editor expresses regret that though there are many highly-educated Indians at the present day, Government does not give a larger number of the higher appointments to Indians who are qualified to fill them.

LEADER, 8th August 1912.

Indians in the public services.

15. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912 complains that out of one hundred and twelve officers in the Government of India Secretariat, only eleven are Indians, and that one hundred and one appointments which carry high salaries are filled by Europeans. The editor expresses surprise at the statement made by the Tory and Anglo-Indian press that the irreducible minimum only of Europeans is now employed under the Government of India, and he protests against the opposition of this section of the press to the appointment of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald to the Public Service Commission.

LEADER, 6th August 1912.

Mr. Montagu's visit to India.

16. Referring to the impending visit of Mr. Montagu to India the Leader (Allahabad) of the 6th August 1912 remarks that Indians regard him as the best and ablest Parliamentary Under Secretary India has ever had.

The editor expresses regret that an Indian journal should have suggested that the expenses of his voyage should not be met from Indian revenues.

He asserts that in view of Mr. Montagu's proved friendliness to Indian aspirations his visit will in all probability be of great service to the country, and he remarks that it argues a small mind to raise a question on such a paltry matter in connection with a visit which has such immense possibilities for good to India. In conclusion he expresses the hope that all sections of the people will demonstrate their good will and respect for him.

LEADER, 2nd August 1912.

Sir John Hewett's speech.

17. Referring to Sir John Hewett's reply to the eulogistic speech delivered by the Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal at the conclusion of the Council meeting on the 1st August, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 asserts that the critics of Sir John Hewett's administration have been impelled only by a sense of public duty.

With regard to His Honour's remarks about the work of the members of the Council, the editor observes that though nobody wants members to put superfluous questions and make verbose speeches, yet the public demands that there should be certain moral and mental qualities in the members.

He thanks His Honour for his emphatic words on the provincial financial settlement question, and expresses regret that the Government of India did not take any action in the matter.

LEADER, 3rd August 1912.

Sir John Hewett's speech.

18. Referring to the reply of Sir John Hewett to the Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal's eulogy of his administration at Thursday's Council meeting, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 3rd August 1912 remarks that His Honour's opposition to a council form of government, and the character of the regulations gover ning council elections framed by him do not further the cause of the political advancement of the educated classes. The editor expresses agreement with Sir John Hewett's remarks about the unjust decision of the Government of India in the matter of provincial financial settlement, and says that His Honour deserves the thanks of the province for his repeated efforts to get justice done to its claims. He urges the people to keep up a vigorous agitation for the revision of the financial settlement, and expresses the hope that Sir James Meston and the Hon'ble Mr. Gillan will support the popular demand.

He congratulates Sir John Hewett on the United Provinces Village Sanitation Bill and on the Adulteration of Food and Drugs Bill.

He expresses disapproval of the large number of superfluous questions put by members at Thursday's Council meeting, and advises them to devote more time and energy to the study of public questions. In referring to the answers to certain questions he expresses dissatisfaction at the reply to the Hon'ble Rai Ganga Prasad Varma's question regarding the King George Medical College. As regards the registration of the names of persons visiting Naini Tal, he urges that Government should see that respectable Indian gentlemen are not insulted by being called on to give their names to the registration officer.

ADVOCATE, 4th August 1912.

The last council meeting.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 4th August 1912 expresses its gratification at the passing of the Village Sanitation Bill, and urges Government to seek the co-operation of the village population when framing the rules of the Bill. The editor congratulates Government on the passing of the Foods and Drugs Adulteration Bill, and urges municipalities to provide their health officers with laboratories. He invites attention to the adulteration of various articles with ghee, and says that the people have every reason to be grateful for what has been done by Government to promote their health and to respect their sentiment.

He expresses disapproval of the questions regarding the number of Muhammadan recipients of coronation certificates in Aligarh and of the number of Muhammadan honorary magistrates in Dataganj tahsil, and says that such questions are likely to create bad feelings.

Referring to the question about the Kurmi girl said to have been detained by missionaries in the Rae Bareli district, he expresses the hope that the father of the girl will prove his identity and that she will be restored to her parents.

He expresses dissatisfaction at the reply about the breaking up of the anniversary meeting of the Arya Samaj at Pilibhit, and urges Government to institute a thorough enquiry into the matter.

He expresses regret that the regulations about the registration of bad characters at Naini Tal have been flagrantly disobeyed, and says that an inspection of the register kept by the head constable at the Rais Hotel would reveal the names of a large number of respectable persons.

With regard to the inability of the Hon'ble Mr. Goument to influence railway administration, he insists that the Local Government should at least be in a position to be able to make enquiries about the truth of the allegations made and refer the result of their enquiry to the Railway Board.

He concludes by thanking Sir John Hewett for his strong appeal for the revision of the financial settlement of the United Provinces Government.

ABHYUDAYA, 4th August 1912.

The coming council elections.

20. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 urges that in view of the increased responsibilities of members of Council the defects in the present method of canvassing should be remedied. The editor expresses regret that most of the candidates for election to the Council are actuated by a desire for fame and have not sufficient moral courage to oppose the official members. He impresses upon electors the necessity for showing a more intelligent appreciation of the duty that devolves upon them by returning only the best men available, men who have shown that they possess character and public spirit. He urges candidates to base their claims for the support of the electors only on grounds of public good, and says that the Congress committees and Hindu Sabhas should help the voters to elect the best representatives.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st August 1912.

Representation of Indian merchants on the Legislative Council of Bengal.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st August 1912 refers to the statement that appeared in the Capital (Calcutta) that the European merchants of Calcutta will be allowed to have four representatives on the Provincial Legislative Council, and expresses the hope that, in case this report is true, Lord Carmichael, who has several times assured Indians that they will receive the same treatment as Europeans, will earn the gratitude of the Indian merchants of Calcutta by allowing them adequate representation in his Council.

Legal training of civilian Judges.

22. Referring to a suggestion made in the Pioneer (Allahabad) to the effect that civilian Judges should be employed solely on judicial work and should be given a better legal training, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 4th August 1912 urges the separation of the judicial and executive functions and the adoption of an improved method of recruitment of Judges. The editor complains of the inadequate legal training of civilian Judges, and insists that Government should see that members of the Indian Civil Service, who select the judicial line, get better legal training.

LEADER, 4th August 1912.

Extension of Sir Cecil Brett's term as Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

23. Referring to the application made for an extension of service by Sir Cecil Brett, a civilian Judge of the Calcutta High Court, who has attained sixty years of age, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th August 1912 advises the Secretary of State not to encourage such applications. The editor remarks that the independence of the High Court cannot be maintained if Judges are to look to the executive for favours. He says that the granting of Sir Cecil Brett's application would be a great blunder and would diminish the confidence of Indians in High Court Judges in cases in which there is a point at issue between the judiciary and the executive.

LEADER, 8th August 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

24. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912 has the following:—

"Mr. Montagu's replies to Mr. MacCallum Scott about the case of the Khan of Hoti Mardan will be received with surprise in India. The facts put together in the pamphlet published by the Khan and the severe remarks of Sir Dinsha Davar from the bench of the Bombay High Court when he tried the case, justify the public in concluding that serious injustice was done to, and unmerited indignities were inflicted upon the Khan, and no evidence to the contrary has been produced to remove the painful impression created in the public mind. In the absence of such rebutting evidence the public will persist in believing in the Khan's innocence and they will think that the Government of India and the Secretary of State have failed to do justice in the case."

25. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 expresses surprise that the Secretary of the Legislative Council permitted the disclosure of the voting papers at the time of the election of the members of the Finance Committee and did not draw the attention of the chairman to this irregularity. The editor states that two members considered their presence on the Finance Committee so necessary that each gave all his votes to himself.

LEADER, 2nd August 1912.

The Indian budget debate.

26. Referring to the debate on the Indian budget in the House of Commons the Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 lends its support to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's suggestion for the appointment of an independent auditor and accountant general. The editor expresses agreement with Mr. Montagu's view that things with regard to the opium trade with China should be allowed to remain where they are under the present treaty and he notes his approval of Mr. Charles Roberts's suggestion that the people should be given greater power in determining the number and location of liquor shops.

27. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 2nd August 1912 expresses satisfaction at the sympathetic tone of Mr. Montagu's speech on the Indian budget, and at his belief in the growing spirit of nationality in India. The editor expresses the hope that with increased capacity on the part of Indians and better will on the part of England, India will ultimately attain to self-government on colonial lines. He expresses regret that Mr. Montagu did not share Mr. Gokhale's view of the necessity for free and compulsory education in India, and he asks Indians to take hope from Mr. Montagu's sympathy for educational expansion. He urges Indians to carry on the work of popularizing primary education, and he expresses the hope that primary education will become free and compulsory in the near future. He expresses disapproval of Mr. Mallet's appointment, and concludes by expressing appreciation of Mr. Montagu's enthusiasm for progress.

28. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 4th August 1912 expresses gratification at the spirit of genuine Liberalism that pervaded the whole of Mr. Montagu's speech in presenting the Indian budget in the House of Commons. The editor expresses gratitude to Mr. Montagu for his belief in the "growing spirit of nationality in India," and for his aversion to "out of date advice" and "repression." He expresses admiration of Mr. Montagu's fine peroration regarding the harmonious co-mingling of the East and the West, and concludes by thanking him for his sympathetic remarks about primary and technical education.

31. The Trishul (Benares) of the 31st July 1912 (received on the 7th August) deplores the introduction of Western education into India, and remarks that since its advent to this country people are becoming irreligious and are gradually abandoning their old customs and manners. The editor observes that this laxity of the people is the root cause of the present social disturbances in India. He warns the people to beware of the evil effects of Western education which he considers has deprived them of peace and happiness, and he urges them to follow in the footsteps of their ancestors and be up and doing in improving the condition of society and religion.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 31st July 1912.

Indian students in British Universities, and in which he advises Indian students who intend to pursue their studies in foreign countries to proceed to America, Germany or France. The editor says that similar advice was given by the Hon'ble Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu on his return from England, and remarks that, apart from the question of racial feelings, the sojourn of Indian students in England does not prove beneficial to them, that as it leads to their despising their own countrymen and their mother-tongue.

He says that it has been observed that Indian students who have been educated in America take more interest in the elevation of their countrymen and in the advancement of their mother-tongue, and he therefore argues that America is the most suitable foreign country for Indian students.

The raising of school fees.

33. The editor of the Educational Magazine (Ghazipur) in the issue for July 1912 (received on the 8th August), refers to the general complaint against the increase of fees in government schools, and remarks that young men can bring about the regeneration of India not by working as clerks but by following industrial pursuits.

He urges the establishment of commercial and industrial schools throughout the country and appeals to public-spirited Indians to establish cheap private schools of the standard of government high schools.

MASHRIQ, 30th July 1912.

The raising of school fees.

34. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID AIJAZ HUSAIN (STUDENT) OF BUDAUN" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 30th July 1912 (received on the 3rd August), in which he points out that the raising of school fees will check the growth of higher education amongst the poorer middle classes. He expresses regret at the large percentage of failures at the last matriculation examination, and notes that unsuccessful candidates are for the most part being refused admission to government schools. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and suggests that more matriculation classes should be opened in the provinces and that school fees should be reduced.

He also expresses regret at the lack of system in vernacular schools, and complains of the harsh treatment of the pupils at the hands of the head masters of these schools.

He suggests that graduates should be appointed head masters of the central vernacular schools.

AL KHALIL, 1st August 1912.

The raising of school fees.

35. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 3rd August) takes exception to the raising of school fees in government schools and to the limiting of the number of pupils in each class.

The editor says that the rule regarding the number of students in each class has given head masters an opportunity of accepting illegal gratification and he complains that they admit only brilliant students to their schools in order to show a good percentage of passes, and that they refuse admission to mediocre and weak students.

He says that the test of good work done by a head master should not be judged by the percentage of successful candidates from his school, but that it should be carefully ascertained whether the school classes under his charge contained the maximum number of students fixed by the educational authorities. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and observes that if the rule regarding the number of students to each class is allowed to remain in force the growth of education will greatly suffer in the provinces.

ARYA MITRA, 1st August 1912.

The Darbar educational grant and the teachers of primary schools.

36. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 7th August) urges that the greater portion of the coronation grant of fifty lakhs of rupees for the extension of primary education should not be spent, as proposed by the Education Member, on providing buildings for primary schools, but that it should go towards improving the pay and prospects of the teachers of such schools.

AL MUSHIR, 4th August 1912.

The Agra Medical School and Muhammadans.

37. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 4th August 1912 protests against the order of the Principal of the Agra Medical School forbidding students to subscribe to Muhammadan newspapers. The editor attributes this order to the influence of the Hindu professors, and urges that some of them should be transferred to other institutions. He states that professor Modi remarked in the course of one of his lectures that cases of rape were more frequent among Muhammadans than among other races and the lecturer attributed this to the stimulating effects of meat. He asks the Principal to take serious notice of the anti-Muhammadan feelings of his subordinates.

ADVOCATE, 8th August 1912.

Muhammadan education and progress.

38. Referring to Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim's speech as president of the Muhammadan Educational Conference of South India, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th August 1912 expresses gratification at the increasing interest shown by Muhammadans in the growth of education in their community. The editor expresses the hope that within a very short time Muhammadans will be on the same level with the Hindus in the matter of education. He remarks that Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim stated that Muhammadans of different races played a considerable part in the history of civilization, and asserted that the motive power of all Islamic civilization was religion, and that Islam did not recognize any peculiarities of race, colour, climate or local history. He states that Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim attributed the decadence of Muhammadans to the assumption by rulers of Muhammadan states of absolute and despotic powers "in direct violation of the constitutional principle of Islam," to their gradual surrender to luxury and vices and to the disappearance of ideals among them. He says that Mr. Justice Rahim made a strong appeal for female education and that he favoured the combination of theological with scientific training in order to combat the drifting from the real spirit of Islam into "barren ritualism and virtual monasticism." He expresses his gratification that Mr. Justice Rahim urged his co-religionists to apply the eternal principles of Islam to their lives in the light of existing circumstances. He concludes by observing that Justice Rahim's utterance was characterized by a remarkable breadth of vision and clearness of insight and might be read with profit by Hindus.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

39. The editor of the Educational Magazine (Ghazipur) in the issue for July 1912 (received on the 8th August) says that if powers of affiliation are not granted the two denominational universities will be of no use to the country. He insists that no more subscriptions should be collected until the question of affiliation is finally decided. He suggests that in case Government refuses to accede to the popular demand the money already collected should be devoted to sending Indian students to foreign countries for technical education.

He urges the establishment of a technological institute and industrial workshop at some industrial centre.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 31st July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

40. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 31st July 1912 (received on the 5th August), in which he refers to the second press communiqué issued by the Government of India with regard to the powers of affiliation of the Hindu and Muslim Universities, and congratulates both the Hindus and Muhammadans on the fact that the final decision to limit the scope of the universities at Aligarh and Benares to its locality was arrived at by the Secretary of State for India and not by the Viceroy.

He says that the task of satisfying the Government of India as to the necessity for granting powers of affiliation to the Hindu and Muslim Universities has now become much easier, and that there appears to be no reason why the Government should refuse the universities the power of affiliation.

He takes exception to the limiting of the scope of the Dacca University, and remarks that the limitation imposed on the university will be interpreted to mean that Government does not want Muhammadans outside Dacca to receive a university education.

In conclusion he expresses regret that contributions towards the universities have practically ceased since the issue of the press communiqué.

STRI DARPAN, August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

41. The Stri Darpan (Allahabad) for August 1912 (received on the 7th August), states that the announcement that the Government of India has finally decided that the educational scope of the proposed denominational universities will be confined to the limits of Aligarh and Benares has created profound disappointment throughout the country. The editor says that the only result of the Government announcement will be that Hindus and Muhammadans will close contributing towards the universities and he expresses surprise that while a sum of rupees ten lakhs was considered sufficient for the establishment of the Dacca University, the proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities were required to provide a minimum sum of rupees thirty-five and fifty lakhs respectively before any legislation could be undertaken on their behalf.

KAISER-I-HIND, 1st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

42. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 7th August) says that the announcement of the Government of India in regard to the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities has caused deep sorrow to Indians generally and to Muhammadans in particular. The editor says that a Muslim University, without the power of affiliation, will be a useless institution, and observes that it will be very unwise of the Muhammadans to accept a university with limited powers.

He fails to understand the reasons on which Government has based its decision in regard to the power of affiliation, and remarks that the attitude of Government indicates an unjust suspicion of the loyalty of the Muhammadans.

He urges the organizers of the Muslim University scheme to make efforts to get the decision of Government in the matter rescinded, and he asks them not to accept a university in the management of which they would have no voice.

ARYA MITRA, 1st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

43. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 7th August), says that it was anticipated that the establishment of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities would diminish the difficulties experienced by students in getting admission into schools owing to the rule limiting the number of each class to thirty-three boys. The editor expresses regret that this anticipation will not be realized owing to the decision of the Government that the educational scope of the proposed universities will be confined to the localities in which they are founded.

OUDH AKHBAR, 1st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

44. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 3rd August), expresses regret at the recent press communiqué issued by the Government of India with regard to the power of affiliation to the Hindu and Muslim Universities, and remarks that it will have a depressing effect on the organizers of the university scheme, and that it will also hinder the further realization of funds.

The editor advises the organizers of both the Hindu and Muslim University schemes not to lose heart, but to continue their efforts and he asks Government to reconsider its decision in the matter.

OUDH AKHBAR, 2nd August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

45. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 2nd August 1912 remarks that the announcement that the Government of India has finally decided that the educational scope of the two denominational universities will be confined to the limits of Aligarh and Benares, has created profound disappointment throughout the country.

The editor asserts that a certain section of the Muhammadans was opposed to the Aligarh College and subscribed to the Muslim University fund under the impression that the educational scope of the proposed university would not be confined to the limits of Aligarh itself. He says that the public will now think that the real intention of the Muhammadan leaders was to collect funds for the Aligarh College, and that the term Muslim University was used simply to arouse public enthusiasm. He invites the attention of Government to the false position in which both Hindu and Muhammadan leaders are at present placed, and urges it not to disregard the united protests of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities by adhering to its decision.

AL BASHIR, 6th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

46. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 6th August 1912 takes exception to the suggestion made by some newspapers that the Hindus and Muhammadans should make united efforts to induce Government to rescind its decision about the grant of the power of affiliation to the Hindu and Muslim Universities.

The editor refers to the editorial note of the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 30th July and the 1st August in which the Hindus were advised to accept the Hindu University even if the power of affiliation were not granted to it, and says that the Muhammadans should not follow the Hindus in the matter.

He asks his co-religionists to carefully consider whether the university that Government is prepared to grant to them on present conditions will be for the good of the community or not.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 31st July 1912.

47. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 31st July 1912 (received on the 5th August), in which he disagrees with the proposal that the organizers of the Hindu and Muslim University schemes should raise their protests from a common platform against the recent press communiqué issued by the Government of India with regard to the power of affiliation. He objects to any joint protest being made on the ground that the Muhammadans being in the minority would gain no advantage by joining hands with the Hindu majority.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

He advises his co-religionists to ever remain conscious of their nationality, and observes that the Muhammadans would commit a grave error if they made a common cause with the Hindus in the matter seeing that besides the university question there are other far more important matters on which the views of the two communities are likely to come into conflict.

Discussing the subject of nationality he remarks that if India ever obtains self-government, the Muhammadans can only benefit by it if they remain an independent nation.

He strongly urges the necessity for maintaining a separate Muhammadan political institution in order to support the British rule in India on the continuance of which the prosperity of the Muhammadans depends.

AL BASHIR, 30th July 1912.

48. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 30th July 1912 (received on the 5th August), observes that the announcement of the Government of India in regard to the educational scope of the proposed denominational universities has created much sorrow throughout the country. The editor expresses doubt as to whether the Government will reconsider its decision in the matter and says that the Muhammadan public should decide whether a charter should be accepted for the university on the conditions on which Government is prepared to grant one.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He states that there are no Muhammadan residential colleges outside Aligarh, and remarks that it is useless to press for the affiliation of colleges outside Aligarh. He urges that Islamia schools should be established in all educational centres and should be affiliated to the Muslim University. He expresses regret that the scope of the Muslim University has been curtailed, and says that as the courses adopted in the Muslim University will be different from the curriculum of government institutions, students of government schools will derive no benefit from the university, with the result that it will be necessary to open Islamia schools. He expresses the opinion that unless the question of affiliation is definitely decided it is useless to apply for a charter for the Muslim University. He suggests that in case Government does not rescind its decision, the funds that have been collected should be utilized for establishing Islamia high schools throughout the country and for extending the Aligarh College. In conclusion he suggests that Government should establish a residential university of its own at Aligarh and that the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College should be affiliated to it.

AL MUSHIR, 4th August 1912.

49. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 4th August 1912 says that the announcement that the Government of India has finally decided to limit the educational scope of the two denominational universities has created profound disappointment throughout the country. The editor urges Muhammadans to keep up a vigorous agitation against this decision, and to refuse to accept a university that has not powers of affiliation. He expresses his disapproval of the suggestion that a local university might be accepted for the time being, and that the question of an All-India university might be raised afterwards. He insists that the funds collected should be kept in deposit as a trust fund until Government consents to grant an All-India university. He urges Muhammadans not to neglect the important question of affiliation seeing that it will vitally affect the future interests of the university.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He expresses the hope that if Muhammadans show firmness and determination in their agitation Government will reconsider its decision.

will be that Hindus and Muhammadans will close contributing towards the universities and he expresses surprise that while a sum of rupees ten lakhs was considered sufficient for the establishment of the Dacca University, the proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities were required to provide a minimum sum of rupees thirty-five and fifty lakhs respectively before any legislation could be undertaken on their behalf.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

50. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th August 1912 insists that the proposed Muslim University should be entirely free from official control, and should be allowed to establish schools in every district. The editor contends that the Muslim University would not be able to mould the characters and minds of students who have not been trained in its schools. He says that the question of affiliation of colleges outside Aligarh is not so important, but remarks that it would be useless to have a university that had not the power of affiliating schools outside Aligarh.

AL BASHIR, 6th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

51. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 6th August 1912 expresses its regret at the opposition of the Muhammadans to the decision of the Government of India in regard to the educational scope of the Aligarh University. The editor urges his co-religionists not to quarrel with Government on its decision and asks them to consider the question of affiliation of high schools to the university.

He expresses the opinion that if Government is not prepared to grant the university the power of affiliation of high schools, the idea of establishing a university should be deferred for the present.

He says that if it is decided to postpone the establishment of the Muslim University the funds that have been collected should be utilized in sending students to European countries to complete their education.

With regard to the suggestion of the Observer (Lahore) that an Islamia college should be established in every province by means of the funds collected for the university he expresses the opinion that the proposal is preposterous as the funds are utterly inadequate for the establishment of more than one or two first grade schools.

He suggests that another college should be opened at Aligarh which should be conducted on the lines of the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College, Lahore.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 31st July 1912.

Reformation of prisoners.

52. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 31st July 1912 (received on the 5th August) expresses its gratification at the proposal of the Punjab Government to reform prisoners with the aid of the Salvation Army. The editor urges that other religious societies should also assist in the good work of reforming prisoners on equal terms with the Salvation Army.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans at Multan.

53. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st August 1912 invites the attention of Government to the strained relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans at Multan owing to a number of Muhammadans outraging the religious feelings of the Hindus by leading a mock Hindu procession through the streets of the city and by indulging in other insulting practices. The editor states, on the authority of the Panjabee (Lahore) that the district magistrate and the police were asked to interfere but they took no action. He expresses the hope that Government will call upon them to explain their conduct.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st August 1912.

Poverty in India and how to remove it.

54. One Pandit Brajnandan Prasad Misra contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st August 1912, in which he says that India has become a very poor country and he takes the European writers to task who have attempted to prove that India is growing more prosperous day by day. He quotes Mr. Grierson and Mr. Digby and other European writers to show that the majority of cultivators are living miserable lives of poverty, and says that it is because of their indigence that famine and plague make such strides among the people. He asks Government to improve the material condition of the country, and says that as India is an agricultural country the improvement of cultivation and of the condition of the cultivators will conduce to the prosperity of the people as a whole.

provisions of the Tenancy Act for the increase of rent should be abolished, that permanent settlement should be introduced in all parts of the country and that Government should abolish the landowner class and realize itself the rents from the tenants.

55. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st August 1912 (received on the 7th August) complains that, notwithstanding the notification of the local Government regarding the use of Hindi in courts, entries in summons and other court papers are not written in Nagri. ARYA MITRA, 1st August 1912.

The Nagri character in the courts.

56. A correspondent who signs himself "PRO-INDIAN" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 7th August 1912, in which he urges that the recruitment of the Indian Women's Medical Service should be by means of competitive examination and not by nomination. He condemns admission by selection as laying open the door to jobbery, and insists that only Indian women, or at any rate only women educated in Indian medical colleges, should be eligible for appointment. He suggests that if a British degree is considered essential, women educated in India should go to England to qualify themselves. He observes that if recruitment is permitted both in India and in England, Indian women will obviously never secure any of the higher appointments of the service. He expresses the opinion that if Indians refrain from subscribing until they are fairly treated in the matter of recruitment the scheme cannot be worked to the detriment of Indian women (sic). 58. The Theosophy in India (Benares) for July and August 1912 contains a letter signed by Miss Francesca Arundale and seventeen other councillors of the Indian section of the Theosophical Society in which they protest against the views expressed by the general secretary of the Indian section in the March-April number of Theosophy in India (vide Selections No. 15, paragraph 58), and express their approval of the policy and action of the President, Mrs. Annie Besant. THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, July and August 1912.

Theosophy and the Order of the Star in the East.

The letter is followed by a note by the editor, Babu Bhagwan Das, in which he recapitulates his views regarding the connection between the Order of the Star in the East and the Theosophical Society (vide Selections No. 24, paragraph 83), and says that as eighteen out of the twenty-seven councillors repudiate these views, early arrangements should be made to relieve him of his duties as general secretary of the Indian section.

59. The Theosophy in India (Benares) for July and August 1912 contains a short letter from Mrs. Annie Besant in which, while reiterating her belief in the birth of a new Jagat Guru in an Indian body she expresses entire agreement with the general secretary as to the supreme importance of Atma Vidya, and remarks that as she regarded the Order of the Star in the East as the embryo of a new religion she did not charter it as even a league of the Theosophical Society, but kept it as an entirely independent body outside the society. With regard to her remarks about the periodical "shaking out" of the feeble and half-hearted from the Theosophical Society, she disclaims any intention of having meant any reference to any present personal cult. THEOSOPHY IN INDIA, July and August 1912.

Theosophy and the Order of the Star in the East.

The letter is followed by a note by the editor, Babu Bhagwan Das, in which he thanks Mrs. Annie Besant for having declared that the Order of the Star in the East was the embryo of a new religion, like the Arya Samaj or the Brahmo Samaj, which might and did contribute members to the Theosophical Society, but which could not be regarded as a subsidiary activity, much less as an essential or integral part of the society. He expresses his anxiety as to the attitude the eighteen protestant councillors (vide para. supra) will adopt now that their leader has declared that the Theosophical Society and the Order of the Star in the East are two entirely distinct and separate bodies.

ANAND, 1st August 1912.

The life of Christ.

60. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 1st August 1912 reproduces an article entitled "Hollowness of Christianity" from the Bharat Mitra (Calcutta) in which it is alleged that Christ was born of ordinary parents, that he came to India to learn wisdom from the Buddhists and Hindus, and that on his return to Judea he preached a new religion which was afterwards called Christianity. It is stated that this sketch of the life of Christ is the result of the researches of a Russian named Notowitch in Central Asia.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st August 1912.

Infliction of injuries on a bull by certain Muhammadans of Rasulpur (Allahabad).

61. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st August 1912 says that it has received a letter from a local correspondent who complains that a number of Muhammadans of Rasulpur severely beat and wounded a (sacred) bull in the Daryabad ward, and then tried to take the animal away on a hand cart but the Hindu residents remonstrated with them and sent for the police. No arrests however were made. The editor remarks that several instances of Muhammadans trying to injure the religious feelings of Hindus have lately come to light, and he points out that occurrences of this nature are likely to create ill-feeling between the two communities and to lead to a breach of the peace. He expresses the hope that the district magistrate will make a searching enquiry into the matter and punish the offenders.

1. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 25th July and 1st and 8th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), publishes a short drama entitled "Children of India," the object of which seems to be to show the overbearing and imperious attitude of Anglo-Indian officials towards Indians, and the absence of unity on the part of the latter.

ANAND, 25th July and 1st and 8th August 1912.

The regeneration of India.

India is first represented as in a swoon and one of her well-wishers appeals to educated Indians to restore her to her senses. A number of educated Indians assemble and decide that a deputation consisting of an editor, a poet and a Bengali with a president, should wait upon the local officials and then draft a petition to the Emperor detailing the grievances of India and asking for their redress. The grievances are said to be the non-recognition of Hindi as the court language in the United Provinces, oppression by the police and railway employés, excessive taxation, shooting accidents, cow-killing, the non-employment of the educated classes and general ill-treatment at the hands of Europeans.

The deputation waits upon an Anglo-Indian official with the petition, and he warns the members against such combined action in future, and intimates that if they disregard his warning they will be punished for disloyalty.

As they appear to doubt his words, he abuses them and tells them to go away. The Bengali protests against such treatment, and the official again abuses him and threatens to shoot him. Other members of the deputation then intervene and they all depart.

They then go to where India is lying, and while telling her well-wisher the result of the interview they quarrel among themselves.

The well-wisher deplores the general disunion among Indians, and says that they cannot obtain redress of their grievances while they are divided among themselves. He advises them to represent their grievances to the Queen-Empress, assuring them that they will receive better treatment at her hands. They, however, refuse to do so. The well-wisher then commits suicide, praying to God to bring Indians to their right senses.

2. The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) in the combined issue for July and August 1912 (received on the 12th August), takes exception to the prohibition by the Government of India of the importation of the Islamic Fraternity (Tokyo) into India, and remarks that the prohibition is the worst instance of the severity of the Press Act. He says that the action of the Government of India will not prevent the editor of the paper from carrying on his missionary work in Japan, nor will it injure the paper financially, but that it will clearly demonstrate to Indians generally and to Muhammadans in particular, the value of the vaunted toleration of English civilization.

URDU-I-MUALLA, July and August 1912.

The importation of the Islamic Fraternity (Tokyo) into India.

3. Haji Muhammad Musa Khan, Joint Secretary, All-India Muslim League, contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 10th August), in which he asserts that though there have always been different political parties among the Muhammadans, the majority of them have followed the lead of men like Sir Saiyid, Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk and Nawab Viqar-ul-mulk. He states that under the guidance of Nawab Viqar-ul-mulk the Muslim League became a really central and representative political organization of Indian Muhammadans, and he expresses regret that, since the Nawab severed his connection with the league, it has been losing its influence.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 7th August 1912.

The Muslim League and the future political policy of Muhammadans.

He deplores the growth of conflicting political parties among Muhammadans which, instead of doing any useful constructive national work, waste their energies in opposing each other. He warns his co-religionists against establishing any new political organization and against permitting the Muslim League to become extinct, and urges them to reform it. He suggests that the Muslim League should be purged of all its defects and should be entirely freed from personal influences, and he recommends that Nawab Viqar-ul-mulk should be requested to convene a conference of the different Muhammadan political parties to decide the future policy of the community, and that the Muslim League should be reorganized on a democratic and popular basis.

Commenting on the above, the editor invites attention to the statement that, after the severance of Nawab Viqar-ul-mulk's connection with the Muslim League, it was ruined by the machinations of certain inexperienced and self-willed persons, and expresses agreement with Haji Musa Khan's assertion that the Muslim League has gradually lost its hold in the country. He reminds his readers that when he warned the Muslim public that the League was being controlled by a certain high-placed individual, and that it had lost its democratic character, his criticisms and suggestions were ridiculed by his contemporaries.

He suggests that the Muslim press throughout India should be given at least two or three months' time to discuss the reorganization of the League in all its details, and that the proposed conference should show due consideration for the opinions expressed in the press. He insists that the conference should not consist of self-seeking title-holders and magnates, but that it should be thoroughly democratic in its composition. In conclusion he lends his support to the suggestion that Nawab Viqar-ul-mulk should convene the proposed conference, and should try to make the Muslim League a truly representative and democratic institution.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th August 1912.

Council elections.

4. A correspondent who signs himself "A VOTER" contributes a long letter to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912, in which he says that the reformed councils have not done much good to the public, and remarks that although defective council regulations and racial considerations are to some extent responsible for this the electors of the non-official members are chiefly to blame for it, seeing that they did not exercise their discrimination in electing the men best qualified by character, education and training to represent their interests in the council.

He urges that in future electors should not return members who merely seek election as an advertisement and do no useful work in the council. He says that the merits and public services of the candidates are the only qualifications that should carry weight with voters, and that no importance should be attached to other considerations. He also suggests that electors should exact an undertaking from all candidates that after their election they will always consult them on all questions of importance, and will never neglect their interests.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th August 1912.

The presidentship of the next session of the Indian National Congress.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912 expresses its surprise at the recommendation of the Bombay Congress Committee that His Highness Sir Agha Khan should be nominated as president of the next session of the Congress. The editor concedes that Sir Agha Khan has worked zealously for the Muhammadans, but contends that he has done nothing to deserve such an honour at the hands of an All-India institution like the Indian National Congress.

He remarks that, besides this, Sir Agha Khan's ideals are quite different from those of the Congress, and he urges that all old Congressmen, who have spent the whole of their lives in the service of the country, should have precedence before him in the matter of being elected as president of the Congress.

ADVOCATE, 11th August 1912.

Indians in British colonies.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 11th August 1912 refers to the proceedings of a public meeting held in Bombay to protest against the treatment accorded to British Indians resident in the colonies. The editor remarks that the position of His Majesty's Indian subjects in the colonies has been a cause of great discontent, and it is the duty of other important cities to follow the example set by Bombay and thereby show that they have realized the gravity of the situation. He discusses the disabilities under which British Indian residents labour in South Africa and other British colonies, and refers to the fact that it is the presence of a considerable number of Indian inhabitants that has principally contributed to the development of certain colonies. He goes on to say that the weakness shown by the Home Government and its inability to vindicate the claims of British Indians to elementary civil rights, have encouraged Foreign States to adopt in their own territories a racial policy in regard to Indian colonists similar to that in force in British colonies, and in conclusion he deplores the fact that the Home Government, in spite of all remonstrances, should have failed to safeguard the interests of Indians in the colonies.

LEADER, 13th August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

7. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 13th August 1912 refers to the comment of the Times of India (Bombay) on the annual meeting of the Muslim League and its desire for more cordial relations with the Hindus, and remarks that the Hindus have no desire to chill the enthusiasm of their Muslim fellow-countrymen in regard to creating a better state of feeling, and that they are not responsible for the bad feeling that exists in certain parts of the country. The editor says that a frank recognition of the differences between the two communities and an honest endeavour on both sides to minimize them and intensify the points of agreement will bring about unity. He accordingly suggests that a conference of moderate and reasonable representatives of both communities under the chairmanship of one who is neither a Hindu nor a Muhammadan but who at the same time commands respect and confidence, should be convened to discuss in a spirit of compromise the outstanding questions that have created disunion and tend to perpetuate it. He expresses the opinion thatit is less the questions upon which there has been disagreement than the spirit and temper in which agitation has been conducted that is responsible for the unhappy estrangement.

LEADER, 15th August 1912.

The Governor of Bombay.

8. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 15th August 1912 says that although Sir George Clarke's term of office will expire in a couple of months, his successor as Governor of Bombay has not yet been appointed, and mentions a similar delay in the appointment of Sir Arthur Lawley's successor in Madras. The editor enquires if there is a scarcity of qualified politicians or administrators in the Liberal ranks, and says that this can hardly be the case when regard is had to the abundance of talent in the progressive party.

ZAMANA, July 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

9. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore) in the issue for July 1912 (received on the 13th August), expresses satisfaction at the protests made throughout India against the statement made by Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

He expresses agreement with the opinion expressed by the Statesman and the Empire (Calcutta) that in course of time Indians will be able to take the administration of their country into their own hands, and that to hold a contrary belief is an insult to Indians and to the British Government.

He notes with pleasure that most Muhammadan papers hold the same opinion as their Hindu contemporaries on the question of Indian autonomy, and he reminds his readers of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's statement that Indians should give no thought to the interpretations put by Government officials on their aspirations, but that they should boldly and perseveringly adhere to their just demand for self-government within the British Empire.

He goes on to say that in establishing the reformed councils the Government of India has advanced Indians in the direction of self-government, and that, in spite of Lord Crewe's statement, they have fixed self-government as their ultimate goal. He states that Indians cannot now look backward, and that when they are fully qualified to administer the affairs of their country, no Government, much less the benign British Government, can refuse them their just demands.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 7th August 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

10. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), says that for some years past it has been fashionable for statesmen in England to stifle the political hopes and aspirations of Indians. The editor remarks that even Lord Morley adopted this policy and that it was the desire to become a fashionable statesman that led Lord Crewe to make his recent pronouncement regarding the future government of India in which he asserted that Indians could never obtain self-government.

OUDH AKHBAR, 9th August 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

11. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 9th August 1912 (received on the 12th August), expresses regret at the statement made by Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy, and enquires if His Lordship wished to create further agitation in India by his statement. The editor remarks that it was not wise of him to shatter all hopes for self-government in India, seeing that the goal of all educated Indians is to acquire that self-government or swaraj for their country which was held out to them by Royal promises in the past.

He says that educated and liberal Indians have now realized that in demanding their just rights from Government they should no longer pursue a policy of flattery and sycophancy, and he expresses his gratification at the fact that since the annulment of the partition of Bengal the Muhammadans too have changed their policy. He states that most of the educated Muhammadans now concur in the views of the Congress, and he asks the members of both communities to work together for the political evolution of their country.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th August 1912 refers to the criticism of the Times and of its correspondent "AN IMPERIALIST" on the appointment of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald to the Indian Public Service Commission, and says that the composition of the Commission is unsatisfactory, and that the enquiry will be a farce if men of independent views like Mr. Ramsay Macdonald are removed from it. The editor expresses the opinion that the Commission will be a satisfactory one and will be acceptable to Indians if impartial Europeans and non-official representatives of the different provinces are chosen to sit upon it. He observes that some people are discussing the advisability of the non-represented provinces declining to give evidence before the Commission, and he expresses the hope that all provinces will act unanimously in the matter.

ADVOCATE, 11th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 11th August 1912 lends its support to the representation made by the United Provinces Congress Committee to the Secretary of State for India in regard to the Public Service Commission, and expresses the hope that it will receive the attention it deserves. The editor remarks that the committee is perfectly right in stating that the last Public Service Commission did not do full justice to the claims of Indians, seeing that the position of the latter in the public service was not improved by it. He takes exception to the personnel of the Commission which, he says, has caused deep dissatisfaction to the Indian public, and observes that if its recommendations fail to give satisfaction to the people, it will be owing to its faulty constitution. He states that the Indian element in the public life of these provinces has not deteriorated to such an extent that Government could not find a single member for the Commission. He also complains that while Muhammadan interests will be represented by Mr. Justice Abdul Rahim, Lord Ronaldshay and Sir Theodore Morrison, there is not one member on the Commission who will look at things from the purely Hindu point of view. He discusses the desirability of having on the Commission a representative of the type of the Hon'ble Lala Shadi Lal in view of the fact that the Government of India has itself introduced racial considerations in the matter of the employment of Indians. He urges that the Commission is the result of the labours of the Congress, and remarks that if in 1886 it was conceded that the Commission should have at least four members of Congress views, and if in the Royal Commission on public expenditure it was thought necessary to take four members belonging to the Congress school of thought, there is no reason why there should be only one Congressman on the present Commission. He also refers to the non-representation of the Indian Christian community.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 11th August 1912 points out the need for employing a much larger number of Indians in the higher grades of the public service so as to keep a large portion of the money disbursed in the payment of high officers in the country, to give ample opportunities to Indians to learn the art of government and above all to impress upon them their equality with Europeans. The editor says that when the announcement about the appointment of the Public Service Commission was made, it was expected that as it would consider the grievances of Indians with regard to their more general employment in the public service, they would be adequately represented on it. He expresses regret that this expectation has met with keen disappointment, seeing that out of the twelve members of the Commission only three are Indians.

He observes that six Indians were members of the Commission of 1886, and he urges that as education has considerably advanced during this interval, more than fifty per cent. of the Commission of 1912 should be Indians. He urges Indians to protest against the personnel of the Commission, and to start a vigorous agitation to secure further representation.

He remarks that the grievances of the people will not be redressed unless they prove to Government that they have no confidence in the Commission and refuse it their co-operation.

He suggests that protest meetings should be held in all parts of the country and that these meetings should not merely pass resolutions but should decide upon the attitude that the people should adopt towards the Commission.

The Public Service Commission.

15. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 13th August 1912 referring to the criticism of the Anglo-Indian press of the composition of the Public Service Commission, and to the observation of the Pioneer (Allahabad) to the effect that the public in India would have some confidence in the Commission's ability to do justice to the great task that has been entrusted to it had the Home Government secured for the Commission the services of men such as the present Lieutenant-Governor of these provinces, remarks that the Indian public will have complete confidence in the Commission only if more leaders of Indian thought and opinion are included in it. The editor expresses doubt as to whether Lord Islington, the Hon'ble Mr. Madge and the Hon'ble Mr. Chaubal will bring themselves to do anything that may not be relished by the Civil Service, and remarks that it is Indians as against Europeans and Hindus as against Muhammadans who are grossly under-represented.

LEADER, 13th August 1912.

Indians in the higher branches of the public services.

16. Referring to the opposition of the Morning Post (London) to the introduction of more Indians into the Civil Service, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 9th August 1912 expresses surprise at the fact that, even when there are so few Indians in that service, some Tories and Anglo-Indians see nothing but "the gradual weakening of the British hold on India," and the eventual destruction of the British Indian Empire in every concession to just Indian claims. The editor contends that persistence in unjust and little-minded policies will not increase the stability of the British Government, and says that every fresh act of justice and magnanimity done by British statesmanship will further strengthen the already solid and durable foundations of British rule in India. He ridicules the contention that the British "are at present working on a minimum strength, holding only such key positions as are absolutely essential to the integrity of British administration," and that "if these are abandoned, British rule will be weakened." He invites attention to the fact that out of the two hundred and sixty-nine secretariat officers employed in the Imperial and Provincial secretariats of India, only twenty-four are Indians, and that they fill posts carrying small emoluments. He enquires if all the remaining posts are "key positions" which the British can abandon only at their peril or if the introduction of more Indian officers into the secretariats would bring British rule to an end. He urges Indians to carry on their agitation for a greater share of public emoluments undeterred by any misapprehension that the maximum of concessions has been reached, and assures them that victory will in the long run be on their side.

LEADER, 9th August 1912.

Indians in the higher branches of the public services.

17. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 11th August 1912 complains that although only eleven officers out of a total of one hundred and twelve officers in the Government of India Secretariat are Indians, the Anglo-Indian papers maintain without justification that the irreducible minimum of European officers has been reached, and that any reduction in their number will constitute a political danger. The editor observes that if Indians were appointed as district judges in place of Europeans the foundation of British rule in India could in no way be weakened. He says that Indians could similarly be appointed in other departments without any prejudicial effect on Government.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th August 1912.

Indians in the higher branches of the public services.

18. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 13th August 1912 draws the attention of the members of the Public Service Commission to the disadvantage of employing Europeans in high appointments in India as, after completing their service, they go away to their own country, with the result that the vast and varied experience in administrative affairs that they have gained at the expense of India is entirely lost. The editor remarks that if a greater number of Indians were employed in the higher administrative posts carrying responsibility and real power, the evil would be considerably minimized and India would be richer by the presence of men in the country whose services after retirement would be of immense value in the task of moulding the future destinies of the people. He concludes by saying that it would ultimately be to the good, both of India and England, that the present method of recruitment for the public service should undergo a radical change, and that the higher, wiser and juster principles of associating Indians in larger numbers with the work of administration in the higher spheres should be recognized.

The Maharaja Gwalior's donation to the Edinburgh University.

19. Referring to the Maharaja Gwalior's donation of £ 4,000 to the Edinburgh University on behalf of a chair on military subjects, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 13th August 1912 enquires if the Maharaja Scindhia ever ascertained, before he made the donation, whether Indian students could receive the benefit of lectures on military subjects, seeing that there is no suitable military career open to Indians in their own country. The editor remarks that the attendance at the lectures will be limited to Europeans, including the white colonials who treat Indians so magnificiently in their own lands, and says that by a judicious exercise of his gift of imagination the Maharaja Scindhia would have ascertained without difficulty that some little use could be found for his superfluous sixty thousand rupees in his own country and among his own people.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th August 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

20. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 11th August 1912 expresses regret that Mr. Montagu's reply to Mr. MacCallum Scott about the Hoti Mardan case was far from satisfactory. The editor says that the acquittal of the Khan of Hoti Mardan by the Bombay High Court and the severe remarks passed by Sir Dinsha Davar in disposing of the case as also the pamphlet published by the Khan show that serious injustice has been done to him, and that, unless convincing evidence to the contrary is produced, the general impression that he has been unjustly treated cannot be removed from the public mind. He applauds Mr. MacCallum Scott for his efforts to ascertian the truth, and says that the punishment of suspension inflicted on him should not disconcert him as he suffers in a noble cause.

ALMORA AKHBAR, July 1912.

The proposed municipal house tax at Almora.

21. The Almora Akhbar for July 1912 (received on the 16th August), takes exception to the proposed imposition of a house tax in lieu of octroi duty at Almora, on the ground that it will prove more burdensome to the citizens.

The editor expresses doubt as to whether the house tax will meet the needs of the municipality, seeing that government buildings which form the chief property in Almora have been exempted from it.

He observes that when the people prefer octroi duty to a house tax Government should not press for the imposition of the latter, and he urges the people of Almora to submit a respectful representation to Government pointing out that the levying of a house tax will be a real hardship to them.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 11th August 1912 referring to the outbreak of cholera in Allahabad, urges the municipal board to take effective steps to ensure cleanliness in the city and to get the houses where cholera cases have occurred thoroughly disinfected in order to check the spread of the epidemic to other quarters of the city.

ABHYUDAYA, 11th August 1912.

The Allahabad Municipality.

The editor also suggests that in view of the fact that epidemics like cholera and plague break out in Allahabad almost every year, measures should be adopted for the permanent improvement of the sanitation of the city.

23. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 11th August 1912 expresses its gratification that His Excellency the Governor of Bengal did not encourage the Islamia association of Chittagong in its unreasonable demand for the extension of communal representation on the district and local boards and in the municipalities, and expresses the hope that the gentle hint given by His Excellency will give a quietus to the question so far at least as Bengal is concerned.

24. The Almora Akhbar for July 1912 (received on the 16th August), invites attention to the difficulty experienced by students in getting admission to schools at Almora owing to the rule regarding the maximum strength of each class, and urges that duplicate classes should be started.

25. A correspondent who signs himself "TIRATH RAM OF FEROZPORE" contributes an article to the Zamana (Cawnpore) for July 1912 (received on the 13th August), in which he expresses disagreement with the opinion that "higher education has made considerable progress in India," and in support of his contention he quotes statistics to show the percentage of educated Indians.

ZAMANA, July 1912.

The growth of higher education in India.

With regard to the current opinion that the Government of India spends a large sum of money in providing facilities for education for Indians, he compares the expenditure of the various Governments of Europe on education with the amount spent by the Indian Government and shows that less is spent in India than in any other country.

Referring to the fact that most of the graduates adopt the legal profession, he says that this is due to there being no arrangements for imparting technical and industrial education in the country.

He says that those who hold that the growth of higher education is the cause of unrest in India are unable to realize the importance of education, and he remarks that it would be very unwise to check the further growth of higher education in India.

In conclusion he asks Government to better the condition of Indians by providing further facilities for higher education.

26. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), quotes statistics to show the extent of industrial and technical education in Germany and other foreign countries, and urges that the material condition of India cannot be improved unless adequate provision is made for the extended diffusion of industrial and technical education in the country.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 7th August 1912.

Inudstrial and technical education in India.

27. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 10th August), expresses its regret that some Muhammadan students of the Agra Medical School have been rusticated on a charge of having informed the press that they have been forbidden to subscribe to certain Muhammadan newspapers. The editor says that these students should not be punished unless their guilt is clearly proved. He urges that the unfair prohibition against Muhammadan newspapers should be withdrawn.

28. Haji Musa Khan contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 12th August), in which he says that the press communiqué issued by the Government of India limiting the educational scope of the Aligarh university has created profound disappointment amongst the Muhammadan public, and in which he states that the affiliation of outside colleges can produce no detrimental effect when proper arrangements are made for supervision and instruction in them.

He says that Indian conditions are quite different from European, and that if the scope of European universities is limited to the localities in which they are situated, there is no reason why Indian universities should be similarly treated.

He goes on to say that European countries are wealthy and can therefore support numerous universities, whereas this is impossible in a poor country like India.

He adds that the limiting of the educational scope of the university at Aligarh means the checking of the growth of higher education amongst Muhammadans, as they cannot establish more residential colleges at Aligarh.

He lays special stress on the affiliation of Islamia schools in different provinces to the Muslim University, and says that, in view of the religious needs of Muhammadans, all their schools should be affiliated to the university.

He expresses the hope that the Government of India will show due consideration for public feeling on the question of affiliation, and that it will rescind its decision on the subject.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 7th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

29. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), referring to the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the scope of the proposed Hindu University, says that the Hindus would not have been disappointed if they had depended upon their own exertions as regards the establishment of their university instead of relying on others. The editor observes that the decision of Government in the matter has made the Punjab and Bengal withhold their sympathy from the movement, and he adds that a university such as the Government of India contemplates will be no improvement on any of the existing universities.

He says that there are no favourable omens for the establishment of the university, and he expresses the hope that the promoters of the scheme will utilize the money that has been collected for useful educational purposes.

LEADER, 14th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

30. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 14th August 1912 publishes the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler's letters addressed to the Raja of Mahmudabad and the Maharaja of Darbhanga regarding the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities, and with regard to the attitude of the Muslim community, as revealed in the resolutions passed at Lucknow on Sunday, the editor says that it is one of manifest disinclination to accept the Secretary of State's decision as final. He enquires whether the Muslim leaders, in case the decision is not reconsidered, will proceed with their scheme in the altered circumstances or abandon it, and says that appearances point to the latter course as the more probable.

As regards the Hindu University scheme, he states that nothing is known so far as to what its promoters will do, but he would advise them not to sacrifice a noble, beneficient and grand educational scheme for the sake of its designation being changed to the University of Benares, seeing that it will be established wholly and exclusively by dint of the exertions of the Hindu leaders and by the generous pecuniary support of the Hindu community only.

With regard to the appointment of His Excellency the Viceroy as the Chancellor of the proposed university, he remarks that it would have lent fresh dignity to the university if His Excellency had been able to see his way to being its Chancellor, but that if this is not to be there appears nothing wrong or inconvenient in the election of an eminent Hindu scholar as Chancellor when there is no dearth of such men among Hindu leaders, who, by virtue of their learning, capacity, character, antecedents and status, are eminently worthy of filling the Chancellor's chair with dignity and distinction. He considers this to be a valuable concession on the part of the Secretary of State to allow the university as an independent non-official body to have its own elected Chancellor. He goes on to say that it makes hardly any difference in practice whether the powers reserved to Government are vested nominally in the Viceroy or expressly in the Governor General in Council, seeing that in either case it would be the Department of Education of the Government of India which would exercise the powers. He expresses satisfaction that the Secretary of State has withdrawn the condition that the appointment of professors would be subject to the approval of the Viceroy, and as a corollary to this he suggests that the Hindu University Society may reasonably ask for the withdrawal of the condition about an adequate proportion of European professors being appointed. He expresses the hope that if the Hindu University Society accepts the other conditions Lord Crewe will not insist upon the retention of the condition about the appointment of European professors. He expresses gratitude for the offer of a liberal government grant, and remarks that it should certainly be accepted, provided there are no conditions attached to the grant which will be felt as an undue encroachment upon the independent exercise of powers by the university authorities.

Referring to the affiliation of outside institutions the editor does not regard the refusal of the power as a calamity, and says that it is immensely more important that the university should be a residential institution, and in this connection he remarks that a group of colleges imparting efficient education in languages and literature, in science and technology, in politics and history, in medicine, with all the teachers and students in residence, moulding character and evolving a higher type of man to take part in the national regeneration of this ancient land, is a picture that appeals to the heart and mind much more than a university with affiliated institutions scattered over a wide and large area, loosely related to one another and inefficiently controlled from the centre.

In conclusion he observes that the reasons given for the Secretary of State's decision are not so wanting in force that they can be summarily disposed of or attributed to motives that cannot stand examination, and he asks the Hindu leaders not to be discouraged by the contents of Sir Harcourt Butler's letters, but to continue unabated their endeavours to materialize the project.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

31. Referring to the letter of the Education Member to the Raja of Muhamadabad, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 13th August 1912 says that it goes without saying that the communication has intensified the feeling of disappointment which the two previous communiqués created, and that, from the resolutions passed by the constitution committee, it is manifest that the leaders are determined not to have a university on the lines settled by the Secretary of State. The editor remarks that the question has now assumed an aspect which is full of difficulties and all the resources of statesmanship will have to be brought together to solve it in a manner so as not to lead to undue friction or excitement in the country. He goes on to say that the promoters of the movement should have been told of the particulars mentioned in Sir Harcourt Butler's letter at an earlier stage, and he fails to understand how a mere change in the name can make the university non-denominational or territorial, seeing that money has been collected from all parts of the country on the distinct understanding of its being an All-India movement. He expresses sympathy with the Muhammadans in the difficult situation in which they have been placed, and he hopes that the Government of India will find some means of extracting them from it.

ADVOCATE, 13th August 1912.

With regard to the power of affiliation, he states that the promoters of both universities are anxious to have the power to affiliate colleges and recognize schools.

Dealing with the affiliation of colleges he observes that the reasons why the Government of India withheld this power, as stated by Sir Harcourt Butler, appear to be weighty, and that for the present only a teaching and residential university should be established. He expresses the opinion that after some experience of the working of the universities the Government of India will grant the universities the power of affiliating colleges, and the decision of the Secretary of State in this matter should not therefore be considered final. He discusses the futility of insisting on affiliation which for the time being can be of no practical use, seeing that there is not a single Muhammadan college besides the Aligarh College which is run on the residential system.

With regard to the affiliation of schools, he points out that the case is quite different, and that if Government insists that only students educated at Benares or Aligarh will be admitted to the universities, the restriction will be absurd, as Indian parents will not send their boys to be educated at a distance from their own homes. He says that the universities should be allowed to recognize or affiliate schools all over the country, and to hold their own matriculation examination to which students from all provinces should be admitted.

In conclusion he asks the Hindus to devote all their energy to the collection of funds without which they cannot even approach Government with any proposal and he expresses the view that when Government is convinced that both Hindus and Muhammadans are united on certain questions there is every probability of its meeting them half way.

In a separate note in the same issue he advises the Government of India to invite the leaders of the movement to discuss the main points of difference in order to prevent delay in the granting of the charter.

Juvenile prisoners in the Punjab and the Salvation Army.

32. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 10th August), says that the decision of the Punjab Government to hand over juvenile prisoners to the Salvation Army will create both among Hindus and Muhammadans the suspicion that Government is deviating from its declared policy of religious neutrality, and that it is trying to further the cause of Christianity in an indirect manner. The editor suggests that the Salvation Army should be given strict instructions not to impart any religious training to prisoners under its charge, and that some prominent Hindu and Muhammadan gentlemen of Lahore should be appointed as visitors to the Salvation Army colony, and should be allowed to submit reports about the prisoners to the Commissioner and the Local Government.

He urges Hindu and Muslim associations to take up this question and to save their communities from this new religious danger.

The need for an Arya Samaj newspaper association.

33. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), suggests the desirability of an Arya Samaj newspaper association being formed with the object of promoting unity among Arya Samaj editors, and of adopting a common policy which should direct their writings on all important questions.

LEADER, 10th August 1912.

Purchase of government stores.

34. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 10th August 1912 refers to the complaint of the Indian Engineering Association that full effect does not appear to have been given to the orders issued by the Government of India in 1909 about the purchase of government stores, and remarks that all that has been done by Government in this direction is apparently the production of a catalogue of manufactures, though a list of rates is under preparation. The editor observes that the value of the small orders that are placed in India contrasts unfavourably with the prices of the huge contracts that are given to English firms. He adds that the system of checking the indents going to England with a view to eliminating those that can be placed in India by the staff of the Commerce and Industry department without their possessing any practical knowledge of the business is not of the slightest value, and says that Indian engineering firms have largely increased and extended their producing capacity, but the orders placed with them are no more now than they were in the year 1904-5 when the Stores Committee reported that orders were sent to England for articles that could probably have been obtained of local manufacturers.

In conclusion he refers to the severe criticism of the methods of the purchase of government stores made by Sir R. N. Mukerjee in his presidential address at the Allahabad Industrial Conference in December 1910.

LEADER, 13th August 1912.

Supply of coal for the Indian State railways.

35. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 13th August 1912 strongly protests against the action of the Government of India in entering into contracts for the supply of South African coal for the Indian State railways, and remarks that the only true policy for the Government of India as the guardian of India's honour and India's interests is one of retaliation against South Africa at every possible point, seeing that the South African colonies have been unrelenting in their harsh and unjust treatment of Indians in spite of all protests and negotiations. The editor expresses surprise that in the face of determined efforts on the part of the South African colonies to inflict hardships and humiliations on Indian residents, the Government of India should do anything calculated to enrich the colonies. He expresses the hope that Lord Hardinge's Government will reconsider the matter as it is likely to produce deep dissatisfaction in the public mind.

VIII.—Native societies and religious and social matters.

36. Maulana Azad Subhani, Principal of the Madrasa-i-Illahiat, Cawnpore, contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 7th August 1912 (received on the 10th August), in which he says that the Muhammadans of India made a great mistake in ignoring the importance of the mashaikh community which can exert great influence over the masses, and which could have considerably helped the propagation of Islam in India. He asserts that only the mashaikhs can be the real protectors and propagators of Islam, and he urges his co-religionists to respect them and to help them as far as possible in the matter of propagating their religion. He mentions the name of Haji Shah Waris Hassan Sahib of the United Provinces, and says that he has checked the growing irreligiousness amongst the younger generation of his co-religionists, and he expresses the hope that, if spared, the Haji will in future be still more successful in his efforts.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 7th August 1912.

The propagation of Islam.

37. The Musáfir (Agra) of the 9th August 1912 (received on the 14th August), expresses satisfaction at the decision of the High Court in the appeal filed by the Pilibhit Arya Samaj against the order of Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector (vide Selections No. 28, paragraph 53). The editor invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to the case, and asks that arrangements should be made to employ only Hindus and Christians to report on Arya Samaj meetings.

He expresses the hope that the Government of Sir John Hewett will take due notice of the irregular proceedings of Mirza Irfan Ali Beg, Deputy Collector, Pilibhit, and of the police officers concerned.

MUSAFIR, 9th August 1912.

The Pilibhit Arya Samaj.

38. A correspondent in the Leader (Allahabad) of the 15th August 1912, who signs himself "Bishwa Nath Mukerji of Calcutta," invites attention to the evils of the present marriage system prevailing in Bengal, and characterizes it as simply apalling. He says that it is not only adding to the number of the poor in the country, but that it is at the same time decreasing the population of the province. In support of this contention he refers to the case of one Chandi Charan Ghosh of Ahirpukar, Calcutta, who was reported to have committed suicide owing to his being unable to get his two daughters married. He condemns the exorbitant demands of the fathers of bridegrooms, and remarks that a country cannot be politically great while social evils continue to flourish.

LEADER, 15th August 1912.

The marriage system in Bengal.

1. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), says that the recent comments of the Times (London) on the situation in Tibet have renewed the suspicions raised by the Tibet Mission of Lord Curzon that the English are seeking to establish their influence in that country. The editor expresses the opinion that the best course for Tibet to pursue is to become independent under its Lama, and that if this is impossible, to remain under the protection of China, with which most of its interests are identical.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 14th August 1912.

The future of Tibet.

2. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 21st August 1912 expresses gratification at the proposal of the Secretary of State for India to build a hospital at Jeddah for the comfort of Indian Muhammadan pilgrims to Mecca, but suggests that it would be more appropriate if the Turkish Government built and maintained this hospital. The editor says that any attempt of the British Government to open a hospital at Jeddah might be misconstrued by the Arabs as a prelude to its occupation of the country later on, and might lead to undesirable consequences, and he proposes that the subscriptions collected for the purpose in India should be handed over to the Turkish Government.

3. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), discussing the question of the appointment of a Royal Viceroy for India raised by the Edinburgh Review, remarks that Indians who are traditional lovers of a Royal personality will heartily approve of the suggestion. The editor however contends that as the number of highly educated members of the Royal family is very limited, it will be difficult to find a suitable Viceroy for India among them, and says that a Royal Viceroy of ordinary talents will therefore have to depend entirely upon the Anglo-Indian bureaucracy for the administration of the country. He expresses the opinion that in view of this difficulty Indians must content themselves for the present with the existing state of affairs.

4. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), deplores the absence of public spirit in the United Provinces, and says that this is due to the fact that there is a wide gulf between the leaders and the people, and that the latter have no control over the former. The editor observes that another cause of this state of affairs is the paucity of influential newspapers which play such a great part in forming public opinion. He asks his contemporaries to give this matter their attention, and to teach the people to take an increased interest in public affairs.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 14th August 1912.

Public spirit in the United Provinces.

5. A correspondent who signs himself "Justice" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd August 1912 in which he says that it is necessary for a councillor to possess a sound knowledge of law and to be able to discuss matters of general public interest and to move resolutions relating to them. He observes that persons who have studied law and have had occasion to administer it are better suited for the zamindari seat than a zamindar who is totally ignorant of law.

He remarks that a person who has been in the public service and has thus been in touch with the masses is better able to understand public questions than a rich zamindar who is cut off from his fellow-beings.

He states that Kunwar Bharat Singh, who is a candidate for election to the Imperial Council, has been taking part in all public movements and has proved himself a very capable landlord. He disavows any intention of pushing forward the claims of Kunwar Bharat Singh or of any other candidate, but says that a person who possesses a clear voice is preferable as a councillor to a novice who has never appeared on a public platform.

LEADER, 22nd August 1912.

Council elections.

He concludes by urging that the ablest and not the richest man should be elected to the Imperial Council.

Commenting on the above, the editor inquires whether the writer implies that Kunwar Bharat Singh is a public speaker, and he expresses regret that the writer has not stated what work the Hon'ble Kunwar Bharat Singh has done in the Council during his present term.

PREM, 15th August 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

6. The Prem (Brindaban, Muttra) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 20th August), takes exception to the views of Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy, and says that they have caused deep resentment among the Indians. The editor remarks that it was such mistakes on the part of British statesmen that led to the American War of Independence and to the Mutiny in India. He observes that Lord Curzon caused considerable unrest in the country, and that this unrest was only allayed when the administrative errors committed by him were rectified, and he inquires if Lord Crewe wants to create further unrest in the country by his indiscreet speeches. He expresses the opinion that India has been entrusted by Providence into the hands of the English, who are to govern it till Indians learn the art of self-government and qualify themselves to manage their own affairs.

LEADER, 21st August 1912.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

7. Referring to Lord Crewe's pronouncement as to the political future of India the Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st August 1912 remarks that the Secretary of State did not enhance his reputation as a Liberal Minister by taking advantage of the rules of the House of Lords to deliver an entirely uncalled for speech in reply to Lord Inchcape's simple question. In this connection the editor complains of the rule that prevails in the Indian Legislative Councils by which only the member who put the original question can put a supplementary question, and he urges that this rule should be rescinded.

He then characterizes Lord Crewe's speech as an unnecessary and irrelevant one seeing that the Government of India never contemplated colonial self-government for India in the famous third paragraph of their despatch of August 25, and remarks that His Lordship got a well-deserved snub from Lord Courtney.

He takes exception to Lord Crewe's remarks about an Indian Prime Minister and an Indian Commander-in-Chief, and says that the most injurious and most galling evil of political subjection is that there are no openings for the most capable members of the community, while third-rate and fourth-rate men from the ruling country play an important part in the administration of the subject country. He then points out that if Indians are fit to be members of the Executive Council there is no reason why an Indian should not one day be the Governor General.

In conclusion he asserts that Indians are determined to have self-government, but says that they are wise enough to see that they must first prove themselves worthy of it.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 14th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), considers that Indians have been inadequately represented on the Public Service Commission, and claims that Hindus and Muhammadans are entitled to more generous treatment in the matter of representation. The editor complains that the Hindus have a non-official representative in the person of Mr. Gokhale, whereas the Muhammadans have none, and he expresses the hope that Government will remove this anomaly by appointing a non-official Muhammadan to the Commission.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

9. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), protests against the appointment of a reactionary like Sir Valentine Chirol on the Public Service Commission, and remarks that in view of the fact that most of the members hold views similar to those of Sir Valentine, it is idle to expect that Indians will derive any benefit from the Commission. The editor urges Indians to agitate vigorously for the reform of the constitution of the Commission.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

10. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), refers to the comments of the Panjabee (Lahore) on the annual meeting of the Muslim League and its desire for more cordial relations with the Hindus. The editor says

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

11. Referring to the suggestion of the All India Muslim League for a Hindu-Muslim rapprochement the Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun) of the 18th August 1912 (received on the 23rd August), remarks that the solicitude of Muhammadans for the return of inter-communal cordiality arises from a feeling which is more pan-Islamic than pan-Indian, and asserts that the object is not so much to form a united Indian nation as to serve the special pan-Islamic purpose which the League has in view. The editor remarks that the League, while ignoring the internal forces which are making for unity in India, has given great prominence to the external influence supposed to be exerted on Indian "nationalities" by the course of events in Tripoli and Persia. COSMOPOLITAN, 18th August 1912.

He points out that the League in fact says that the three hundred millions of India will be driven into unity and solidarity by the contemplation of the everlasting injustice and oppression practised in Tripoli and Persia. He says that the intention of the League to add a Brown Peril to the Yellow Peril already looming large on the horizon is an objectionable one and cannot be approved of.

He expresses the opinion that all the causes of discord between Hindus and Muhammadans are of recent growth, and have been introduced by Muhammadans themselves. He asserts that the universal adoption of Urdu, the revival of cow-killing and the introduction of separate electorates have been brought about by Muhammadans, and have contributed most to widen the gulf between the two communities. He expresses the conviction that there can be no unity on the lines suggested by the League, but he expresses the hope that the new school of Muslim thinkers will restore the old brotherly relations between educated Muhammadans and Hindus.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

12. A correspondent who signs himself "NATIONALIST" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st August 1912 in which he discusses the causes of estrangement between Hindus and Muhammadans. LEADER, 21st August 1912.

With regard to the Hindi-Urdu controversy, he says that now that Persian has been replaced by English as a court language, the Hindus are not obliged to study Urdu. He asserts that Hindus however study Urdu or Persian to a greater extent than Muhammadans study Hindi or Sanskrit, and he instances the results of the vernacular middle examination in support of his contention. He dwells at length on the services rendered to Urdu literature by Hindus, and says that the Hindus are not to blame if they now adopt the indigenous Nagri script which is easier to learn and more scientific for phonetic purposes. He urges Muhammadans to give up their unreasoning opposition to the efforts of the Hindus to extend the use of the Nagri script.

He remarks that as a result of continuous foreign domination, the Hindus have become more tolerant and were the first to grasp the idea of a common nationality. He asserts that, on the other hand, Muhammadans possess an uncompromising selfishness and refuse to join hands with the Hindus in the task of nation-building. He says that when the reform scheme was introduced, the Muhammadans demanded special and separate rights and privileges in utter disregard of what fairness or justice to other communities required, and he remarks that the Hindu leaders were compelled to descend to the lower platform of sectarianism in sheer self-defence. He goes on to say that this sectarian feeling found vent in the two proposed denominational universities, and he expresses gratification at the fact that Government has been wise enough to limit the baneful sphere of influence of these sectarian institutions.

He admits that the question of cow-killing divides the masses of the two communities, but asserts that its importance is inordinately exaggerated by a certain class of unwise educated Hindus. He says that Muhammadans should consume cheaper beef, but he urges them to respect the sentiments of Hindus as far as practicable.

He expresses the hope that Muhammadans will give up their territorial religious prejudices and develop a national patriotism. In conclusion he expresses the opinion that a union cannot be effected between the two communities by committees and hollow assurances of good faith, but by a spontaneous consciousness of unity of purpose, of purity of motives and of community of interest on both sides.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

ABHYUDAYA, 18th August 1912.

Expulsion of Brahman and Hindu fakirs from Afghanistan.

13. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 18th August 1912 expresses surprise at the alleged expulsion of Brahman and Hindu fakirs from Afghanistan on a charge of being the spies of the Government of India. The editor asks why the Amir did not expel all undesirable Muhammadans also, and he urges the Government of India to refute the insinuation that British spies are to be found in Kabul.

OUDH AKHBAR, 17th August 1912.

Arbitration courts.

14. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 17th August 1912 expresses its regret at the increase of litigation in India, and remarks that the country will never make any progress until the people learn to settle their differences outside the courts.

The editor deplores the aggression practised by Europeans in Persia, Morocco and Tripoli, and urges the Asiatic Powers to organize an international arbitration court which should consist of delegates from each country and should settle all disputes between the different Governments.

ADVOCATE, 18th August 1912.

The Indian High Courts.

15. Referring to the adverse comments of the Times (London) on the Indian High Courts in general, and to its attack on the Calcutta High Court in particular, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 18th August 1912 remarks that the interpretation of the law by the Calcutta High Court, which is condemned by the Times, was an interpretation which was long supported by all the High Courts in India, and says that the comments of the Indian press and also the resolutions of the public meeting held at Calcutta demonstrated the sense of public alarm at the state of the law in respect of the powers of a magistrate as interpreted by the recent ruling of the Privy Council in the Mymensingh case. The editor observes that by doing away with the distinction between the executive and judicial powers of magistrates, and by extending to the executive acts of magistrates the protection to which their judicial acts alone are entitled, the new interpretation of the law serves as a veiled menace to the liberty of the subject. He goes on to say that because the Indian High Courts and especially the Calcutta High Court have protected the people from the arbitrary and irresponsible acts of executive officers, and because they have not been swayed by executive influence in arriving at their decisions in certain cases, the Times has started an ignoble campaign against the strongest bulwark of British rule in India.

LEADER, 22nd August 1912.

Mr. Justice Fletcher and the Anglo-Indian press.

16. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd August 1912 takes exception to the highly improper manner in which a section of the Anglo-Indian press has been writing of Mr. Justice Fletcher since the delivery of Mr. Justice Woodroffe's judgment in the Midnapur damage suit. The editor expresses the opinion that the references of at least some of the Anglo-Indian papers to Mr. Justice Fletcher should bring them within the purview of the Press Act. He says that if action were taken against these papers they would revive their agitation against the Press Act, and either the Act would be repealed or the Anglo-Indian papers would have to stop their violent writings against Indians and pro-Indian officials. He asserts that every European official who shows any sympathy for Indians is ridiculed, and he expresses regret that the repressive laws of India do not touch offending Anglo-Indian journals. He says that the mere fact that Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment was reversed does not justify the attacks made upon him, and he expresses regret that, instead of standing up for the just rights of all and becoming a force making for good government and righteous dealings, the Anglo-Indian press has become an inveterate enemy of just-minded and sympathetic Englishmen.

(c)—Finance and Taxation.

17. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd August 1912 expresses gratification at the sympathetic tone of Mr. Montagu's budget speech, and remarks that the Indian public has great respect for his attitude towards their aspirations. The editor expresses the hope that Mr. Montagu will some day become Governor General or Secretary of State for India.

LEADER, 22nd August 1912.

Mr. Montagu's budget speech.

He expresses agreement with Mr. Montagu's remarks about the splendid achievements of British rule in the direction of Indian irrigation, but urges that more money should be applied to irrigation works.

He takes exception to Mr. Montagu's proposal to finance the building of Delhi partly by loan and partly from revenue surpluses, and contends that by diverting any portion of the revenue to the financing of the new capital, the funds that would otherwise be available for administrative objects would be curtailed. He invites attention to the pressing educational, sanitary and medical needs of India, and urges Government to go back to its original plan of meeting the cost of new Delhi by a loan only.

With regard to Mr. Montagu's argument that the financing of new Delhi by loan would curtail the capital expenditure on railways and irrigation, he says that the amount applied to irrigation is comparatively so small that no change in that programme is required. He asserts that a vast amount has already been spent on railways, and observes that a temporary curtailment of expenditure under this head would not injure any one except the wealthy European merchant.

He also urges that railway managements should be asked to curtail working expenses and to handle their available rolling stock to better advantage.

He expresses apprehension that the Legislative Council and Parliament will exercise little control over the Government of India, and that the expenditure on Delhi, so far as it is met from surpluses, will lessen the amount available for other important objects which are paid for from revenue generally.

Referring to Mr. Montagu's observations regarding the possibilities of the council reforms, he urges a modification of the executive regulations framed under the reform scheme.

(e)—Education.

18. The Agra Akhbar (Agra) of the 13th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), complains that two Muhammadan students named Khwaja Amir Ahmad Ansari, B.A., and Fyaz-ud-din Khan have been expelled from the Agra Medical School on a charge of having contributed articles regarding school affairs to the Zamindar (Lahore) and the Agra Akhbar.

AGRA AKHBAR, 13th August 1912.

The Agra Medical School and Muhammadans.

The editor asserts that the charge is entirely unfounded, and attributes the expulsion to the machinations of Dr. Mody and Dr. Dey.

He says that these students have nearly completed their courses, and that it is a great hardship to them to be expelled at such a time. He remarks that the injustice with which Muhammadans are being treated in the Agra Medical School is a disgrace to British rule, and he urges Government to take immediate steps to redress the grievances of the Muhammadan medical students.

ANAND, 15th August 1912.

High education in the vernaculars.

19. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), expresses agreement with the Lieutenant Governor's views as expressed on the occasion of the opening ceremony of the Allahabad University buildings on the necessity for adequate arrangements being made for the study of the vernaculars in schools and colleges in the United Provinces. The editor says that the Hindi text-books in use in schools at present are very badly written, and he urges that Government should pay attention to the better teaching of Hindi even in the lower classes. He suggests that the works of standard Hindi authors should be prescribed for the examination in Hindi in the M.A. degree.

AL MUSHIR, 11th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

20. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), says that the decision of the Secretary of State for India to limit the educational scope of the Muslim University to the locality of Aligarh is due to weakness on the part of Muhammadans.

The editor expresses regret that Government showed no consideration for the services rendered by the Muhammadans, and remarks that it will be a mistake to accept a university that has not the power of affiliation.

AL BASHIR, 13th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

21. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 13th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), takes exception to the decision of the Secretary of State for India in regard to the affiliation of colleges to the Muslim University, and asks his co-religionists to persist in their demand for affiliation.

The editor suggests that an Islamic high school should be established in every province, and that these schools should be conducted under the guidance of a central authority at Aligarh. He suggests that the Muslim University should be empowered to hold matriculation examinations for the schools under its supervision, and says that in course of time these schools should be converted into first grade colleges which should ultimately be raised to the status of separate universities in every province.

AL BASHIR, 13th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

22. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 13th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), takes exception to the scheme prepared by Dr. Zia-ud-din Ahmad according to which Government should allow only the affiliation of the religious sections of other colleges, to the Muslim University, and remarks that no useful purpose can be served by this, as such theological diplomas will carry no value, and no college will subordinate itself to the Muslim University in one subject alone.

He also takes exception to the proposal of Dr. Zia-ud-din that the Muslim University should only make arrangements for the teaching of B.A. and M.A. students, that a three-years' course of study should be fixed for the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and that the teaching of the Intermediate classes should be entrusted to the secondary schools.

The editor proposes that after a student passes his school-leaving or matriculation examination, he should be required to attend only three terms of six months each for his intermediate examination and five terms of six months each for his B.A. examination.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 14th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

23. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), publishes an article by "A LIBERAL LEADER," in which the writer complains of the systematic way in which the members of the Muslim university constitution committee have flouted public opinion. He states that the proceedings of the committee have always been kept secret from the public, and that the rules of the proposed university have been framed in such a manner that the institution will be entirely under official control. He accuses the leaders of having betrayed the public by quietly submitting to the decision of Government on the question of affiliation, and he says that they have no right to agree to a charter that is not acceptable to the public. He expresses regret that the members of the constitution committee have not as yet specified how the money that has been collected is to be spent if the Muhammadan community refuses to accept a circumscribed and officialized university, and he holds that they only took the public into their confidence as long as funds were required. In conclusion he warns them that if they betray the public, they will be replaced by others who can be relied on to keep faith with the community.

KAISER-I-HIND, 15th August 1912.

24. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), referring to the decision of the Secretary of State for India with regard to the Muslim University states that it has strengthened the suspicion amongst Indians that Government is not anxious to encourage the general education of the Indian people.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

The editor takes exception to the announcement that the proposed Muslim University should be called the University of Aligarh, and he enquires if the word "Muslim" is synonymous with disloyalty or conveys any idea of discontent.

He expresses regret that the Secretary of State gave no reasons for his decision, and remarks that it was quite unconstitutional for him to do so.

He asks the Secretary of State to rescind his decision, and says that the Muhammadan community will never accept the charter for their university as outlined by Government.

ADVOCATE, 18th August 1912.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 18th August 1912 expresses approval of the line of action taken by the constitution committee with regard to the Education Member's letter to its president. The editor expresses the hope that the foundation committee will discuss the whole question completely and approach the Government of India with the desire to meet the wishes of the Secretary of State to the extent it is possible to accept them without sacrificing the principles on which the university is to be formed. He says that the opinions of some of the supporters of the Muslim University are of course divided, but it would be unwise to wreck the scheme on the score of the non-official universities being only teaching and not examining bodies as well, though the supporters of the movement in Bengal and the Punjab will feel disappointed if the university is made a residential and teaching university only, instead of what the Muhammadans generally desire it to be. He observes that it is not an easy matter to have "feeders" to the Aligarh and Benares Universities, and that for the present the promoters should content themselves with a teaching and residential university. He advises them to guard against taking up an irreconcilable attitude which will not appeal to university education experts in India and abroad.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He goes on to say that the Government of India should allow the universities to be perfectly at liberty to recognize schools in all parts of India, as otherwise a large number of people will be placed in a compromising position.

In conclusion he advises the Government of India to invite a dozen people from both communities to discuss the matter so as to come to some satisfactory conclusion which will put a stop to all further agitation.

AL BASHIR, 20th August 1912.

26. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 20th August 1912, expresses its appreciation of the honesty of purpose and determination displayed by the members of the Muslim University constitution committee in replying to the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler's letter.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

The editor takes exception to the decision of the Secretary of State for India that the proposed Muslim University should be named the University of Aligarh, and he remarks that the change in designation is calculated to wound the feelings of the Muhammadans and that it is a direct insult to the community. He goes on to say that the Muhammadans never expected that in view of their recognized loyalty Government could ever do other than acquiesce in their university scheme.

LEADER, 21st August 1912.

27. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st August 1912, publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses his inability to understand the objections raised by the Aligarh university constitution committee to Sir Harcourt Butler's letter. He contends that the change in the name of the university from "Muslim" to "Aligarh" will not make any material difference, and that the election of a non-official Chancellor will add to the dignity of the university. He observes that the condition that the powers of Chancellor should devolve upon the Governor General in Council is proper and constitutional and need not be regretted.

With regard to the question of affiliation, he points out that Government has already issued two communiqués on the subject, and he contends that it was wrong to assert that Sir Harcourt Butler's letter has caused disappointment.

He concludes by remarking that the reply of the constitution committee is on the whole weak and unconvincing.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 21st August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

28. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 21st August 1912 expresses its appreciation of the moral courage displayed by the members of the Muslim university constitution committee in replying to the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler's letter with regard to the Muslim University.

The editor expresses his gratification at the rejection of the proposal to record a vote of thanks to Government by the majority of the members of the committee at their last meeting, and remarks that the courage displayed by them was unique in the history of the Aligarh College.

He says that a vote of thanks should be offered to Government only when there is some occasion for it, as otherwise Government attach little or no value to it.

With regard to the power of affiliation, he says that the Muhammadan public is expressly in favour of affiliation and that the power should accordingly be granted to the proposed university.

He expresses appreciation of the speeches made by the Hon'ble Mr. Mazhar-ul Haq, the Raja of Mahmudabad and Mr. Muhammad Ali, the editor of the Comrade (Calcutta), at the meeting, and says that the decision of the Secretary of State with regard to the power of affiliation will create in Muhammadans a new spirit of determination and perseverance. He goes on to say that the Muhammadans throughout India will carry on a constitutional agitation against the decision, and that they will never cease to agitate till the so-called "final decision" is rescinded.

ANAND, 15th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

29. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), refers to the letter of the Member for Education to the address of the Maharaja of Darbhanga on the subject of the proposed Hindu University, and remarks that the reasons given for refusing the power of affiliation to the university cannot bear close and searching examination. The editor asks the Government to reconsider its decision, and to allow the Hindu and Muhammadan universities to affiliate outside schools and colleges so that they may do real good to their respective communities.

LEADER, 17th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

30. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 17th August 1912 suggests that Government should do away with the condition regarding an adequate proportion of European professors in the proposed denominational universities, and urges that if outside colleges are not to be affiliated, the proposed universities should have the right to hold their own matriculation examinations. The editor says that the matriculation examinations can never be satisfactorily conducted on a large scale without the establishment of schools affiliated to the universities, and he assures Government that in view of the fact that the number of such schools will be very small at first, a high standard of efficiency can be easily maintained in them. He urges Government to treat the question of the affiliation of schools and colleges separately.

He takes exception to the Education Member's suggestion that whatever powers the Muslim university constitution committee proposed to entrust to the Viceroy should be in the hands of the Governor General in Council, and urges that the powers of Chancellor should not be vested in the Governor General unless he actually is Chancellor of the university.

ABHYUDAYA, 18th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

31. Referring to Sir Harcourt Butler's letters to the presidents of the Hindu and Muslim University committees, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 18th August 1912 says that the announcement of the Government of India in regard to the proposed universities has created profound disappointment to both Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor expresses the hope that the united exertions of the two communities will induce Government to rescind its decision in the matter. He contends that when the universities are to be denominational, there is no reason why each should not receive the popular designation of Hindu or Muslim University as the case may be.

He expresses his inability to understand why the Viceroy should not be the Chancellor of the proposed universities in view of the fact that he has been the Chancellor of the Calcutta University for the last fifty years, and he urges Government to show its kindly regard towards Hindus and Muhammadans by permitting the Viceroy to be Chancellor of their universities.

He then points out that unless the Viceroy is actually Chancellor he should have no voice in the affairs of the universities, as otherwise the position of the university authorities would be anomalous.

He approves of the decision of the Secretary of State to give the universities full freedom in the choice of their professors.

As regards State endowments, he would prefer to see the Hindu University supported by the Hindu community alone, but in the event of the Muhammadan University being endowed, he considers that the Hindu University authorities should not refuse any government grants offered them.

If the power of affiliation is denied, he considers that the Hindu University should be allowed to grant degrees in Sanskrit, Hindu theology and Hindu medicine to students of colleges outside Benares.

He then states that in the event of the power of affiliation being withheld from the university, arrangements for the boarding of ten thousand students should be made at Benares. In conclusion he points out that the Hindu institutions of old were of a residential nature and were never examining bodies, and he notes that a properly organized Hindu University will obviate the necessity for foreign study.

32. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 18th August 1912, in discussing, the decision of the Secretary of State for India with regard to the Hindu and Muslim Universities, is apprehensive lest it may have the disturbing effect that the partition of Bengal had in the country.

OUDH AKHBAR, 18th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

The editor asks his countrymen to protest in a constitutional manner against the Secretary of State's decision, and says that if they fail to gain their object they should carefully consider how the money collected for the establishment of the denominational universities should be spent.

He suggests that in case the university project is abandoned, the money that has been collected for the purpose should be expended in establishing a number of industrial and commercial factories in the country on the model of the Tata Institute in Bombay, and that the profit thus obtained should be devoted to establishing scholarships for Indian students in foreign countries.

33. A correspondent who signs himself "BAIDYANATH NARAYAN SINHA, M.A., B.L., F.C.U., PLEADER, FROM MUZAFFARPUR," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th August 1912, in which he expresses approval of the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the residential and teaching character of the proposed denominational universities, and asserts that the promoters of the Hindu university scheme at any rate cannot claim to be disappointed as they never entertained the idea of establishing a federal or examining university. He says that there is already a sufficient number of examining universities in the country, and that some more such universities with clearly defined territorial jurisdictions are likely to be established at Patna, Rangoon and Nagpur. He expresses his disapproval of the establishment of non-official examining universities whose jurisdictions would conflict with those of the State universities, and ridicules the idea that the Benares and Aligarh universities can administer to the needs of the whole of India. He contends that it is impossible to combine the functions of a true residential and teaching university with those of a federal and examining university, and says that if it were proposed to start colleges in the various provinces, a sum of fifty lakhs or even a crore would be quite inadequate for the purpose. He urges Hindus and Muhammadans to accept the decision of Government, and he expresses the opinion that provincial universities of the type approved of by Government should be established when sufficient funds are available.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

condition that the powers of Chancellor should devolve upon the Governor General in Council is proper and constitutional and need not be regretted.

With regard to the question of affiliation, he points out that Government has already issued two communiqués on the subject, and he contends that it was wrong to assert that Sir Harcourt Butler's letter has caused disappointment.

He concludes by remarking that the reply of the constitution committee is on the whole weak and unconvincing.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 21st August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

28. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 21st August 1912 expresses its appreciation of the moral courage displayed by the members of the Muslim university constitution committee in replying to the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler's letter with regard to the Muslim University.

The editor expresses his gratification at the rejection of the proposal to record a vote of thanks to Government by the majority of the members of the committee at their last meeting, and remarks that the courage displayed by them was unique in the history of the Aligarh College.

He says that a vote of thanks should be offered to Government only when there is some occasion for it, as otherwise Government attach little or no value to it.

With regard to the power of affiliation, he says that the Muhammadan public is expressly in favour of affiliation and that the power should accordingly be granted to the proposed university.

He expresses appreciation of the speeches made by the Hon'ble Mr. Mazhar-ul Haq, the Raja of Mahmudabad and Mr. Muhammad Ali, the editor of the Comrade (Calcutta), at the meeting, and says that the decision of the Secretary of State with regard to the power of affiliation will create in Muhammadans a new spirit of determination and perseverance. He goes on to say that the Muhammadans throughout India will carry on a constitutional agitation against the decision, and that they will never cease to agitate till the so-called "final decision" is rescinded.

ANAND, 15th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

29. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), refers to the letter of the Member for Education to the address of the Maharaja of Darbhanga on the subject of the proposed Hindu University, and remarks that the reasons given for refusing the power of affiliation to the university cannot bear close and searching examination. The editor asks the Government to reconsider its decision, and to allow the Hindu and Muhammadan universities to affiliate outside schools and colleges so that they may do real good to their respective communities.

LEADER, 17th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

30. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 17th August 1912 suggests that Government should do away with the condition regarding an adequate proportion of European professors in the proposed denominational universities, and urges that if outside colleges are not to be affiliated, the proposed universities should have the right to hold their own matriculation examinations. The editor says that the matriculation examinations can never be satisfactorily conducted on a large scale without the establishment of schools affiliated to the universities, and he assures Government that in view of the fact that the number of such schools will be very small at first, a high standard of efficiency can be easily maintained in them. He urges Government to treat the question of the affiliation of schools and colleges separately.

He takes exception to the Education Member's suggestion that whatever powers the Muslim university constitution committee proposed to entrust to the Viceroy should be in the hands of the Governor General in Council, and urges that the powers of Chancellor should not be vested in the Governor General unless he actually is Chancellor of the university.

ABHYUDAYA, 18th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

LEADER, 18th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

33. A correspondent who signs himself "BAIDYANATH NARAYAN SINHA, M.A., B.L., F.C.U., PLEADER, FROM MUZAFFARPUR," contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th August 1912, in which he expresses approval of the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the residential and teaching character of the proposed denominational universities, and asserts that the promoters of the Hindu university scheme at any rate cannot claim to be disappointed as they never entertained the idea of establishing a federal or examining university. He urges Hindus and Muhammadans to accept the decision of Government, and he expresses the opinion that provincial universities of the type approved of by Government should be established when sufficient funds are available.

He dwells at length on the advantages of residential and teaching universities in moulding the characters and minds of students, and says that the establishment of first class universities at Aligarh and Benares would obviate the necessity for Indian students going to foreign countries. He contends that the proposed universities could not really benefit the vast population of India by prescribing courses of study, holding examinations, or making perfunctory inspections of institutions far removed from them. In conclusion he urges Indians not to be discouraged by the dispelling of false and impossible hopes, and he appeals to them to contribute liberally to the establishment of the two universities on approved lines.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 13th August 1912.

The condition of Indian cultivators.

34. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares) of the 13th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), invites the attention of educated Indians to the condition of Indian cultivators, who are described as leading miserable lives owing to poverty and disease. The editor says that Government is doing much to relieve their distress, but he points out that the efforts of Government cannot be successful unless supported by public help.

He observes that the misery of the cultivators is due to the fact that, owing to the lack of manure and owing to antiquated methods of cultivation, the productive capacity of land has diminished. He also argues that owing to the indiscriminate slaughter of cattle, the number of bullocks in the country is not now sufficient for ploughing purposes and hence cultivation has suffered.

He urges that in order to improve the condition of cultivators educated Indians should press landholders to allow no cows to be sold to butchers and to preserve and improve the breed by providing grazing grounds in their respective villages. He remarks that Government will not fail to help Indians in this direction when it sees that they are taking practical steps to better the lot of the agricultural classes.

ARYA MITRA, 16th August 1912.

High prices of agricultural cattle.

35. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 16th August 1912 (received on the 22nd August), invites the attention of Government to the high prices that cultivators have to pay for bullocks of superior quality, and asks it to put a stop to the indiscriminate slaughter of cows and take other measures to ensure a cheaper supply of good bullocks for agricultural purposes.

LEADER, 20th August 1912.

The relative importance of agriculture and manufactures in national growth.

36. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 20th August 1912 dwells at length on the injurious effects of agriculture on the people in an industrially backward country. The editor asserts that, in a country like India, agriculture makes men unenterprising, idle, servile, superstitious, ignorant, conservative and destitute of refinement. He says that the uncertain fruits of agricultural labour make people resigned to fate and superstitions, and that the agriculturist living in sparsely inhabited areas has little opportunities of developing his mind by social intercourse and is thus less open to the influence of new and liberal ideas. He expresses the opinion that unscientific agriculture affords little opportunity for the play of ambition and enterprise, and remarks that as India is mainly an agricultural country her people are suffering from the debasing effects of agricultural pursuits.

He observes, on the other hand, that the growth of manufactures in a country makes its inhabitants energetic, prompt, enterprising, original, inventive, self-reliant, responsible and punctual.

He then goes on to discuss the effects of the growth of manufactures upon the agriculture of a country and on the economic condition of its people, and he expresses the opinion that the growth of manufactures relieves the pressure upon land and more land thus becomes available for each agriculturist as the surplus population turns its attention towards industries.

He concludes by saying that the growth of manufactures in India, and the consequent decrease of the pressure upon land, will relieve poverty, raise the standard of living, promote scientific knowledge and bring about a more efficient, sturdy, intelligent and resourceful type of manhood and womanhood in the country.

(g)—General.

37. The editor of the Bhaskar (Meerut) in the issue for the month of June 1912 (received on the 20th August), urges Government to provide greater facilities for the use of Hindi as a court language, and he suggests that complaints made regarding the refusal on the part of an official to receive petitions in Hindi should be properly attended to.

BHASKAR, June 1912.

The propagation of Hindi.

38. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares) of the 13th August 1912 (received on the 21st August), says that the decision of the Punjab Government to hand over juvenile prisoners to the Salvation Army means their conversion to Christianity. The editor urges the Government of India not to sanction this method of proselytizing and so allay the anxiety of the public.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 13th August 1912.

Juvenile prisoners in the Punjab and the Salvation Army.

He also suggests that all Indian communities should make satisfactory arrangements for the reformation of prisoners belonging to their respective religions.

The Brahman Sarvasva (Etawah) for June 1912 (received on the 19th August), expresses similar views on the subject.

BRAHMAN SARVASVA, June 1912.

39. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun) of the 18th August 1912 (received on the 23rd August), expresses its gratification at the fact that as a result of the efforts of the Patrika (Calcutta) certain passages imputing seditious motives to certain public bodies and associations have been expunged from the Bhagalpur Gazetteer.

COSMOPOLITAN, 18th August 1912.

Alleged objectionable passages in the Bhagalpur Gazetteer.

The editor remarks that the action of Government in the matter shows that it has now greater regard for public opinion than for its own prestige.

40. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), refers to the interpellation at the last meeting of the local Legislative Council about the management of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, and expresses its regret at the inability of Government to order an inquiry into the affairs of the company.

ZUL QARNAIN, 14th August 1912.

The Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

The editor is unable to understand why Government should not remove the causes of complaint against a railway company when the existence of the company is asserted to be for the good of India. He expresses agreement with the opinion of Mr. Wacha that the extension of railways in India is calculated to cause more harm than good to the people.

VII.—Post Office.

41. A correspondent who signs himself "A Resident of Basti" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), in which he suggests that, in the interests of the trading public, the Basti city telegraph office should receive telegrams after office hours on weekdays at an extra charge. He invites the attention of the Post master General to the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants of Basti by the head post office being at a distance of three miles from the city, and urges that express telegrams should be received at the city office on Sundays.

42. A correspondent who signs himself "Prayag Prasad Tripathi of Cawnpore," writing in the Brahman Sarvasva (Etawah) for June 1912 (received on the 19th August), invites the attention of Hindus to the considerable increase in the number of Indian Christians as disclosed by the census returns for 1911, and says that the bulk of this increase represents converts from Hinduism. He deplores the fact that such a large number of Hindus, who were formerly worshippers of Ram and Krishna and protectors of cows, should have become beef-eaters and enemies of the Hindu gods and institutes. He exhorts Hindus to wake up in time and to take steps to prevent the conversion of their co-religionists to Christianity as otherwise Hinduism will soon become extinct in the country.

AL MUSHIR, 11th August 1912.

The Jama Masjid, Delhi, and European visitors.

43. The editor of Al Mushir (Moradabad) in the issue of the 11th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), complains that some Europeans do not conform to the rules for visitors to the Jama Masjid at Delhi and enter the mosque with their boots on.

He says that this wounds the religious susceptibilities of the Muhammadans and he invites the attention of Government to the matter, and expresses the hope that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor will strictly prohibit Europeans from entering the mosque with their boots on.

AL MUSHIR, 11th August 1912.

The propagation of Islam.

44. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th August 1912 (received on the 17th August), expresses regret that the Muhammadans have no organized arrangement for the propagation of their religion.

The editor compares the activities and enthusiasm of the Christian missionaries to the indifference and apathy of the Muhammadans in the matter of religious enterprise, and remarks that if his co-religionists do not take steps to organize a Muhammadan mission, their religion stands in danger of becoming extinct.

He expresses satisfaction at the formation of the Jami-a-tul-Ansar (the society of helpers) at Deoband for the purpose of the propagation of Islam, and urges his co-religionists to render pecuniary help to this society to enable it to engage a sufficient number of Muhammadan missionaries to preach the gospel of Islam throughout the country.

TAFRIH, 14th August 1912.

The alleged abduction of a Hindu girl by Christian missionaries.

45. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th August 1912 (received on the 19th August), refers to the interpellation made by the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Babu Ganga Prasad Varma in the local Legislative Council about the alleged abduction of a Hindu girl by Christian missionaries and to the reply of the Hon'ble Mr. Douglas Straight, and inquires whether the missionaries had any right to keep a Hindu girl in their custody and to demand proof of rightful guardianship. The editor says that even if the claimant failed to prove his rightful guardianship, the missionaries had no right to keep the girl as there are Hindu orphanages in the provinces.

2. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 24th August 1912 urges the repeal of the Press Act as the object with which it was enacted has now been realized. NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th August 1912.

The Press Act.

The editor says that it is not just to bring all newspapers under the Press Act, and he urges his contemporaries to memorialize Government to repeal the Act or to organize a deputation to represent the matter to His Excellency the Viceroy.

3. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th August 1912 protests against the rumoured extension of Sir George Clarke's term of office. The editor complains of the lethargy of the Liberal Premier in the matter of appointing Indian governors, and contends that the convenience of Lord Chelmsford, said to be the Governor-elect, is not a sufficient justification for an extension of Sir George Clarke's term of office. In conclusion he insists that such extensions should not be granted except on public grounds. LEADER, 24th August 1912.

Extension of Sir George Clarke's term of office.

4. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st August 1912 (received on the 29th August), asserts that the Muhammadans, who are always turning their eyes towards Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan, can never be loyal to British rule. The editor expresses regret that the British Government considers the loyalty of the Hindus less pronounced than that of the Muhammadans. RAHBAR, 21st August 1912.

The British Government and Muhammadans.

He states, on the authority of the Sindh Gazette, that some Indian Muhammadans residing in Tokyo have published a book in which it is stated that the British are hostile to the Muhammadans, and have brought about the downfall of Muslim rule in Morocco, Tripoli, Turkey and Persia. He remarks that the publication of this book clearly proves that there is a body of disloyal Indian Muhammadans, and he says that the discontent of these Muhammadans is a menace to the State as it has a wide perspective. In conclusion he remarks that it is significant that the Amir has employed a Turkish general to remodel his army when it might have been expected that he would employ a British official as he is subsidized by the British Government.

5. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 21st August 1912 (received on the 26th August), welcomes the efforts of the London branch of the All-India Muslim League to establish better relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, but points out that unity between the two communities on the lines suggested by the League cannot be acceptable to the Hindus as it would be detrimental to their interests. SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 21st August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

The editor urges that in order to bring about a rapprochement the two communities should make an earnest effort to sink their differences and should adopt a conciliatory attitude towards each other.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

6. Referring to the suggestion of the London branch of the All-India Muslim League for a Hindu-Muslim rapprochement, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 25th August 1912 expresses its gratification that the Muhammadans have now begun to realize their mistake in keeping aloof from the Hindus and at last realize the necessity for united action for the good of the country. The editor remarks, however, that the conditions proposed by the League in this connection cannot be acceptable to the Hindus. He says that Hindus have never done anything to prevent Muhammadans from deriving equal benefit from the advantages of British rule, and that it is the Muhammadans who have been asking special privileges from Government. He asserts that the special and separate representation of Muhammadans is opposed to the elementary principles of justice, and that the Hindus will protest against any Muhammadan concession in this respect until it is withdrawn. With regard to the Urdu-Hindi question, he remarks that the Hindus have studied Urdu without prejudice, and that Urdu retards the progress of Hindi. He observes that if the Muhammadans have any real regard for the religious sentiments of the Hindus they should cease sacrificing cows not only in places where Muhammadans are in the minority but all over the country.

LEADER, 23rd August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

7. The following is from the Leader (Allahabad) of the 23rd August 1912 :—

"It is stated that the India Office establishment is within the scope of the Public Service Commission's inquiry. We trust the Commission will find it possible to recommend a reorganization of that huge establishment so that there might be a visible reduction of its cost to India. We do not know if the question of the utility of the India Council and the expediency of its abolition will be held to be within the scope of the Commission."

AL MUSHIR, 25th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

8. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 25th August 1912 complains of the inadequate representation of Indians on the Public Service Commission.

The editor expresses regret that some of the European members of the Commission are naturally ill-disposed towards Indians generally and Muhammadans in particular, and remarks that the Secretary of State for India did not act wisely in the selection of the members of the Commission.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and suggests that each province should be permitted to have an Indian representative on the Commission.

He says that only those Europeans should have been appointed as members who were known to be sympathetic towards Indians, and he objects to the appointment of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim as he does not represent orthodox Muhammadan views.

The Maharaja of Gwalior's donation to the Edinburgh University.

9. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares) of the 20th August 1912 (received on the 28th August), condemns the action of the Maharaja of Gwalior in making a donation of sixty thousand rupees to the Edinburgh University for a chair on military subjects, on the ground that Indians cannot take advantage of the grant. The editor expresses regret that Indian chiefs exercise no discrimination in spending the hard-earned money of their subjects on useless objects.

HINDUSTANI, 26th August 1912.

The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 26th August 1912, contains a similar article from a correspondent who signs himself "A resident of Gorakhpur."

IV.—Administration.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

LEADER, 23rd August 1912.

Mr. Justice Fletcher and the Anglo-Indian press.

10. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 23rd August 1912 expresses regret at the attacks made on Mr. Justice Fletcher by the Commerce (Calcutta) and other Anglo-Indian papers.

The editor states that in as many as twelve out of thirteen appeals from the decisions of the Allahabad High Court the findings of the lower court were reversed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and he expresses surprise that no Anglo-Indian paper demanded the resignation of any of the Judges of the Allahabad High Court.

He says that some Anglo-Indian papers demand the resignation of Mr. Justice Fletcher simply because his judgments in cases of public interest do not fit in with their own preconceived anti-Indian notions.

He contends that it is simply an accident that one Judge takes one view of a series of facts and another a different view, and he urges the authorities to consider whether the articles on the subject in Commerce should be allowed to pass unnoticed.

Referring to the remarks of Commerce regarding the shyness of British capitalists to speculate in India owing to the improper administration of justice, he says India does not require British capital at the sacrifice of justice.

He asserts that nowadays the standard of the Civil Service is not as high as it used to be, and he remarks that India does not want the new type of civilian, especially when he comes out with a guarantee of immunity from the consequences of his acts.

He concludes by urging that reckless writers in the Anglo-Indian press should be made to see that they cannot safely vilify Judges of High Courts in the disgraceful manner they have been doing.

11. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th August 1912 refers to the demands of the Times (London) for an inquiry into the personnel of the Calcutta High Court and into liberty of speech accorded to Indian counsels, and remarks that Mr. Justice Woodroffe's judgment in the Midnapur case has suggested to the Times that Judges like Mr. Justice Fletcher and perhaps also Sir Lawrence Jenkins and counsel like Mr. K. B. Dutt are undesirable.

LEADER, 24th August 1912.

The Calcutta High Court and the Times (London).

The editor remarks that whenever a decision honestly given for judicial reasons does not meet with the approval of the executive and the Anglo-Indian press, the Judges are accused by papers like the Times of sacrificing the supreme ends of justice to the "gratification of their political predilections."

In another note in the same issue the editor states that though when some years ago the Chief Justice of New Zealand made an open protest against the judgment of the Privy Council in an important New Zealand case, the best legal instincts in England were shocked at the conduct of the Chief Justice; still nobody indulged in the abusive language that has been general since the conclusion of the Midnapur appeal.

The editor deplores the attitude of the Anglo-Indian press, which he considers is actuated only by a desire to serve its constituents and its patrons in certain favoured services in India.

12. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 27th August 1912 protests against the expense incurred in defending Mr. Weston in the Midnapur case, and says that the defence should have been conducted by Government with economy.

LEADER, 27th August 1912.

The Midnapur case and the question of compensation.

The editor inquires why so many leading counsels were engaged and why such heavy remuneration was paid to them.

He asserts that all this waste of money was due to the indiscretions of Mr. Weston and others, and he urges that no compensation should now be granted to them as they have been drawing their salaries all along and have not had to meet the cost of their defence.

13. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th August 1912 expresses regret that the Secretary of State has sanctioned an extension of Sir Cecil Brett's service in order to entitle him to full pension as a Judge of the High Court. The editor strongly deprecates such executive favours to high judicial officers as calculated to impair stern judicial independence, and he insists that such favours should be granted only on public grounds.

LEADER, 24th August 1912.

Extension of Sir Cecil Brett's term as Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

(b)—Police.

14. Referring to the circular issued by the Government of Bengal requiring policemen not to carry canes while on duty, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 24th August

OUDH AKHBAR, 24th August 1912.

Police reform.

1912 suggests that similar orders should be issued in all the other provinces of India. The editor urges that some member of the Viceregal Council should introduce a bill to put down the oppression practised by the police on the general public and by railway employés on third class passengers. He expresses the opinion that if the public were invited to give details of cases of such oppression there would be a clear case for legislation.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

HINDUSTANI, 26th August 1912.

The Gorakhpur Municipality.

15. A correspondent who signs himself "PANDIT PREMSUKH AVASTHI FROM GORAKHPUR" contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 26th August 1912, in which he complains of the action of the Gorakhpur municipality in criminally prosecuting persons whose cattle are impounded. He claims that the action of the municipality is illegal, and adds that such cases should not be tried by honorary magistrates who are municipal commissioners.

He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and remarks that if these cases are not stopped, the breeding of cattle will suffer, with the result that ghi and milk will become scarce in the city.

(e)—Education.

SAHIFA, 19th August 1912.

The growth of higher education in India.

16. The editor of the Sahifa (Bijnor) in the issue of the 19th August 1912 (received on the 21th August), publishes an article entitled "Higher education in India" in which he discusses the educational conditions that prevailed in India during the Aryan and the Muhammadan periods, and describes how in the early days English officials persuaded Indians to receive English education.

He says that when Indians acquired Western education, they began to clamour for their just rights and privileges and to claim equality with Anglo-Indians. The latter then began to devise means to check the further growth of higher education in India.

He refers to the raising of school fees, the limiting of the number of students in each class, the fixing of the age of sixteen years for students desirous of appearing at the matriculation examination and the payment of double fees by students who fail to pass their annual examinations, as a few instances of the means adopted by the Anglo-Indians to prevent the Indians from obtaining higher education.

In conclusion he remarks that the decision of the Secretary of State for India to limit the educational scope of the universities at Aligarh and Benares is due to the fact that the educated community throughout India expressed dissatisfaction at the measures of Government and spread discontent, and hence Government is opposed to the further growth of higher education.

LEADER, 24th August 1912.

Indian students in England.

17. Referring to the remarks made by Mr. Montagu in the course of his budget speech on the problem of Indian students in England, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th August 1912 admits that the Indian student has to pay "an exorbitant price" for qualifying himself for the bar or for the Indian Medical or Civil Service. The editor asserts that the education imparted in England to fit men for the Indian services is not so very superior to the education that can be obtained in India as to justify the expense incurred by Indian students in going to England. He suggests that vakils should be accorded the same privileges as barristers and that assistant surgeons should be offered greater encouragement, and he urges that the Civil Service and other departmental competitive examinations should be held simultaneously in England and India.

He expresses regret that the pay of Dr. Ray's post was raised only when he left for India, and says that his valuable services could have been retained if the pay of his appointment had been raised earlier. He expresses his disapproval of the appointment of Mr. Mallet on a salary of £1,000 a year, and remarks that when the only qualification necessary was "knowledge of the conduct of a public office" some one less eminent than Mr. Mallet could have been appointed on a smaller salary. He expresses agreement with Mr. Montagu's observations regarding the difficulty experienced by Indian technological students in getting admittance to factories, and says that the report of Sir Theodore Morison's committee to investigate questions relating to Indian technical students in England will be awaited with great interest.

18. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 25th August 1912 takes exception to the expulsion of two Muhammadan students by the authorities of the Agra Medical School.

AL MUSHIR, 25th August 1912.

The Agra Medical School.

The editor invites the attention of Government to the arbitrary punishment inflicted on these students by the medical school authorities, and expresses the hope that a formal explanation will be demanded from them.

19. The Bharat Dharm Neta (Benares) of the 30th July 1912 (received on the 30th August), expresses regret at the decision of Government not to grant the power of affiliation to the proposed denominational Universities, and remarks that persons residing outside Aligarh or Benares will not be able to derive any benefit from these Universities. The editor notes that while the Muhammadans are protesting against this decision of Government, the Hindus are silent on the matter.

BHARAT DHARM NETA, 30th July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

20. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 20th August 1912 (received on the 24th August), protests against the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the scope of the proposed Muslim University, and urges that in order to obviate further misunderstanding Government should clearly state the powers it proposes to arrogate to itself in the administration of the affairs of the University.

MASHRIQ, 20th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

The editor contends that the grant of the power of affiliation will not lower the standard of the Universities and will not cause any conflict or competition with the existing Universities. He expresses surprise at the assertion that the traditions of Aligarh are quite local and peculiar, and says that the Aligarh College is an All-India institution and should be permitted to benefit Muhammadans all over India. With regard to the contention that the University at Aligarh would be unable to control colleges situated in different parts of India, he says that the proposed University will not at first affiliate any considerable number of outside colleges, and that the number of affiliated colleges will be increased as the University becomes more firmly established.

He expresses his gratification at the decision of the Secretary of State to give the proposed Universities a free hand in the appointment of professors, but takes exception to the change in the designation of the Universities on the ground that such purely local names preclude the possibility of powers of affiliation being granted at some future date.

He observes that Government should not restrict the freedom of the Universities by throwing out hopes of a liberal money grant, and he suggests that Government should first satisfy itself that the Universities are a success and should then make a recurring annual grant which could be withdrawn in case the Universities do not prove satisfactory. He expresses regret that Government contemplates interference in the internal management of the Universities, and he suggests that public meetings should be held all over the country to discuss the situation. In conclusion he urges both Hindu and Muhammadans not to accept a charter from which the power of affiliation has been omitted.

21. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 21st August 1912 (received on the 26th August), commends the attitude of the Muhammadans towards the decision of Government regarding the proposed universities, and remarks that the Hindus will betray great weakness if they calmly submit to the decision. The editor expresses the hope that the views of the Leader (Allahabad) in this connection are not shared by the promoters of the university scheme. In conclusion he remarks that a Hindu university of the tyspe indicated by Government would be more official and less independent than the existing universities, and would therefore do no good to the Hindu community.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 21st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

MUSAFIR, 23rd August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

22. The Musáfir (Agra) of the 23rd August 1912 (received on the 29th August), expresses surprise at the silence of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on the question of affiliation, and says that the silence of the Hindu leaders, coupled with the views of their organ, the Leader (Allahabad), shows that they are willing to accept a university without the powers of affiliation. The editor asserts that the Hindu community does not want a university of this nature, and he suggests that the funds that have been collected should be devoted to the uplifting of the depressed classes or should be expended on technical colleges.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

23. A correspondent who signs himself "BRIJNANDAN PRASAD MITRA" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 25th August 1912, in which he says that the decision of Government regarding the grant of the power of affiliation to the proposed Hindu and Muhammadan Universities has caused deep disappointment to Indians all over the country. He considers the decision of Government to be unreasonable in face of its declared policy for the spread of education in the country, and says that it is such acts that impair the prestige of Government in the eyes of the people. He appeals to Government to reconsider its decision as it vitally affects the future of several millions of its Indian subjects. He also urges the people to start a vigorous and respectful agitation against the decision.

ABHYUDAYA, 25th August 1912.

The Tata Iron Works.

24. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 25th August 1912 says that Government has to indent for a large quantity of iron and steel from foreign countries for its Public Works and Railways. The editor suggests that Government should encourage Indian industries by obtaining the iron and steel it requires from the Tata Iron Works.

HINDUSTANI, 26th August 1912.

The postal clerks.

25. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 26th August 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains of the slow promotion in the postal service. He expresses the opinion that superintendents of post offices should not be empowered to make promotions from the Rs. 30 to the Rs. 50 grade, and he complains that the higher grades are mostly filled by the direct appointment of Eurasians and Native Christians.

He condemns the proposed amalgamation of the post and telegraphic departments, as he considers that if the amalgamation is effected there will be no further promotion for the post office staff, as some reduction will be necessary in the telegraphic department and the extra hands in that department will be provided for in the post office.

He urges the postal clerks throughout India to memorialize Government and to represent the smallness of their pay and the exacting and heavy nature of their work.

1. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for August 1912 contains the second instalment of the article on "The Reform Movement in Japan" by Mr. R. G. Pradhan, B.A., LL.B., M.R.A.S. (vide Selections No. 30, paragraph 1). In the course of the article the writer remarks that the Japanese recognized the true function of literature as a potent instrument of national education, and that no oriental nation has been more assiduous in bringing the rich treasures of Western thought and culture within the easy reach of the people than the Japanese. He points out that European works on history and political philosophy were translated into Japanese, and that dramas and novels were written under Government patronage with a view to conveying new political truths to the Japanese people. He contrasts the fostering care of the Japanese government in regard to literature with the attitude of the Government of India towards the literary development of the people of India as evinced by the Press Act, and remarks that the ignorance of the masses is the chief obstacle in the path of the political education of India. To remedy this he urges Indians to help the national movement by translating European works on history, political philosophy and political economy into the Indian vernaculars. He attributes the development of the national movement in Bengal to the wide diffusion of Western ideals and principles by means of vernacular literature, and urges Marathi writers to create a literature which will spread the gospel of liberty, constitutionalism, rights of man, popular government and such kindred subjects among the people.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, August 1912.

The reform movement in Japan and the progress of India.

2. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 31st August 1912 is unable to understand why China is so anxious to make Tibet an integral part of itself as it has already lost Korea and is likely to lose Mongolia and has enough to do in settling its internal affairs. The editor expresses concern at the memorandum sent to the Government of China by the British Minister, Sir John Jordan, and inquires why Britain is stipulating as to the number of Chinese soldiers to be stationed at Lhassa when India is not threatened.

LEADER, 31st August 1912.

The situation in Tibet.

He expresses the opinion that Britain has no justification for defining the precise relations that should exist between China and Tibet. He admits that the British Government is perfectly justified in telling China not to use India as a highway to Tibet, but he expresses the hope that no restriction will be put on ordinary Chinese travellers.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st September 1912 expresses regret that the Colonial office has framed a rule prohibiting all non-European British subjects in Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements and the Federated Malay States from entering for the Civil Service examination.

ADVOCATE, 1st September 1912.

Employment of natives in the public services in Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements and the Federated Malay States.

The editor states that previous to 1867 the Straits Settlements were administered by the Government of India, and that the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 guaranteeing equality of treatment to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects applied not only to India but also to the Straits Settlements. He deplores the action of the Colonial office in thus breaking away "from the great Imperial tradition of equality of citizenship, without consulting either the Imperial Parliament or the Local Legislative Assemblies." He contends that there is no truth in the plea advanced by the Colonial office that Chinese and Malays "dislike and resent officers of other than pure European descent being placed in authority over them." He protests against the light and casual manner in which the Colonial Secretary has justified his action by quoting the words "so far as may be" of the Proclamation. He says that this is the most serious reversal of Imperial policy that can be imagined, and he urges that Asiatic subjects of the Crown should not be allowed to feel that they are not entitled to the ranks and privileges of British citizenship.

4. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for August 1912 contains the second instalment of the article entitled "The West and the East in special relation to the progress of British India" by Mr. J. Chatterji, B.A., Barrister-at-law (vide

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, August 1912.

The West and the East in special relation to the progress of British India.

Selections No. 30, paragraph 7). In the course of the article the writer says that in order to bring about the peaceful and harmonious development of India both Eastern and Western ideals should be constantly kept in view. He suggests that the study of logic, metaphysics and the arts and sciences of the East should be introduced into Indian universities, and that additional degrees and faculties of theology should be created. He expresses the opinion that a study of religion will help the removal of objectionable practices, and that in view of the fact that religious principles have been wrongly interpreted to justify anarchism, Government should seriously consider the question of religious education. He expresses apprehension that the establishment of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities will lead to the creation of a band of religious bigots which will render the unification of the country more difficult. He says that this danger will be obviated by the introduction of the study of religions in the universities.

He urges Government to improve the sanitation of the country and to see that the best medical and surgical aid is available for the poorest. He says that new means of livelihood should be opened out for Indians and that the old ones should be preserved. He complains that the British Government does not enable Indians to develop themselves along the lines best suited to them, and he pleads for the equal treatment of Indians and Europeans in the higher branches of the public service. He points out that Indians can with difficulty make a living in other countries, and he urges that they therefore have a claim to appointments in their own country. He admits that their character fits Britishers to act as pioneers and leaders, but remarks that this does not prove that every white man will be found more efficient than every Indian.

He expresses the view that it is the duty of the State to make elementary education free and unrestricted and to make higher education less expensive.

With regard to the development of Indian trades and industries, he expresses disapproval of the swadeshi-boycott movement, and says that preferential tariff will never benefit India. In conclusion he urges the spread of technical education and the removal of India's peculiar disabilities.

MASHRIQ, 27th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

5. According to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 27th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), the Public Service Commission should have been composed only of persons who have a wide knowledge of Indian affairs and conditions.

The editor complains of the disproportionate representation of Europeans, and suggests that the Commission should be composed of twenty-five members, twelve of whom should be Indians.

He expresses regret that no representative has been appointed from the United Provinces, Bengal, Burma, the Punjab or the North-West Frontier Provinces, and proposes that two members from each of the provinces should be elected members of the Commission.

UNION GAZETTE, 28th August 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

6. The Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 4th September), complains of the inadequate representation of Indians on the Public Service Commission.

The editor remarks that some of the European members of the Commission are hostile to Indians in general and to Muhammadans in particular, and he suggests that at least half of the members of the Commission should be Indians.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 28th August 1912.

Security from the Muslim Press (Lucknow).

7. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), informs its readers that security of rupees five hundred has been deposited by the manager of the Muslim Press as a guarantee for the Muslim Gazette. The editor says that he was not surprised at the order of the Deputy Commissioner requiring the manager to deposit security, and that the press was quite prepared to comply with the order.

He says that his services are being devoted to the community without any hope of personal gain, and he asserts that no fear whatever can deter him from his duties as an editor.

He goes on to say that he is not deterred by the thought of the difficulties he will have to encounter, and that every new obstacle will be merely a stepping stone to higher things.

He states that as his intentions are pure, nothing can mar his career, and that government officials and his co-religionists have every right to test his aims and to put him to any ordeal they care to, as he is bound to triumph in a just cause.

He further says that the displeasure of Government and the abuse of insincere friends will not make him deviate from the right path.

He appeals to the subscribers of the Muslim Gazette to recommend the paper to their friends, and he reminds them that a widely-circulated paper becomes a power in the country if the editor wields a strong pen and is not deterred from performing his national duties by threats or by the hope of gain.

In conclusion he prays God to give him strength and perseverence to meet all emergencies with patience and calmness.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 28th August 1912.

British rule in India.

8. According to the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), British rule in India rests on the justice and purity of the administration and not on the existence of a powerful army. The editor accordingly considers that any curtailment of the powers of the Indian High Courts will ultimately involve the downfall of British supremacy in India.

MUSAFIR, 30th August 1912.

Sir John Hewett's administration.

9. Reviewing Sir John Hewett's administration the Musáfir (Agra) of the 30th August 1912 (received on the 4th September), remarks that though some Indian politicians do not agree with Sir John's views on certain political questions and consider him a Tory of the old school, yet it cannot but be admitted that Sir John has proved a veritable godsend to these provinces. The editor considers that Sir John Hewett and Sir Antony MacDonnell were the two best Lieutenant Governors these provinces have had during the last three decades, and he remarks that at a time when the whole country was under the shadow of suspicion and distrust, the reins of the administration in these provinces were in the hands of a peace-loving, kind-hearted and sober-minded ruler, to whose remarkable statesmanship may be attributed the fact that the tranquillity of the province was not disturbed.

Referring to the Burn circular he notes that Sir John Hewett was not responsible for it, as it was issued while Sir Leslie Porter was acting as Lieutenant Governor. He adds that Sir John Hewett counteracted its evil influences on his return to the province, and he observes that this fact shows the high administrative capacity, foresight and wisdom of Sir John Hewett. In discussing the famine of 1907 he remarks that Sir John Hewett's administration in that year was unique for the sympathy shown by Government for the sufferings of the people.

He refers to Sir John's magnanimous treatment of the press and platform in these provinces, and states that he was the only provincial ruler in India who did not have recourse to the provisions of the Press Act or of the Seditious Meetings Act.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

10. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for August 1912 contains an article entitled "The sorrows of Akbar" by Mr. Syed Abdullah Brelvi, B.A., in which the writer asserts that the idea of an Indian nationality was first conceived by Akbar and that the whole of his life was spent in endeavouring to weld the various races of India into a united nation. He expresses regret that the splendid work of Akbar is being undone by the mutual jealousies and rivalries of Hindus and Muhammadans of the present day, and states that it has always been the destiny of India to merge heterogenous races into a harmonious whole, and that the idea of unity pervades the entire history of India. He remarks that both Hindus and Muslims lived in mutual peace and harmony up to the time of Shahjehan, and that even now in the villages and among the agricultural and labouring classes the relations between these two communities are very happy. He deplores the growth of a spirit of mutual suspicion, jealousy and unhealthy rivalry among educated Hindus and Muhammadans and expresses regret that though educated Indians recognize the supreme importance of unity for national regeneration, they do not put their patriotic theories into practice. He appeals to Hindus and Muhammadans, in the name of Akbar's noble mission, to remove the causes of strained relations that exist between them and to promote mutual love and harmony. He refers to the Hindu-Muslim conference held in 1910 at Allahabad under the presidency of Sir W. Wedderburn and also to the Muslim conference recently convened by Dr, Saharwardy, and says that differences of religion should not be permitted to hinder the formation of an Indian nation. He suggests that the organizers of the proposed denominational universities should prescribe a special course of Hindu and Muslim religion and literature in both universities in order to create a desire for understanding each others religion, literature and general needs.

ABHYUDAYA, 29th August 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

11. A correspondent who signs himself "KRISHNA BBALDEVA VARMA" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 29th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), on the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. He says that, notwithstanding all the efforts of the Hindus, the Muhammadans have not only hitherto held aloof from the Hindus but have often injured their feelings by their aggressive attitude in political, religious and social matters. He expresses regret that the Hindu-Muhammadan conference that was convened in 1910 at the instance of Sir William Wedderburn proved abortive, and that the good counsels of the president had no effect on the leaders of the Muhammadan community.

He points out that unity between Hindus and Muhammadans will conduce to the good of both communities, and he approves of the proposals made by Mr. Amir Ali for promoting better relations between the two races.

He asks the leaders of the Hindu community to accept these proposals when slightly modified and to put them into effect. He urges however that the Hindus should have nothing to do with the Muhammadans if their overtures are prompted only by a desire to secure the support of the Hindus in the agitation against the Italian-Turkish war or against the action of the Russians in desecrating the mosque at Meshed. He says that the Muhammadans themselves desecrated a large number of Hindu temples during the time of their rule, and he considers that the Hindus cannot join with the Muhammadans in condemning the Russian sacrilege until they are assured that the Muhammadans view similar acts of sacrilege on the part of their ancestors with horror.

He remarks that the Meshed incident should teach the Muhammadans to respect the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus, and that their leaders will do well to prevent the Muhammadan masses from creating disturbances on the occasion of Hindu festivals and from secrificing cows. He observes that although Hindus and Jains, Sikhs, Parsis and Christians have religious differences, they do not quarrel but have peaceful relations with one another, and he considers that unless the Muhammadans follow a similar policy there can be no permanent real unity in the country.

Discussing the question of the modifications that should be made in Mr. Amir Ali's proposals so as to make them acceptable to the Hindus, he asserts that there is no need for the formation of a new committee of Hindus and Muhammadans but that the latter should join the provincial conferences and the Indian National Congress, which are not communal but national institutions. He says that the Hindus will ever remain grateful to the Muhammadans if they stop cow-sacrifices. He urges that the Muhammadans should not oppose the development of Hindi literature but should rather help in raising it to the standard of Urdu literature, and he assures the Muhammadans that Hindus do not aim at supplanting Urdu with Hindi. In conclusion he urges the Muhammadans to join hands with the Hindus in securing recognition for gaushalas and other Hindu institutions.

ADVOCATE, 5th September 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th September 1912 reproduces portions of an article contributed by Mr. Homersham Cox, late professor, Muir Central College, to the August number of the Modern Review (Calcutta) on the subject of Hindu-Muhammadan relations. According to Mr. Cox nothing could be more foolish or contemptible than for a man to make his religion an excuse for separating himself from his countrymen.

He remarks that mutual discord only retards the progress of both Hindus and Muhammadans, and he urges them to take a lesson from the Roman Catholics and Protestants of England or from the Christians and Buddhists of Japan and to sink their religious differences in their country's cause. He advocates a spirit of toleration, and suggests that Muhammadans should give up the killing of cows out of consideration for the feelings of Hindus. He expresses regret that some retired members of the Indian Civil Service have exaggerated the purely theoretical differences between Islam and Hinduism and have omitted to point out the practical goodwill that is shown by Hindus and Muhammadans to one another. In conclusion he appeals to the younger generation of educated Hindus and Muhammadans to remove the stigma of want of patriotism from their character by sinking their religious differences in the interests of the country.

13. A correspondent writing in the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), complains that certain government employés in Umballa cantonment have latterly been persecuted because of their faith and that objectionable inquiries have been made regarding the aims of the samaj. The writer then inquires if the followers of the Arya creed are considered a criminal community that they are being subjected to such persecution.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 28th August 1912.

The Arya Samaj and politics.

The editor answers the question in the negative, and remarks that the Government of India does not look upon the samaj with suspicion. He says that during the last few years not a single Arya Samajist has been convicted of sedition, and he considers that, even if the contrary were the case, the samaj could not be condemned as a whole because of the views of some of its members.

He points out that Christianity is not a proscribed religion though many of its adherents are anarchists and assassins and that Islam is not condemned in spite of its doctrine of jehad, and he argues that there is therefore no reason to view the Arya Samaj with distrust, especially as none of its followers have been found guilty of any charge. He can accordingly see no reason why any members of the Arya Samaj who are in government service should be called on to deny their faith on pain of losing their appointments, and any distrust that prevails regarding the samaj he attributes to the machinations of subordinate officials. In conclusion he entreats Government not to view the Arya Samaj with distrust, and he urges Arya Samajists to remain faithful to their creed as the clouds of official doubt will in due course roll by.

14. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st September 1912 protests against the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Naini Tal prohibiting the singing of hymns at the Talli Tal Arya Samaj meeting house between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. during the month of Ramzan. The editor states that the Deputy Commissioner was induced to pass this order by some Muhammadan tailors of the locality who say one prayer a day in front of the samaj meeting house and the remainder at the mosque which is some distance of. He contends that the Deputy Commissioner's order is opposed to the spirit of religious neutrality of the British Government, and he expresses the hope that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor will see that the order is cancelled.

The editor condemns the attacks made on Mr. Justice Fletcher, and says that he should not be considered incompetent merely because his views did not coincide with those of his colleagues on a point of law.

16. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 29th August 1912 (received on the 4th September), says that all just-minded persons will be pained to read the attacks made by a certain section of the Anglo-Indian press on Mr. Justice Fletcher for his judgment in the Midnapur case. The editor regrets that Government has so far taken no action against the persons responsible for these attacks, and he suggests that, if Government declines to move in the matter, the Calcutta High Court should uphold its dignity by calling upon the proprietors of the papers in question to show cause why proceedings should not be instituted against them.

ADVOCATE, 29th August 1912.

Mr. Justice Fletcher and the Anglo-Indian press.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), takes exception to the indecent and indecorous attacks made on Mr. Justice Fletcher by a certain section of the Anglo-Indian press in connection with the Midnapur case. The editor contends that it is ridiculous to demand the resignation of Mr. Justice Fletcher simply because some of his judgments have been reversed, and he remarks that in the Mymensingh case Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment was supported by other distinguished Judges of the Calcutta High Court.

He says that in June 1909 the Chief Justice and Justice Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee made some scathing remarks on the conduct of Mr. Weston in their judgment in the Midnapur bomb case, and he expresses the opinion that Mr. Justice Woodroffe's judgment was therefore a reversion of the decision of 1909. He goes on to remark that Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee did not agree with Mr. Justice Woodroffe on all material points, and therefore the attacks on Mr. Justice Fletcher are quite unjustified.

LEADER, 1st September 1912.

The reform of the Indian judiciary.

18. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st September 1912 notes that, though Sir Henry Prinsep considers that the training of civilian Judges is deficient, yet he does not advocate the elevation of lawyers to the Bench. The editor attributes Sir Henry's attitude to his desire to see the monopoly of the higher appointments in the judicial service in the hands of civilians, and he points out that the legal profession is bound to be an important factor in India. In conclusion he expresses the opinion that no training can make up for experience gained at the bar, and he observes that no judicial reform will be regarded as adequate which does not provide for the recruitment of Judges from among lawyers instead of from among civilians.

The editor takes exception to Dr. Modi's remarks about the prevalence of adultery among Muhammadans, and suggests that Government should make a full inquiry into the matter and prosecute Dr. Modi for making an improper and libellous attack on the Muhammadan community.

DARBAR, 28th August 1912.

23. With reference to the expulsion of two Muhammadan students from the Agra Medical School the Darbar (Agra) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), publishes a contributed article in which the writer appeals to Muhammadan associations to take up the cause of these students. He expresses regret that Muhammadans have not protested against the statement of Dr. Modi that cases of rape are more common in their community than in any other.

ABHYUDAYA, 29th August 1912.

Indian students in England.

24. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 29th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), refers to the importance the Under Secretary of State for India attributes to the education of Indian students in England. The editor takes exception to the appointment of Mr. Mallet as Assistant Educational Advisor of Indian students on financial grounds, and contends that a less capable official on a smaller salary should have been selected. He considers that Dr. P. K. Roy was best fitted for the appointment, and that Government should have made it worth his while to accept it.

He expresses agreement with Mr. Montagu's views that increased educational facilities should be provided in India, but he points out that this should not prevent Indian students from proceeding to England to study subjects that are not taught in this country. He suggests that as it is of supreme importance that Indians should have facilities for entering the legal and medical professions and the Indian Civil Service, Government should hold simultaneous Civil Service examinations in India, should throw open the doors of the Indian Medical Service to graduates of medical colleges in India and should allow Indian vakils the privileges enjoyed by barristers.

ADVOCATE, 1st September 1912.

The Women's Medical College movement.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st September 1912 expresses gratification at the success of the movement for the establishment of a Women's Medical College at Delhi, and says that the college will prove of great benefit to India. The editor expresses the hope that this college will obviate the necessity for a Women's Indian Medical Service, and he suggests that the latter movement should be held in abeyance till the Delhi college is given a fair trial.

He is pleased to note that Lady Hardinge proposes to merge her nursing fund in the proposed college, and concludes by remarking that once the college is established it will meet the requirements of all classes of people in India.

LEADER, 30th August 1912.

Mr. Montagu on primary education.

26. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 30th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), publishes a contributed article in which the writer thanks Mr. Montagu for his remarks regarding primary education in India, but expresses regret that he has not realized the importance of compulsory education at the present moment. He expresses approval of the educational programme outlined by Mr. Montagu, but contends that compulsory education is essential as ignorance is so prevalent in India.

With regard to Mr. Montagu's objection to the cost of providing educational facilities in villages, he remarks that Mr. Gokhale asked for the introduction of compulsory education in selected areas only as a preliminary measure. He asserts that the "distrust of parents" referred to by Mr. Montagu has been very much exaggerated by unsympathetic officials, and he says that the caste difficulty can be very easily remedied by the establishment of separate schools for the humble classes.

In conclusion he expresses the conviction that the supply of teachers will become more plentiful when education becomes more general and when teachers have better prospects, and he maintains that Indians as a class are only too ready to avail themselves of educational facilities.

LEADER, 4th September 1912.

Mr. Montagu on Indian education.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

28. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 26th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), expresses its satisfaction at the tone of the letter in reply to the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler, and suggests that in view of the attitude of Government the idea of establishing a Muslim university should be abandoned for at least ten years. The editor urges that the funds that have been collected should be invested, and that on the income five or six first class residential schools should be established in different parts of India, and scholarships should be granted to students to go to foreign countries or to qualify as teachers in India.

AL BASHIR, 27th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

29. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 27th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), expresses regret that Sir Harcourt Butler's letter with regard to the question of affiliation did not clearly indicate whether Government was prepared to sanction the affiliation of high schools to the university.

The editor says that if Government agrees to the affiliation of high schools, the Muhammadans as a whole will not feel disappointed that the general power of affiliation has been denied their university.

He asks Sir Harcourt Butler to state why the powers of the Chancellor of the university should be vested in the Governor General in Council as nowhere else are the powers of a Chancellor exercised by central governments.

He takes strong exception to the decision of the Secretary of State as regards the designation of the university, and asks him how the word Muslim is likely to embarrass Government or stunt the growth of higher education.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 28th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

30. A correspondent who signs himself "MR. RAFI-UD-DIN AHMAD KHAN, B.A." contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), in which he says that the decision of the Secretary of State in regard to the proposed Muslim University has created profound disappointment among Muhammadans.

He advises his co-religionists to agitate for the power of affiliation for their university, and he urges them not to be disheartened by the example of their cowardly and titled leaders to whom all agitation is but veiled sedition. He says that the community cannot afford to spend thirty-five lakhs on a local institution which will turn out at the most only forty or fifty graduates every year and will not therefore benefit the country as a whole. He remarks that if the leaders accept such a university they will be guilty of misappropriating public funds. He expresses admiration for the moral courage exhibited by the Punjabi and Behari members of the constitution committee, and says that vigorous efforts should be made to induce Government to rescind its decision.

He suggests that in case all efforts to induce Government to accede to the popular demand fail, the funds that have been collected should be utilized for the spread of primary and secondary education among Muhammadans throughout India.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 28th August 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

31. The Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 4th September), in which he refuses to accept the decision of the Secretary of State for India regarding the question of affiliation as "final," and remarks that the demand for the power of affiliation by the Muhammadans is really based on their educational needs and that it cannot be modified. He urges his co-religionists not to give way to despondency at the decision of Government but to plead their cause with respect and determination as no great object has ever been attained without a struggle.

He considers that any proposal to spend the money that has been collected other than on the university scheme would be a breach of faith on the part of the leaders, and he suggests that the scope of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, should be extended as soon as possible so as to admit of the university scheme being put into practical effect as soon as the charter is sanctioned.

In conclusion he expresses the opinion that Government will rescind its decision if the Muhammadans persist in their demand for the charter they have already asked for.

32. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th September 1912 states that the Comrade (Calcutta) has hit upon a novel plan to ascertain the opinion of the Muhammadan community as to the action that should be taken in view of the decision of Government in regard to the proposed Muslim University. The editor says that the Comrade publishes a voting paper and asks every subscriber to state whether the Muslim community should accept the charter outlined by Government for their university or not. He remarks that the Comrade thinks that by this means the views of the Muhammadan community on the matter can be obtained.

ADVOCATE, 5th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

33. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 31st August 1912 remarks that if the Hindu University is not to be permitted to affiliate distant institutions, all the colleges and schools in Benares except the mission institutions should be affiliated to the Benares University and not to the Allahabad University. The editor expresses the hope that Government will permit the affiliation of the Queen's College, Sanskrit College, Hewett Kshatriya school and Harishchandra school to the Benares University.

LEADER, 31st August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

34. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) for July 1912 (received on the 4th September), expresses regret at the decision of Government in regard to the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities, and remarks that if Government does not reconsider the matter, the usefulness of the two universities will be materially impaired.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, July 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

35. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 27th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), refers to the views expressed by the Leader (Allahabad) as to the decision of the Secretary of State for India with regard to the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities, and remarks that the Hindu University scheme was started with the object of rendering the establishment of the Muslim University more difficult.

AL BASHIR, 27th August 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

The editor urges his co-religionists not to regard the Hindu aspect of the question but to consult their own interests in accepting a charter for their university.

36. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st September 1912 considers that all the efforts of the Hindu and Muslim leaders will be in vain if the power of affiliation is not granted to the proposed denominational universities.

ARYA MITRA, 1st September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

37. A correspondent who signs himself "CHANDRA MOHAN SETH FROM BENARES" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st September 1912, in which he advises his countrymen to accept the decision of Government on the university question in all respects save as regards the designation of the universities. The terms "Hindu" and "Muslim" are very dear to the two communities, and he therefore urges Government to respect the sentimental wishes of its subjects and sanction the proposed designations of the two universities.

LEADER, 1st September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

38. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID MAKHDUM ALAM FROM LALPUR MUAFI, DISTRICT ETAH" contributes an article entitled "The importance of the science of agriculture and the pitiable condition of the agriculturists in India" to the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 28th August 1912 (received on the 2nd September), in which he deplores the condition of the agricultural classes in India, the increase of litigation between zamindars and cultivators and the exorbitant rates of interest charged by money-lenders and in which he asks Government to provide village panchayats to relieve the agriculturists of the ruinous expenses they have to incur in getting their differences settled by the law courts.

ZUL QARNAIN, 28th August 1912.

The condition of agriculture and agriculturists in India.

He objects to the system of education prevalent in the country which makes no provision for imparting instruction to the sons of traders and agriculturists, and remarks that a country that depends on foreign imports can never be prosperous.

He expresses approval of the efforts of Government to spread higher education in India, and with regard to the proposed Muslim University he urges that Government should grant it full liberty in the management of its own affairs.

He protests against the restrictions placed by Government on the university scheme, and remarks that Government should reserve only the power of general supervision and the power to see that no seditious literature is circulated in the university.

He refers to the proposal to establish village schools and suggests that the instruction given in these schools should deal solely with subjects relating to agriculture.

He also suggests that the books prescribed for village schools should give the history of agricultural implements and their inventors, and that they should consist of treatises on morality, sanitation and physical geography.

He asks Government to provide Indians with a means of livelihood by making arrangements for imparting agricultural instruction to them and to introduce higher education later on to enable them to improve their status.

(g)—General.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, July 1912.

An appeal on behalf of the subordinate officials of Pauri.

39. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) for July 1912 (received on the 4th September), says that the subordinate officials of Pauri in Garhwal are put to great hardship owing to the unusually high prices of foodstuffs in the locality. The editor appeals to Government to improve their lot either by granting them a monthly allowance or by arranging to ensure a cheaper supply of foodstuffs to them.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st September 1912.

The Hindi-Urdu question.

40. With regard to the Hindi-Urdu controversy the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st September 1912 considers that the question should not be treated as a political one and that the Muhammadans are not justified in accusing the Hindus of discouraging the use of Urdu. The editor remarks that though the Hindus have become more tolerant, the Muhammadans are still consumed with the pride of having once been an imperial race and consider it beneath their dignity to join hands with the Hindus in any national movement.

He says that now that Persian has been replaced by English as a court language the Hindus are not obliged to study Urdu, but they study Urdu and Persian to a greater extent than Muhammadans study Hindi and Sanskrit. He then details the services rendered to Urdu literature by Hindus, and says that the Hindus are not to blame if they now adopt the more popular indigenous Nagrí which is easier to learn than Urdu. He urges Muhammadans to give up their unreasoning opposition to the efforts of the Hindus to extend the use of the Nagri script, and suggests that the efforts of the Muslim League in the direction of a Hindu-Muhammadan rapprochement should include the general adoption of Hindi thoughout India.

ADVOCATE, 1st September 1912.

Indian Engineers.

41. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st September 1912 notes that out of the ten Indians who applied to the India Office for appointments in the Public Works Department only three received appointments. The editor urges the abolition of the rule under which only ten per cent. of the vacancies in the Public Works Department can be filled by natives, and says that, when Indian Engineers with English qualifications are available, the Government of India should not apply for the services of Engineers from England, especially as Indians would in all probability accept smaller salaries than Englishmen.

ADVOCATE, 1st September 1912.

Indian vernaculars and Roman letters.

42. A correspondent who signs himself "J. KNOWLES FROM MOWBRAY, WHITLY ROAD, EASTBOURNE" contributes an article to the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st September 1912 in which he urges the adoption of Roman letters in Indian vernaculars. He says that Indian characters are too complicated, and he considers that the adoption of Roman letters would facilitate the spread of education. He suggests that a conference should be held to discuss the matter and that appropriate rules should be drawn up.

LEADER, 4th September 1912.

Money-lenders as landlords.

43. A correspondent who signs himself "MUKHTAR SINGH, PLEADER, FROM MEERUT" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th September 1912, in which he invites the attention of Government to the injurious effects of money-lenders becoming landlords.

He suggests that a return should be prepared showing the properties of judgment-debtors entrusted to Collectors of districts and the properties sold, mortgaged and leased, as he considers that such a return would show that the properties of judgment-debtors are sold cheap and generally pass into the hands of decree-holders.

He proposes that Collectors should be asked to try to mortgage or lease out the lands entrusted to them for sale, and he suggests that, in case the lands cannot be leased out, they should be sold only after the real price of the land has been ascertained.

The Kshattriya Mitra (Benares) of the 1st September 1912 (received on the 7th September), emphasizes the necessity of landholders returning one of themselves as their representative on the Legislative Councils, and urges them not to yield to any pressure brought to bear upon them to elect a bania landowner. The editor suggests that they should either elect Kumar Bharat Singh or Thakur Dhyan Pal Singh, and that if there is any difficulty in their election, they should vote for a Muhammadan hereditary landowner.

Nawab Haji Ismail Khan contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), in which he asks Muhammadan voters not to be led away by the personal influence of the candidates for the membership of the councils, and urges them to vote impartially with due regard to the merits of the candidates.

He also urges that the Muhammadan candidates for the council should definitely promise that they will never act contrary to the wishes of their constituents, and that they will truly represent orthodox Muhammadan opinion.

4. The Saddharm Parchárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), says that the failure of all attempts hitherto made to promote better relations between Hindus and Muhammadans has been due to the fact that the leaders of both communities have no influence over the masses. As regards educated Hindus and Muhammadans the editor remarks that their selfishness has been the chief stumbling block in the path, and he considers that Muhammadans are more to blame than Hindus, in that the former, not content with getting special privileges in the councils, are further seeking to secure special and separate representation on municipal and district boards. He expresses the hope that the recent efforts made by the London branch of the Muslim League for a rapprochement between the Hindus and Muhammadans will be successful, and he urges the leaders of both communities to take steps to remove the root causes of their mutual differences and to adopt a more conciliatory attitude.

Discussing the proposals of the London Muslim League for a Hindu-Muhammadan rapprochement, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), says that Hindus can no more be expected to give up the study of Hindi than Muhammadans can be expected to give up the sacrifice of cows on the occasion of the Bakr-Id. The editor remarks that, on account of its isolated position, the London League has lost touch with the true state of feelings in India, and he suggests that the question should be thoroughly discussed in the Indian press before any definite proposals are made.

Discussing the proposals of the London Muslim League for a Hindu-Muhammadan rapprochement, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), says that Hindus can no more be expected to give up the study of Hindi than Muhammadans can be expected to give up the sacrifice of cows on the occasion of the Bakr-Id. take such action against the paper. The editor remarks that this is the latest instance of the abuse by District Magistrates of their powers under the Press Act.

He further says that the District Magistrate of Jhang refunded the amount of the first security, which was taken from the publisher of the Jhang Sial for publishing an objectionable article, and observes that the Punjab Government has given no reason why this amount was refunded.

He inquires whether this procedure proves that Government cannot take two securities from the same paper or if it can refund the amount of security in case there has been an improvement in the tone of the paper.

He urges the Government of India to make this point clear, especially in view of the fact that the interpretation of the Press Act in one province carries weight in other provinces also.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th September 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

7. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), expresses regret that the Muhammadans have not realized their duties and responsibilities, in spite of the reverses they have suffered in the annulment of the partition of Bengal and in the rejection of their university scheme by Government.

Discussing the present condition of the Muslim League, the editor deplores the growth of conflicting political parties among the Muhammadans, and urges the reorganization of the League under the leadership of Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk. He warns his co-religionists against committing political suicide by joining the Congress, and concludes with an appeal for greater unity among Indian Muhammadans.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 4th September 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

8. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), says that the various Commissions that have been appointed from time to time to inquire into Indian questions have produced no practical results, and that the present Public Service Commission is also likely to prove ineffectual, especially as no Indian excepting Mr. Gokhale has been appointed a member of it.

He expresses the opinion that Mr. Gokhale cannot single-handed exert much influence on the deliberations of the Commission, and that he can accordingly do no good to Indians in being a member of the Commission.

ADVOCATE, 8th September 1912.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 expresses its gratification at the observations made by Lord Carmichael on the occasion of his visit to Rajshahi on the duties of the Civil Service in India. The editor expresses his admiration for the manner in which Lord Carmichael is endeavouring to bring about the realization of the hopes that the King-Emperor's visit raised in the minds of the people, and he says that the work of administration in India would be rendered much easier if civilians sympathized with the aspirations of the people and worked in co-operation with them.

RASIK MITRA, July 1912.

The present condition of India.

10. The Rasik Mitra (Cawnpore) for July 1912 (received on the 30th August), publishes the following verses by one Jahar Singh of Ruruganj (Hamirpur) on the present condition of India :—

"India is in a deplorable condition; she is overwhelmed by great calamities:
Her drooping face is colourless, she has not a single pie in her hands."

"Her friends and neighbours have taken possession of her riches,
They have thus become wealthy: they did not earn any money [(lit.) shell]."

"We admit this, O friend, that they are in the ascendant at present,
The capital belongs to others, they have only utilized it for their own purposes (sic)."

"It is a fine show of different articles in a well-ordered shop,
But a big shop does not (necessarily) possess excellent wares [(lit.) sweets]."

"Our sons have lost their cleverness through their straitened circumstances, Their (Europeans') sprightly and intelligent sons show them the way."

"The mouse is clever when there is wealth and possessions in the house,
So the saying goes: 'there is no wisdom without money'."

"They (Europeans) pass their days happily while we constantly sigh, Barley and whey are not available for us (Indians) while Europeans have fruits and cream."

"We weep with hunger, while they (Europeans) laugh at us, How shocking it is! what distress we are suffering!"

"We think of filling their bellies, whereas they (Europeans) think of something higher,
This is the difference between the two (races)."

"How strange! that we have become so idle,
That even if a dog licks our faces, we do not say anything."

"Jahar says: arise, wash your hands and face, and don't sleep in idleness, Earn your livelihood, this is the only way for your salvation."

ADVOCATE, 8th September 1912.

The awakening of the coloured races.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 reproduces portions of an article contributed by Mr. Basil Thomson to the Bedrock on the subject of the awakening of the coloured races. According to Mr. Thomson there is no race of marked mental inferiority, though it may be that there is a larger number of thick-witted individuals in one race than in another.

He is of opinion that character and application are qualities that the coloured races lack, and in regard to the future relations between the white and coloured races he considers that colour destinctions will soon cease to exist in tropical countries, and that wealth will create a new aristocracy recruited from men of every shade of colour. In conclusion he expresses the opinion that in course of time white men will work shoulder to shoulder with black and feel no degradation in doing so.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th September 1912

Nationalism in India.

He observes that oppression and autocracy are necessary for the development of nationalism, and he asserts that once nationalism springs into being, it cannot be crushed, no matter how it is opposed, just as Krishna could not be overthrown by all the demons he encountered.

He says that opinion differs as to whether Krishna has been reborn or not, but that there is not the least doubt that nationalism has taken birth in the country, and he urges that it is now the duty of the people to look after its development and foster it with full confidence in its mission. He goes on to say that those are mistaken who hold that there cannot be one nationality in India until the Indian masses are educated, and the points out that Indians possess all the qualities that are to be found in the peoples of other countries. He remarks, however, that while the latter have now the good fortune to be guided by optimistic leaders, the Indian masses and their leaders are pessimistic and have no confidence in their future. He urges that they should henceforth make faith and hope their watchwords as otherwise, despite the spread of education, they can neither become one nation nor form one state.

LEADER, 10th September 1912.

Indentured labour and the treatment of Indians in South Africa.

13. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 10th September 1912 expresses regret that it makes no difference to the Indians of South Africa whether the Liberals or Conservatives are in office.

The editor complains that under the régime of a professed Radical like Mr. Harcourt, fresh disabilities have been imposed on "coloured" peoples in some of the Crown colonies, and states that a certain hauteur and lack of sympathy has been noticeable in Mr. Harcourt's replies to questions relating to the treatment of "coloured" races.

Discussing Mr. Harcourt's answers to questions put by Mr. Douglas Hall on indentured labour, he expresses regret that Mr. Harcourt should have stated that emigrants were not subject to hardships. He asserts that the evidence given before the Sanderson Committee and the recent debate in the Viceroy's Council conclusively prove the reverse.

He characterizes the system of indentured labour as a form of slavery, and urges Indians to carry on a vigorous agitation for its abolition.

LEADER, 10th September 1912.

The rumoured territorial redistributions in Behar.

14. Referring to the persistent rumours of the transfer of the winter capital of Behar from Bankipur to Purulia or Benares and of the transfer of the summer capital from Ranchi to Mirik or Darjeeling, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 10th September 1912 urges the Government of India to issue a communique reassuring the people that no such transfer is contemplated.

15. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), states on the authority of the Vakil (Amritsar) that Christian missionaries have opened a school in Aurangabad (Deccan) which is largely attended by Muhammadan students and in which two hours are devoted daily to the teaching of the Christian religion. The editor expresses regret that such an institution receives a grant-in-aid from the Nizam, and invites the attention of the Muhammadan officials of the state to this anamolous state of affairs. He appeals to the Muhammadans of Deccan to save their children from the influence of Christian missionaries by starting a school of their own where arrangements can be made for the teaching of the Muhammadan religion.

The Midnapur dam age suit.

16. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 8th September 1912 expresses disapprobation of the attacks made in certain Anglo-Indian papers on Mr. Justice Fletcher in connection with his judgment in the Midnapur damage suit, and also of the meetings held by Indians in Calcutta and other places in Bengal to protest against such action on the part of these papers. The editor remarks that such agitation can serve no useful purpose, and that Europeans have as little right to find fault with the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher as Indians have to object to Mr. Justice Woodroffe's judgment in the appeal.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th September 1912.

Differential treatment of Indian and Anglo-Indian papers.

17. Referring to the action taken against the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) for contempt of court in publishing the judgment in the Raj Narayan Singh case before its formal pronouncement by the Judges of the Calcutta High Court, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th September 1912 inquires why legal proceedings were not taken against the Pioneer for a similar offence in publishing Justice Woodroffe's judgment in the Midnapur damage suit. The editor remarks that the differential treatment accorded to Indian and Anglo-Indian papers by Government is calculated to have an unsettling effect on the people, and he expresses the hope that in future Government will exercise more discretion and forbearance in such matters.

LEADER, 11th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

18. Discussing the Government of India's despatch on the Hoti Mardan case, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 11th September 1912 remarks that some points have been left unexplained in the despatch, and attributes this to their admitting of no explanation. The editor inquires why Miss Swannel proceeded to Hoti when there were so many circumstances to rouse her suspicion. He asks Government to explain why the girls stayed at Rawalpindi for several days instead of proceeding at once to Bombay, and also why they were prepared to return to Hoti Mardan after the experience they had gone through.

He criticises the manner in which subscriptions were demanded for the Islamia College of Peshawar from the Khan Bahadur, and expresses the opinion that the Frontier officials showed unnecessary and excessive zeal in defending the girls who did not ask for and did not seem to stand in need of protection. He observes that the prosecution of the Khan was a hasty and ill-advised measure, and that very little consideration was shown for his age in not releasing him on bail.

He contends that executive officials have not the same opportunities of getting at the real truth of matters as the judiciary has, and that it is inadvisable that the Government of India should constitute itself an appellate court for the decisions of the Bombay High Court.

He remarks that such action on the part of Government is not calculated to strengthen the judiciary, nor to increase the people's respect for Courts and Judges.

He suggests that Government should not criticise judgments but should appoint abler Judges.

19. Referring to the inconvenience to which the residents of Naini Tal are put to owing to the existence of a colony of women of ill-fame in their midst, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 suggests that capitalists should be induced to build houses for these prostitutes outside the station. In this connection the editor states that most of the prostitutes of Naini Tal are recruited from the Naik community of Ramgarh, and that the evil could be remedied at its very source if a good middle school for girls were established at Ramgarh. He admits that there would be an annual expenditure of at least Rs. 3,000 on the school, and that Naik procurers would oppose this measure as it would destroy their means of livelihood, but he remarks that the cause of social purity demands that Government should take early steps in the matter. He says that the prostitutes of Naini Tal grow rich on the money they earn in their heinous profession and are not poor like their unfortunate sisters in the plains, and he urges Government to put down this social evil by reclaiming the Naiks of Ramgarh.

ADVOCATE, 8th September 1912.

(e)—Education.

20. The Agra Akhbar of the 3rd September 1912 (received on the 7th September), takes exception to the expulsion of a Muhammadan student named Amir Ahmad from the Agra Medical School, and expresses regret that the Principal of the Medical School gave no reasons as to why this student was expelled.

The editor is of opinion that the Principal's action is capable of no other interpretation than that he is actively hostile to Muhammadan students.

The Agra Medical School.

AGRA AKHBAR, 3rd September 1912.

21. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), says that owing to the purdah system Hindu and Muhammadan women cannot derive much benefit from the proposed Female Medical College at Delhi, and that the college can therefore be of use only to Europeans and Eurasians.

The editor urges that some other suitable method of extending medical comforts to purdah women should be devised.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 4th September 1912.

22. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th September 1912 expresses gratification at the fact that the school-leaving certificate examination has been a success and has raised the standard of education.

The editor refers to the disadvantages of the school-leaving examination in not having a third division and in causing a heavy strain upon the energies of teachers, and says that a student is put to great difficulty when he is confronted with the new school-leaving system in the nineth class and is asked to unlearn all that he has learnt in the course of ten years. He suggests that systematic efforts should be made to introduce reforms, and he urges that the language course should be reduced in all the classes, and that the teachers should be given more time for dictation, composition and conversation.

SANADHYOPKARAK, August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

23. The Sanadhyopkarak (Agra) for August 1912 (received on the 7th September), expresses the hope that Government will reconsider its decision in regard to the Hindu University, as a university that has not the power of affiliation will be of no advantage to the community.

If Government is not prepared to reconsider its decision in the matter the editor considers that the money that has been collected should be devoted to opening high schools throughout the country and to establishing boarding houses and hostels in connection with the existing Hindu schools.

AL BASHIR, 3rd September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

24. Nawab Haji Ismail Khan contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 3rd September 1912 (received on the 7th September), in which he expresses approval of the action of the members of the Muslim University constitution committee in regard to the decision of Government on the university question.

He does not agree however with the opinion of the majority of the members of the committee regarding the affiliation of all schools and colleges to the university, as he considers that the privileges of affiliation should only be extended to the Islamia School, Etawah.

He suggests that the Muslim University should be empowered to examine students desirous of attending the university, and that it should be immaterial whether such students have studied privately or have attended a government or recognized school.

He expresses regret at the decision of the Secretary of State that the Viceroy should not be Chancellor of the university, and suggests that, failing the Viceroy, the Lieutenant Governor of the province should be asked to accept the office of Chancellor.

AL BASHIR, 3rd September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

25. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 3rd September 1912 (received on the 7th September), says that experience has shown that the educational system inaugurated by Government in India was not based on right lines, and he is therefore unable to accept the decision of Government regarding the proposed Muslim University.

He says that if the Muhammadans establish a university at Aligarh, vest the powers of Chancellor in the Governor General in Council, give the governing power to educational experts fresh from England and make the trustees of the university fund mere puppets in the hands of Government, the university will be no better than the Dacca University, and the educational progress of the Muhammadans will be thrown back fifty years.

He states that his co-religionists do not require a university such as Government is prepared to give them, and he expresses regret that the Muhammadan leaders should have consulted the Member for Education and acted according to his directions in framing the constitution of the Muslim University.

He urges his co-religionists to be determined in their demand for a charter of their own making and to insist on the affiliation of Islamic schools only to the university.

In conclusion he appeals to the community to oppose the change of designation of the university and also the proposal to vest the power of the Chancellor in the Governor General in Council.

AL BASHIR, 3rd September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

26. Nawab Haji Ismail Khan contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 3rd September 1912 (received on the 7th September), in which he expresses his disapproval of the decision of Government regarding the designation of the proposed Muslim University.

He admits, however, that Government in all probability came to this decision as they were unwilling to still further widen the gulf between the Hindu and Muhammadan communities by sanctioning universities of pronounced sectarian designations. He therefore considers that the decision of Government has something to recommend it, and he appeals to his co-religionists not to quarrel with Government as regards the title of the university.

MASHRIQ, 3rd September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

27. A correspondent who signs himself "MUHAMMAD ISHAQ-UL HUSAIN PARVI" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 3rd September 1912 (received on the 7th September), in which he refers to the decision of the Secretary of State for India regarding the question of affiliation, and blames the organizers of the Muslim University scheme for not having published the university draft constitution to ascertain public opinion regarding it before submitting it to Government.

He attaches all the responsibility to the Muhammadan leaders for the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the university, and urges that the money that has been collected should not be wasted in establishing a university that will be but a university in name. He suggests that the university fund should be utilized in awarding scholarships for Indian students in foreign countries and in opening primary schools and in establishing industrial and commercial schools throughout the country.

Another correspondent who signs himself "ABU YAHYA" urges that Muhammadans and Hindus should never accept the charter outlined by Government, and he suggests that both communities should utilize the funds that have been collected in establishing technical colleges.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 4th September 1912

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

28. The Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), in which he advises Muhammadans not to give way to disappointment because of the decision of Government in regard to the university question.

He says that the power of affiliation is not essential at present for the Muslim University as first class residential colleges suitable for affiliation cannot be established in the different provinces for some considerable time.

He expresses the opinion that the Muhammadan community should agitate for the power of affiliation for their university but should not refuse to accept a charter without the power of affiliation.

As regards the change in the designation of the university proposed by Government, he expresses surprise that Government should show such aversion to the word "Muslim" which is so dear to Muhammadans, but he suggests that, as there is not much in a name, Muhammadans should accept the decision of Government in this matter.

With regard to the powers to be vested in the Governor General in Council and Sir Harcourt Butler's suggestion for the recasting of the draft regulations in view of the Secretary of State's decision, he insists that the administration of the proposed university should remain in the hands of representatives of the Muslim community.

He suggests that in case the charter deprives Muslims of the power of controlling the affairs of the university, the idea of a university should be abandoned for the present, and that the funds that have been collected should be utilized in developing and enlarging the Aligarh College so as to make it fit to be a university in course of time. In conclusion he expresses the hope that within a few years' time Government will be more reasonable and will accede to the just demands of the Muhammadan community.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

29. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th September 1912 (received on the 9th September), remarks that the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the proposed Muslim University has proved conclusively that the Muslim representatives in the Imperial Council are mere figure-heads, and have betrayed the interests of the Muhammadan community. The editor says that Government is under a misapprehension if it thinks that Muhammadans are so insincere as to agree to a policy that will lead to their own undoing. He observes that Muhammadans have now begun to comprehend their own interests, and says that they will try to attain their ends by constitutional means even though such means are looked upon with disfavour by Government. He reminds his readers that the Reform Bill was not passed until after the Crystal Palace at Hyde Park was demolished, but at the same time he does not counsel extreme measures. He urges his subscribers to send in their views as to whether the charter for the Muslim University outlined by Government should be accepted or not.

ZUL QARNAIN, 7th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

30. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 7th September 1912 expresses regret that the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler should have revealed his ignorance about the early history of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College by mentioning in his letter to the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad that Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan only intended to establish a local university at Aligarh. The editor asserts that the late Sir Saiyid's intention was to spread a network of Muhammadan schools and colleges all over the country linked to the parent institution at Aligarh which was ultimately to be converted into a Muslim University.

He expresses regret at the decision of the Secretary of State for India that the powers of Chancellor should be exercised by the Governor General in Council, and blames the organizers of the university scheme for drafting the university constitution in camera and not consulting the community before submitting it to Government. He says that if the Muhammadan leaders had taken the public into their confidence the Secretary of State's final decision would not have been such a shock to the community.

He urges his co-religionists to respectfully protest against the change in the designation of the Muslim University, and he observes that if the Muhammadans agree to the vesting of the powers of Chancellor in the Governor General in Council their educational progress will be put back fifty years.

He expresses his surprise that some of his co-religionists should be so purturbed at the decision of Government as to demand the withdrawal of their money from the university fund, and he assures them that the present decision cannot be final. He urges them to continue their efforts to secure their demands in connection with the University.

ADVOCATE, 8th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

31. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 states that the Comrade (Calcutta) has received thirty-seven replies in response to its appeal to its subscribers (vide Selections No. 36, paragraph 32) to vote whether the charter outlined by Government should be accepted or not. The editor says that thirty-five of these votes were against the acceptance of the charter and that this shows the trend of Muhammadan public opinion in the matter.

AWAZA-I-KHALK, 1st September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

32. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st September 1912 (received on the 7th September), expresses surprise at the decision of the Secretary of State for India in regard to the university question.

The editor is unable to understand why Government decided that the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities should be termed the Universities of Benares and Aligarh respectively, and he urges his countrymen not to accept the decision of Government in the matter without mature deliberation.

He suggests that the proposed universities should be named the National University of Benares and the National University of Aligarh.

PREM, 5th September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

33. The Prem (Brindaban) of the 5th September 1912 (received on the 11th September), suggests that the Hindu and Muslim Universities should be established without a government charter. The editor says that technical education should be the chief concern of these universities, as the supply of graduates from the existing State universities is more than sufficient for the needs of Government. He urges, however, that some general education should also be given in the proposed universities so that graduates may be enabled to get employment in native states.

LEADER, 8th September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

34. A correspondent who signs himself "A SOBER NATIONALIST FROM JAUNPUR" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th September 1912, in which he contends that the proposed universities cannot be called "Hindu" and "Muslim" when they do not possess the power of affiliation. He further argues that the words "Hindu" and "Muslim" would perpetuate racial jealousies and differences, and he expresses his gratification that Government has not allowed these terms to be applied to the proposed universities and has thus obviated the possibility of further strife between the two communities on the question of education.

He says that at any rate in the beginning it is inexpedient and impracticable to affiliate outside colleges to the proposed universities, and he remarks that Indians should be grateful to Government for adopting the wisest course possible.

35. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 expresses its satisfaction at the solicitude of Government to provide for the religious instruction of juvenile prisoners. OUDH AKHBAR, 8th September 1912.

Religious instruction in jails.

The editor says that before any arrangements for the religious instruction of juvenile prisoners are made they should be taught to cultivate the habit of cleanliness which is the first requisite of a healthy life.

He expresses regret at the absence of moral training in jails, and suggests that arrangements should be made to allow prisoners to worship according to their beliefs.

36. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th September 1912 is pleased to note that the Indian and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, Limited, of Bombay has made fair progress during the year. ADVOCATE, 8th September 1912

The Indian and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company, Limited, of Bombay.

He regrets that out of the ninety-three shipping companies, whose ships call at Indian ports, this is the only company that is owned and managed by Indians. He considers that if there were more shipping lines owned by Indians, the bulk of the freight on Indian merchandise would be retained in the country. In conclusion he urges his countrymen to give their support to the Indian and Peninsular Steam Navigation Company by investing their money in it and by travelling by its ships when they go abroad.

37. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 10th September 1912 expresses its admiration for Sir John Hewett's administrative capacity and experience, as evidenced by the long and lucid resolution issued on the subject of afforestation in the United Provinces. The editor remarks: "it is a tribute to Sir John Hewett's zeal and praiseworthy devotion to duty that in the closing days of his régime he has bestowed so much attention upon a difficult and apparently forbidding subject," and he suggests that, in view of the various benefits of afforestation mentioned in the resolution, it should be encouraged as far as possible. LEADER, 10th September 1912.

Afforestation in the United Provinces.

Alluding to political matters he says: "If Sir John Hewett had brought the same enlightened and far-sighted mind to bear on the problems of politics too, he would have earned the gratitude of Indian reformers instead of being regarded by them with a certain indifference at the best and suspicion on occasion."

He is glad to note that it is now recognized that forestry is of value not only as a commercial undertaking but also as "the handmaid of agriculture," and he suggests that a systematic survey should be made of all areas available for afforestation, and that experiments should be made on various classes of waste land before a definite scheme of afforestation is embarked upon.

39. The Satya Prakash (Konch, Jalaun) for August 1912 (received on the 11th September), contains an article in which the writer describes how Christ was crucified, and contends that He could not have been the son of God, as He was put to such death and God did nothing to save Him. He asks the Christian missionaries how it was that Christ, who is represented in the Bible as curing the blind, did not burn the cross on which He was crucified, and he remarks that from this it is evident that the Bible is not a revealed book.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) for September 1912 (received on the 18th September), contains an article entitled "The decline of British supremacy in the Mediterranean and the proposed permanent occupation of Egypt," in which the editor says that the possession of India renders it imperative that the British should control the Suez Canal and permanently occupy Egypt. URDU-I-MUALLA, September 1912.

The permanent occupation of Egypt.

He deprecates the withdrawal of British battleships from the Mediterranean in view of the increased naval activity of Germany, Austria and Italy, and he considers that the Italian occupation of the Ægean Islands constitutes a fresh menace to British supremacy.

He states that political considerations have now led the British to decide on the establishment of a naval station at Alexandria and on the permanent occupation of Egypt, and he sympathizes with Egyptian nationalists in their agitation against the continuation of British supremacy in Egypt.

He expresses sorrowful contempt for the journalists who fondly imagine that the British only hold Egypt till the Egyptians are capable of governing themselves, and he accuses Kamil Pasha of pro-British tendencies.

He condemns British foreign policy with regard to Persia, Morocco and Turkey, and insinuates that the alleged nationalists' conspiracy in Egypt was engineered by the Egyptian police in order to give Lord Kitchener an opportunity for repressing the nationalist movement.

2. Referring to the proposal to establish a British hospital at Jeddah, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), inquires whether the Turkish Government has been informed of the project. The editor is doubtful as to whether the religion of Islam would permit of a hospital on holy soil, and he also thinks that the Bedouin tribes would resent building operations at Jeddah, and that certain Muhammadans would regard the advent of British architects as the first step towards the occupation of the country. He therefore urges the British Government to abandon the idea of building a hospital at Jeddah, and suggests that if a hospital is required there, it should be built by the Turkish Government. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th September 1912.

The proposed British hospital at Jeddah.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 19th September 1912 does not agree with the Times (London) as regards the partition of Persia between Russia and England. The editor expresses the hope that a liberal ministry will not listen to the suggestions made by the Times and will not tarnish the fair fame of England as the champion of the weak and oppressed by depriving the Persians of their liberty. ADVOCATE, 19th September 1912.

The situation in Persia.

(b)—Home.

4. Referring to the opinion of the Times (London) that Muhammadan interests should not control the foreign policy of England, the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), says that it would be impolitic for the British Government to let its Muhammadan subjects think that England is prepared to accept the downfall of the independent Muhammadan states. The editor invites attention to the dangers that may result from such an idea gaining ground among Muhammadans, and urges Government to frame its foreign policy with due regard for the feelings of Indian Muhammadans. MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th September 1912.

British foreign policy and Indian Muhammadans.

5. A correspondent of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) writing in the issue of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), referring to the articles that recently appeared in the Times (London) regarding the spread of Pan-Islamism in the East, remarks that Muhammadans cannot dictate the foreign policy of England, but that British statesmen should have due regard for the feelings of Muhammadans in determining their relations with foreign Powers. MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th September 1912.

British foreign policy and Indian Muhammadans.

He states that the Muhammadans of India are deeply pained at the attitude of England towards the Italian-Turkish war, and especially at the refusal of the Egyptian Government to allow Turkish troops to pass through Egypt, but he asserts that their feelings of pain and sorrow have not made Muhammadans disloyal. He notes that Muhammadans viewed the annulment of the partition of Bengal with pained surprise, and that they now look on the attitude of Government towards their university scheme with consternation. He points out that, in spite of sucessive shocks, the Muhammadans have had no recourse to drastic measures, and he asks Government to treat them indulgently to show that the community is not viewed with official disfavour.

With regard to the university question he says that the Muhammadans cannot regard the upsetting of plans that have been in the making for fifty years with equanimity, and that they will therefore persist in their demands till Government reconsiders its decision.

In conclusion he deprecates spending the money that has been collected other than on the university, but suggests that a few students should be sent to foreign countries to qualify themselves for professorships in the Muslim University.

AL MUSHIR, 11th September 1912.

Security from the Muslim Press, Lucknow.

6. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), protests against security being taken from the Muslim Press, Lucknow. The editor considers that once the Deputy Commissioner accepted the declaration filed by the manager of the press, only the Local Government was competent to demand security for the tone of the paper.

He deplores the rigour with which the provisions of the Press Act are being enforced, and inquires if it was the intention of the Government of India in framing the Act that magistrates should have complete control over the liberty of the press.

LEADER, 12th September 1912.

The Viceroy's Council.

7. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 12th September 1912 expresses disappointment at the statement made in the Viceroy's Council that Government would not recommend any increase in the number of members of the Public Service Commission.

The editor, however, hopes that at least one non-official Indian from each province will be among the co-opted members.

Discussing some of the topics of the day, he expresses the opinion that Mr. Clarke has no claim to compensation, and he remarks that Government has been remiss in not giving effect to the recommendations of the Decentralization Committee, especially as regards the separation of the executive and judicial.

Referring to the Legislative Council, he urges the building of a council chamber as soon as possible, and with regard to the proposed Anglo-Indian regiment he insists that Anglo-Indians should not receive preferential treatment in the matter of military employ.

MASHRIQ, 10th September 1912.

The administration of Sir John Hewett.

8. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 10th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), reviews the administration of Sir John Hewett, and expresses great admiration for his administrative capacity.

The editor says that sanitary improvements, the inauguration of a drainage system in important towns, the laying out of parks, the establishment of industrial and technical schools in the province, the Senate Hall of the Allahabad University, the University Law College, the Lucknow Medical College, the Allahabad Exhibition and the improvements made in the manufacture of sugar testify to the high administrative qualities of Sir John Hewett.

He expresses approval of Sir John Hewett's attitude towards the Agra Tenancy Act, which he considers was calculated to wound the religious susceptibilities of the Muhammadans, and he expresses satisfaction at the amendments made in the Court of Wards Act and at the improvements made in the Educational, Police, Sanitary and Public Works departments.

He notes with regret, however, that during Sir John Hewett's administration education became more costly and the percentage of failures in the University examinations considerably increased.

He also expresses pained surprise at Sir John's opposition to an Executive Council in the United Provinces.

He expresses appreciation of the efforts made by Sir John Hewett to bring about a rapprochement between Hindus and Muhammadans, and regrets that his efforts were not crowned with success.

He eulogizes Sir John for his generous treatment of the Press, and remarks that he may rest assured that the people appreciate his efforts to improve the material condition of the provinces.

LEADER, 18th September 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

9. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th September 1912 publishes an article by Babu Govinda Das in which he makes various suggestions for the guidance of those who intend to give evidence before the Public Service Commission.

He expresses the opinion that the best witnesses will be the retired members of the subordinate services, and he inquires if they have the courage to come forward and throw full light on the conditions of their different services and give details of the disabilities from which members of these services suffer.

The following are the chief suggestions he makes :—

That no colonial should ever be employed in any post in British India as long as equal treatment is not accorded to Indians in the colonies.

That all distinctions based on race or religion should be abolished.

That preferential treatment should not be accorded to any community as a matter of right or favour on the plea of its being less advanced educationally.

That merit and capacity alone should form the criterion for appointment to the Public Service.

That the different services should be thrown open to competition.

That the restraint under which Indians suffer as regards the Public Service should be removed.

That with the exception of the Indian Civil Service, for which simultaneous examinations should be held both in England and India, every other service should be recruited in India alone.

That in all departments in which technical knowledge is essential every employé should be required to put in a special course of three years' training in some European or American centre before he becomes eligible for promotion.

That the system of D.Os. should be totally done away with, and that no officer should ever be punished by supersession or degradation on the mere strength of secret reports against him.

That the cadre of the higher grades should bear a more reasonable proportion to that of the lower grades than it does at present.

That Europeans and Indians should receive equal treatment in the matter of leave, pension and acting and travelling allowances.

That the judicial and executive functions should be separated.

With regard to the special departments he makes the following suggestions :—

1. That the statutory limitation restricting the choice of executive councillors of the Governor General overwhelmingly to the Indian Civil Service, be abrogated.

2. That the duties of the district officer should be strictly administrative and executive. His functions should be the collection of revenue and the control and supervision of the police. The post of district superintendent of police should be abolished and his duties should be vested in the district officer. The district officer to be styled commissioner. He should have two deputy commissioners under him, one to be in special charge of revenue and the other in special charge of police. He should also, as far as possible, be relieved of his duties in connection with local boards, which should be made more autonomous.

3. That all judicial officers should be subordinate to the High Court, and their appointment, leave, promotion, dismissal, &c., should rest with the High Court.

4. That a separate expert jail service should be organized and only officers specially trained in criminology and acquainted with modern systems of jail discipline and treatment should be appointed to it.

5. That a separate expert treasury service should be organized from the treasury officer right up to the Accountant General and Comptroller General.

6. That a separate Women's Medical Service, exactly on the lines of an amalgamated Men's Medical Service, should be organized.

7. That officers of the Indian Medical Service and assistant surgeons should be graded together.

8. That the grade promotion examinations that assistant surgeons have to pass should be abolished as officers of the Indian Medical Service are not burdened will similar examinations and there is no reason to presume that assistant surgeons forget their medical knowledge.

9. That the status and pay of sub-assistant surgeons should be raised and that the diploma of L.M.S. should be conferred on them.

10. That the pay and status of the Public Works Department overseers should be raised and they should be given the diploma of L.C.E.

11. That the highest grade of munsifs should draw Rs. 500 and of subordinate judges Rs. 1,000. Half the cadre of the subordinate judges should be recruited from the bar, ten years' practice at the bar being prescribed as necessary for such appointments. Munsifs should only be appointed by competitive examination. District judges should not get more than Rs. 1,500 per month. Half the cadre of district judges should be filled by promotions of subordinate judges, and the other half from the bar.

There should be constituted divisional benches of two Judges, one of whom should be recruited directly from the bar and the other by promotion from among the district judges, with monthly salaries of Rs. 2,500, to hear appeals from the subordinate courts of a prescribed valuation and nature. High Court Judges to be recruited as follows: one-third by promotion and two-thirds by direct appointment.

12. That no revenue officers, such as tahsildars, mamlatdars, deputy collectors, &c., should have judicial powers.

13. That all districts and provinces that have been under British occupation for not less than twenty-five years be made regulation ones, and the anomaly of appointing military officers to civil charges, and worse still as judges, be totally done away with.

14. That the military element in the political department should be wholly eliminated, a separate political service recruited from the Indian Civil Service and in which the Indian element would be fairly represented, being created.

15. That a large number of attachéships be thrown open to the scions of ruling houses.

16. That most of the judicial work that Political Agents have to do and which even the heads of provinces have to do both in civil and criminal cases should go before the Indian judicial tribunals.

17. That Boards of Revenue and divisional commissionerships be abolished.

18. That the Governor General should not be in charge of any special department, but should be free to supervise every department.

19. That a knowledge of more than one vernacular should be insisted on from all government servants, Roman characters being introduced to facilitate the study of Indian languages.

20. That the district officer, relieved of his judicial duties and with the designation of commissioner, should become the head of the district executive council which should be composed of (1) himself as the president and chief executive officer, (2) the inspector of schools, (3) the district engineer, (4) the district civil surgeon or the district sanitary officer and (5) the municipal chairman, with a district council composed of eleven non-official and seven official members.

21. That all the High Court appointments, leave, pensions, travelling allowances, &c., should be brought under the Government of India in the Law Department.

22. That the Ecclesiastical Department should be abolished.

23. That on all guaranteed railways a certain number of the higher posts in every department be reserved for bona fide Indians.

24. That the governors of provinces which have executive councils should be selected from prominent English politicians.

25. That the second volume of the Civil Account Code, which is at present secret, should be published. Sumptuary allowances should be curtailed, and their amount should be expressly shown both in the provincial as well as in the Government of India budgets.

HITAISHI, 4th September 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

10. Discussing the proposals of the London Muslim League for a Hindu-Muhammadan rapprochement, the Hitaishi (Pilibhit) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), considers that the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans cannot be bridged unless the latter give up cow-killing and both communities adopt a more conciliatory attitude towards each other.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

11. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 16th September 1912 publishes two contributed articles on "The relations between Hindus and Muhammadans." HINDUSTANI, 16th September 1912.

In the first article the writer deplores the present strained relations between the two communities, and suggests that the Muhammadans should give up cow-killing and that the Hindus should not view Muhammadan concessions on the part of Government with suspicion.

In the second article the writer discusses the proposals made by the London Muslim League in regard to a Hindu-Muslim rapprochement, and says that a reunion is impossible if it means the discouragement of the study of Hindi.

He urges mutual toleration of religious festivals and more sympathetic relations, and he condemns controversial articles on religious subjects.

The Hoti Mardan case.

12. Referring to the Government of India's despatch to the Secretary of State on the Hoti Mardan case the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), says that, notwithstanding its elaborate pleading in behalf of the officials concerned in the case, Government has not succeeded in proving that these officials were blameless. The editor reproduces the comments of the Empire, the Indian Daily News and the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) on the despatch, and remarks that the action taken by Government is an unjustifiable interference with the administration of justice. ABHYUDAYA, 12th September 1912.

He expresses the hope that the Congress Committee will take up this question and will hold meetings at all important centres to protest against the extraordinary procedure of the Government of India in order to impress upon Government the necessity for maintaining the independence of law courts.

The Hoti Mardan case.

13. Discussing the Government of India's despatch on the Hoti Mardan case the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 12th September 1912 observes that Mr. Justice Davar's judgment clearly proves that the Frontier officials acted irregularly and arbitrarily. The editor expresses regret that Government should have criticised the findings of a high judicial authority in order to defend its executive officers. He contends that the action of the Frontier officials cannot be justified in any way, and observes that no reasonable man can support the action of Government in setting itself up as a court of appeal and traversing the conclusions arrived at by a distinguished High Court Judge. ADVOCATE, 12th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

14. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th September 1912 has the following :— LEADER, 18th September 1912.

"The Government resolution on the Hoti Mardan case with all its enclosures has been republished as a blue book. We think the Government may have spared themselves the trouble. The matter need not have been accorded such dignity, nor need the tax payers' money have been wasted on the printing and the paper."

cholera in the town. The editor asks Government to assist the municipality in repairing the roads in and around the town.

LEADER, 17th September 1912.

The Hardwar Municipality.

16. Discussing the annual administration report of the Hardwar Municipality the Leader (Allahabad) of the 17th September 1912 objects to the increased expenditure on collection charges and to the decrease in the cost of conservancy. The editor deplores the high mortality of the town and attributes it to the neglect of conservancy.

He condemns the state of the roads in the municipality and considers that too much money was spent in repairing buildings.

He also condemns the lighting arrangements of the town, and complains that sufficient money was not spent on education. Referring to the fair funds he expresses the opinion that the cost of building roads and bridges in connection with melas should not be debited to them, and in conclusion he observes that the report might have been more carefully prepared.

ABHYUDAYA, 12th September 1912.

District boards.

17. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), says that district boards, as at present constituted, do not fulfil the object of local self-government, and that their members do not take sufficient interest in public affairs. The editor observes that this is due to the fact that the members know that they have no real powers.

To remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs he suggests an increase in the number of elected members, the appointment of non-official chairmen, the grant of more extended powers to boards and their more liberal treatment financially by Government.

(e)—Education.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th September 1912.

The Agra Medical School and Muhammadans.

18. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), expresses regret at the expulsion of Mr. Amir Ahmad Ansari from the Agra Medical School. The editor asserts that this student was unjustly treated, and he urges his co-religionists to take the matter up. He adds that if they persist in their present listless attitude, they will soon find all their rights trampled under foot.

ADVOCATE, 15th September 1912.

The essential features of a university education.

19. Discussing university education in general, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 15th September 1912 reproduces portions of an article on the subject contributed by W. M. Childs of University College, Reading, to a recent issue of the Hibbert Journal (London), and expresses agreement with his view that the quest of knowledge should not in any way be restricted by the barriers that divide mankind. Mr. Childs says that a university should always be a free institution and should never consent to become "the supple tool of administration." He observes that a spirit of endeavour, which is of the utmost importance to a university, can never be produced by external dictation, and he expresses the opinion that a university should possess great teachers and should create conditions which tend to produce men and women of the proper type trained and disciplined in character and intelligence.

He invites attention to the importance of the personal influence of teachers upon pupils, and says that a University should be in full sympathy with the aspirations and needs of the age and should be capable of forming and expressing its own individuality.

The editor expresses regret at the manner in which the Government of India are increasing their control over Indian universities and educational institutions, and says that official control hinders universities from discharging their proper and legitimate functions.

LEADER, 19th September 1912.

Mr. Montagu on Indian education.

20. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 remarks that Mr. Montagu has exaggerated the obstacles in the way of the spread of education in India. With regard to Mr. Montagu's objection to the cost of providing educational facilities in villages, the editor says that the cost can be reduced by spending less on school buildings. He asserts that the "distrust of parents" referred to by Mr. Montagu is exaggerated; and says that any such distrust as there is can be overcome by rendering the attendance of children at schools compulsory.

As regards the caste difficulty he considers that it can be very easily remedied by the establishment of separate schools for the humble classes.

Discussing the paucity of teachers he considers that a more vigorous effort should be made in the training of teachers, and that until a sufficient number is available untrained men should be entertained as teachers.

He emphasizes the necessity for cheap school buildings and he is pleased to note that Mr. Montagu is not daunted by the difficulties of the Indian educational problem. He expresses regret however that Mr. Montagu is opposed to compulsory education, and he urges that the attendance of children at schools should not be left to their parents or guardians.

21. A correspondent who signs himself "S. L. RISHI" contributes an article to the combined issue of the Edward (Cawnpore) for June, July and August 1912 (received on the 16th September), in which he refers to the decision of the Secretary of State in regard to the proposed Hindu University, and says that a university on the lines indicated by Government will be of no use to the Hindu community. He suggests that a women's university should be established instead, and he remarks that a charter would not be required for such a university as women do not enter government service.

EDWARD, June, July and August 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), says that the decision of Government in regard to the question of affiliation should not discourage Hindus, and that they should not relax their efforts to collect funds for the University.

ABHYUDAYA, 12th September 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

The editor urges Hindus to persist in their demand for a charter of their own making, and he suggests that in any case a Hindu University should be established at Benares.

23. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID AHMAD FROM AGRA" contributes an article to the Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of the 8th September 1912 (received on the 18th September), in which he condemns the agitation against the university charter outlined by Government. He says that the present attitude of the Muhammadans savours of ingratitude when Government has done so much to develop the Aligarh College, and he advises his co-religionists to cheerfully accept the decision of Government in the matter of the Muslim University, and he assures them that Government has the best interests of their community at heart.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 8th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

24. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 8th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), expresses regret at the decision of the Secretary of State for India in regard to the university question. The editor urges his co-religionists not to be too violent in opposing the decision of Government but to respectfully ask Government to reconsider the matter, and, if necessary, to send a deputation to England to bring the Muslim University question prominently before the British public.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 8th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

25. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 8th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), expresses regret that the misguided acts of a few educated Indians should have led the Secretary of State to stop the growth of higher education in India by limiting the scope of the Muslim University.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 8th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

The editor points out that higher education has not created seditious ideas amongst Indians, but that the present defective system of education is responsible for any dissatisfaction and unrest that prevails.

26. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 10th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), remarks that there is some conflict of opinion among Muhammadans on the question of affiliation, and he expresses the opinion that if the Muslim University is granted the power of affiliation, the degrees of the university will depreciate in value as the standard of teaching in the affiliated colleges will not be equal to that of the university. He observes that the establishment of affiliated colleges in the different provinces would lessen the number of students at Aligarh and

AL BASHIR, 10th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

would thus hinder the unifying work that the Aligarh College is doing. He further points out that there are at present no Muslim colleges suitable for affiliation, and he therefore urges the establishment of high schools throughout the country which in course of time could be affiliated to the university.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

27. A correspondent who signs himself "AN EDUCATED MUSSALMAN" contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), in which he refers to the article contributed by the Hon'ble Sahebzada Aftab Ahmad Khan to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th September (vide Selections No. 37, paragraph 28), and says that Government will never grant the power of affiliation to the Muslim University if all Muhammadan leaders have the same views as Sahebzada Aftab Ahmad Khan.

He observes that Muhammadans outside the United Provinces can derive no benefit from a local university at Aligarh, and he ridicules the argument that there are at present no Muslim colleges fit to be affiliated to the university as he considers that if the charter of the university included the power of affiliation, Muhammadans would soon establish a first class college in each province. He insists that the name of the university should be "Muslim," and he says that Muhammadans do not want the Viceroy as Chancellor and that they are opposed to the powers of the Chancellor being vested in the Governor General in Council. He objects to a charter that bears the stamp of official control as an aspersion on the loyalty of Muhammadans, and he advises his co-religionists to keep the university scheme in abeyance till they can obtain a university that will be free from Government interference.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 11th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

28. Shaikh Muhammad Abdullah, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, Aligarh, contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 11th September 1912 (received on the 16th September), in which he reproves his co-religionists for their despondent attitude towards the decision of the Secretary of State in regard to their university scheme. He reminds them that no great object was ever attained without great struggles and personal sacrifice, and he urges them to persist in their demand for a charter of their own making.

HITAISHI, 4th September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

29. The Hitaishi (Pilibhit) of the 4th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), recommends that the decision of Government on the question of university affiliation should be accepted, but insists that the designation of the proposed universities should not be altered.

30. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 12th September 1912 (received on the 14th September), condemns the free trade policy of Government in regard to India as detrimental to her industries, and recommends that her manufactures should be protected in order to permit of her industrial progress.

LEADER, 18th September 1912.

The opium habit in India.

31. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th September 1912 expresses approval of the policy outlined in the recent resolution of the Government of India on the opium question. The editor considers that the Government of India is right in making a distinction between opium-smoking and the taking of opium for medicinal purposes. He says that the habit of opium-smoking is contagious when practised in public and is always followed by evil consequences. He is pleased to note that Government is not in favour of the sale of opium, and that the price of opium is to be enhanced to such a point that the consumption of opium will soon be regarded as a luxury.

LEADER, 19th September 1912.

The attachment of salaries of military officers.

32. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 has the following:—

"The decision of the courts that the salaries of military officers are not liable to attachment in execution of decrees against them is most unjust and is naturally viewed by bankers with grave concern.

Already the difficulties of realising moneys lent to military men are considerable. Petitions have been addressed to Government to make it clear by the necessary legislation, that the salaries of military officers and men may be attached, in fact that in this matter no distinction would be made between them and other classes of the population. The prayer is an eminently reasonable one."

33. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 19th September 1912 is pleased to note that the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab is prepared to consider sympathetically "any proposals for the reclamation of convicts put forward by any association of the requisite standing, which is in a position to establish a suitable settlement." The editor considers that criminals can be reformed only by sympathetic treatment, and he expresses the hope that the example set by Punjab will be followed in other provinces.

Reclamation of convicts.

V.—Legislation.

34. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th September 1912 expresses gratification at the withdrawal of the Delegation Bill. The editor considers that it would not be safe to give increased powers to Local Governments when the elected members of the Provincial Legislative Councils have practically no powers, and he expresses the opinion that if the Government of India really wants to grant autonomy to the different provinces, it should first give increased powers to the non-official members of council.

35. He recalls the sacrifices made by ancient Hindus for the protection of cows, and urges present-day Hindus to emulate their example.

37. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th September 1912 invites the attention of the Collector of Allahabad to the abuses practised by subordinate officials on the occasion of the Magh mela at Allahabad. The editor complains that the conservancy darogah and jamadar, who are both Muhammadans, do not pay any regard to the comforts of Hindu pilgrims. He states that the ghatias are not allowed to put up their stands on the bandh and that the malis, barbers and ekka drivers have to bribe the police to avoid trouble.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th September 1912 denounces Russian oppression in Northern Persia, and expresses regret that the British Liberal ministry is partially responsible for the downfall of Persia. LEADER, 24th September 1912.

The situation in Persia.

The editor deplores the inability of Asiatic peoples to preserve their countries from foreign oppression, and he considers that the advent of Russian troops in Persia indicates further European oppression in Asia.

In conclusion he expresses the hope that British ministers will be more considerate of the interests of Asiatic countries during the next session of Parliament.

(b)—Home.

2. A correspondent who signs himself "Mirza Muhammad Ismail Beg from Rangoon" contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), in which he says that the contact of the West with the East has had an evil effect on the character of oriental nations. He observes that since the advent of Europeans to Asia litigation, immorality, dishonesty and untruthfulness have increased, and he notes that while in the East people found guilty of adultery were either killed or excommunicated, adultery is not regarded as a heinous crime in the West, and orientals have now relaxed their vigorous moral code and have begun to imitate the moral laxity of Europeans. He remarks that under British rule Indian politicians have become a sycophantic untrustworthy class, and with regard to material things he considers that European nations are carrying off the wealth of Asia. In conclusion he appeals to Asiatics to free themselves from European bondage and assert themselves once again in all their past glory. KAISER-I-HIND, 19th September 1912.

The West and the East.

3. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st September 1912 considers that it was unwise of Sir George Clarke to deliver a political speech on the occasion of the opening of an additional building at the Fergusson College, Poona. He ridicules Sir George Clarke's argument that colonial self-government means the severance of all British connections, and he asserts that no sane Indian politician desires separation from Great Britain. He expresses agreement with Sir George that real democracy exists nowhere in the world, but says that, with all the experience of the defects of democracy, mankind has neither lost faith in democracy nor turned away from it. LEADER, 21st September 1912.

Sir George Clarke on colonial self-government for India.

He takes exception to Sir George's argument that democratic self-government is unsuited to an aristocratic country like India, and states that the introduction of representative institutions in certain native states, the desire for the uplifting of the depressed classes and the increase of education show that the democratie spirit is spreading in India.

4. Discussing the article on India contributed by Sir Bampfylde Fuller to the September number of the Nineteenth Century (London) the Leader (Allahabad) of the 25th September 1912 agrees with Sir Bampfylde that a closer contact between British rulers and Indians in the Council Chambers has imbued the latter with an increasing sense of responsibility. The editor expresses surprise at the sympathetic tone of Sir Bampfylde's article and considers that his actions that were so condemned when he was Lieutenant Governor of East Bengal must have been due to the baneful influence of the traditions of the Indian Civil Service. LEADER, 25th September 1912.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller on India.

Referring to Sir Bampfylde's statement that Bengal suffered a great loss by the transfer of the Capital to Delhi, he says that the loss of Bengal has been the gain of the United Provinces and the Punjab.

He commends to the notice of Indian political leaders Sir Bampfylde's appeal for social reform in India, and with regard to Sir Bampfylde's complaint as to the unsuitability of Indians for executive work, he considers that if greater opportunities were given to Indians to acquire the necessary training, it would not be so difficult to find capable and energetic Indian administrative officers.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd September 1912.

Libellous attacks on Indians by European officials.

5. A correspondent who signs himself "LAHRI" writes as follows in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912:—

"Some twenty years ago a white (European) official declared that Indians were great liars. Only a few years back Lord Curzon made a similar statement about Hindus in his convocation speech. Now under the régime of Lord Hardinge it has been stated, with a view to prove the Punjab officials to be blameless in the Hoti Mardan case, that wealthy persons, when enlarged on bail, bribe witnesses to win them over to their side. In plain words this means that wealthy Indians are experts in bribery. While Lord Curzon made only a verbal statement, Lord Hardinge has put his opinion in black and white in an official document and has caused it to be published over his signature. These are all good illustrations of the proverb 'The tyrant smites his subjects down, nor lets his victims moan or groan.'"

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

Sir Henry Prinsep and lawyers in India.

6. Referring to the article contributed by Sir Henry Prinsep to the Nineteenth Century and After, in which he said that India was gradually drifting into a vakil raj, and that measures should be taken to counteract the influence of lawyers, the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), says that in every country lawyers have become prominent politicians as they are the only people who enjoy complete freedom of speech and action. The editor remarks that lawyers are the only persons in India who have any liberty at all, and he inquires if Sir Henry Prinsep's object in warning Government against lawyers is that they also should be excluded from public life.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

Signs of awakening among Muhammadans.

7. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), considers that the Italian-Turkish war has caused a widespread awakening among the Muhammadans of the world who are now uniting into one confraternity to realize the ideal of Pan-Islamism. The editor says that the Muhammadans are so much perturbed at the political outlook that they are desirous of cultivating friendly relations with the Hindus, but he considers that their efforts in this direction will only show them up in their true light to Government.

OUDH AKHBAR, 19th September 1912.

The grievances of Muhammadans.

8. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), discusses the grievances of Muhammadans, and says that though Government cannot be held responsible for Italian and Russian aggression in Tripoli and Persia, Muhammadans deserved better treatment at the hands of British statesmen than has been accorded them in regard to their educational scheme. The editor says that it is impolitic to cause discontent amongst the Muhammadans, and he observes that there is no reason why their just grievances should not now be redressed.

HINDUSTANI, 23rd September 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

9. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 23rd September 1912 expresses approval of the efforts made by the Right Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali to promote better feelings between Hindus and Muhammadans, and says that the prosperity of India depends upon the co-operation of the two communities in all matters affecting the country.

MASHRIQ, 17th September 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

10. A correspondent contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 17th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), in which he says that the Public Service Commission will do no good to the country if it confines its attention to Anglo-Indians and rich and prominent Indians. He urges that the views of all classes of the people should be ascertained, and that the Commission should carefully consider the proportion of Europeans to Anglo-Indians in the public services.

LEADER, 26th September 1912.

Employment of Indians in the higher branches of the public service.

11. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 considers that the restricted employment of Indians in the higher branches of the public service not only causes economic loss to the country but also hinders the development of the character of Indians by denying them the opportunities of exercising their talents.

The editor admits that it would be unwise to exclude Europeans from the public service, but he urges that equal opportunities should be accorded to Indians and Europeans.

He insists that competent Indians should not be kept out of positions for which they are suited simply because they are not Europeans.

He suggests that simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service should be held in England and India.

He refers to the invidious distinctions made between Europeans and Indians in the rules governing recruitment, pay and promotion, leave and pension, and he urges Indian witnesses appearing before the Public Service Commission to be fully prepared to present the Indian aspect of the case in all its bearings.

He invites the attention of Indian witnesses to the article contributed by Babu Govinda Das to the Leader of the 18th September (Selections No. 38, paragraph 9).

12. In discussing the famine of 1907 the editor of the Educational Magazine (Ghazipur) in the issue for August 1912 (received on the 21st September), remarks that Sir John Hewett's administration in that year was unique for the sympathy shown by Government for the sufferings of the people.

The administration of Sir John Hewett.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, August 1912.

The editor says that sanitary improvements in villages and important towns, the Lucknow Medical College, the Allahabad Exhibition, the management of the Delhi Darbar and the improvements made in the manufacture of sugar testify to the high administrative qualities of Sir John Hewett.

He remarks that at a time when the whole country was under the shadow of suspicion and distrust, the reins of the administration in these provinces were in the hands of a peace-loving and sober-minded ruler, to whose remarkable statesmanship may be attributed the fact that the tranquillity of the province was not disturbed. Referring to the Octroi Commission appointed by Sir John Hewett, he considers that octroi is a desirable tax though defective as at present levied.

He approves of the advice given by Sir John Hewett to the landowners of these provinces as to the education of their children, and urges them to devote more attention to agriculture and to the well-being of their tenants.

13. A correspondent who signs himself "LAHRI" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), in which he briefly reviews the administration of Sir John Hewett.

The administration of Sir John Hewett.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th September 1912.

He says that the inhabitants of these provinces are not sorry at the departure of Sir John Hewett, as he was an autocrat and had no sympathy with Indian aspirations. He observes that Sir John was an able administrator and could have done much good to the provinces but he adopted an altogether mistaken policy.

He admits, however, that the late Lieutenant Governor did some good in his own way, as he devoted a great deal of attention to the industrial development of the provinces and to the improvement of sanitation.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), offers a cordial welcome to the new Lieutenant Governor, and expresses the hope that during his term of office these provinces will make steady progress. The editor observes that Sir James Meston has the reputation of being in sympathy with Indian aspirations, and he trusts that His Honour will accordingly do his utmost to secure an executive council for these provinces.

Sir James Meston.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th September 1912.

15. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 22nd September 1912 expresses its warm approval of the appointment of Sir James Meston as Lieutenant Governor of the United Provinces, and says that Sir James comes to these provinces well equipped for the task that lies before him.

Sir James Meston.

OUDH AKHBAR, 22nd September 1912.

The editor refers to Sir James' previous services and considers that they augur well for the future of the United Provinces. With regard to the question of financial relations between the Imperial and Provincial Governments he protests against the terms of the contract that the Government of India has imposed on these provinces, and expresses the hope that during Sir James' régime the United Provinces will get a fair share of their own revenue.

He invites the attention of His Honour to the backwardness of these provinces in general and technical education and in sanitary conditions, and observes that all efforts that Sir James makes in the direction of reform will receive the generous support of the people.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

Treatment of political prisoners in India.

16. Referring to the complaints published in the press about the ill-treatment of Indian political prisoners in the Andamans the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), says that reformation being the object of punishment, the ill-treatment of prisoners is unjustifiable. The editor urges that, as political prisoners are well treated in every other civilized country, Government should take steps to put a stop to the harsh treatment to which political prisoners are subjected in this country.

ADVOCATE, 26th September 1912.

An appeal on behalf of a political prisoner.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th September 1912 refers to the petition submitted to Lord Carmichael by Srimati Pramila Sundari Devi, wife of Abinash Chandra Bhattacharya, for the release of her husband, who is a political prisoner in the Andamans, or for his transfer to some healthy jail in India, and considers that, in view of the fact that Abinash Chandra has already served three and a half years and is very much reduced in health, his wife's prayer should be granted.

LEADER, 26th September 1912.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's candidature for election to the Imperial Council.

18. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 eulogizes the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's work in the Imperial Council, and notes with satisfaction that he has decided, on public grounds, to stand again for election. The editor considers that his presence in the next Council is essential for the proper advocacy of the cause of Indian, and he recommends his re-election to the non-official members of the Bombay Council.

LEADER, 21st September 1912.

The Bhagalpore Gazetteer and Mr. Lyall.

19. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st September 1912 complains that the Bhagalpore Gazetteer, compiled by the magistrate of the district, Mr. Lyall, contains attacks upon Babu Rash Behari Lal Mandal and Babu Rajendra Narain Singh, and characterizes the Bhagalpore branch of the Indian National Congress as a centre for seditious agitation. The editor invites the attention of the Behar Government and of the Government of India to the matter, and urges that these unfounded and offensive aspersions should be expunged from the gazetteer, and that Mr. Lyall should be transferred to some less important district.

MUSAFIR, 20th September 1912.

Persecution of Arya Samajists in the Alwar State.

20. The following letter from "Durga Prasad Gupta, Secretary, Arya Samaj, Alwar, Rajputana," appears in the Musáfir (Agra) of the 20th September 1912 (received on the 25th September):—

"Thakur Durjan Singh, who is a jagirdar and a high official of the Alwar State, is a great opponent of the Arya Samaj and is always trying to injure Arya Samajists in State employ. He wanted to close the Arya Samaj pathshala by an illegal order, but the Maharaja would not allow him to do so. He then induced a Brahman subordinate of his to abuse Swami Dayanand and Arya Samajists in general by means of libellous songs. One day when I was performing the havan ceremony at the shop of a Sanatana Dharmi mahajan this Brahman made such a noise with his libellous songs that I had to abandon the ceremony and go home. The mahajan then filed a suit against the Brahman under sections 296 and 298 of the Indian Penal Code on the 29th December 1910. No action was taken in our case, but a counter case was filed against the mahajan under sections 499 and 506, Indian Penal Code. The police held an inquiry into the matter and recommended the punishment of the Brahman, but the Thakur Sahib, who is in charge of judicial work, induced the magistrate, who is a subordinate of his and was appointed at his recommendation, to postpone the case for a year and a half. The matter was represented to the Maharaja but no reply was received. The Thakur Sahib has now ordered that no copies of papers are to be given to us by the court. On the 22nd July 1912 some other Arya Samajists and I were sitting on chairs and benches on the chabutra of the Arya Samaj when a Jagannath Car procession came past. The Thakur Sahib had our chairs thrown away and made us get up to show respect to the idol. We appealed by wire to the Agent to the Governor General at Abu and to Dewan Daya Krishna Kaul at Dharmsala and filed applications in the police court and council, but we got no redress. On the 26th July, on the return of the Jagannath Car procession, a strong force of police was sent to the Arya Samaj building without any cause. All the papers of the case have been seen by the Thakur Sahib and further inquiry has been stopped. Attempts are being made to tamper with the witnesses and counter cases may be filed against us."

IV.—Administration.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

Separation of the judicial and executive functions.

21. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 20th September 1912 refers to the revival of the demand for the separation of the judicial and executive functions, and says that it is a gross injustice that the duties of a judge and prosecutor should be exercised by one person. The editor expresses regret that the promise made in 1908 by Sir Harvey Adamson regarding the experimental separation of the judicial and executive functions in some parts of Bengal has not yet been fulfilled, and he insists that this reform should be immediately introduced.

LEADER, 20th September 1912.

An All-India Supreme Court.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th September 1912 commends the suggestion for the establishment of a Supreme Court for all India made by two distinguished Bengalis of Calcutta in the Pioneer (Allahabad) of the 22nd September.

The editor considers that the costs of an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are almost prohibitive, and that the decisions of the Privy Council are not satisfactory owing to the ignorance of the members of the Judicial Committee of the manners and customs of India. He thinks that the establishment of an independent Supreme court at Delhi in supersession of the Judicial Committee would be appreciated by Indians, and would enhance the dignity of the imperial capital.

ADVOCATE, 26th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

23. Discussing the Hoti Mardan case the Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), observes that the action of the Government of India in interfering with the administration of justice has caused widespread consternation throughout the country.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

24. Discussing the Hoti Mardan case the Anand (Lucknow) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), expresses disapproval of the Government of India's comments on Mr. Justice Davar's finding, and remarks that such interference on the part of the executive Government with the administration of justice is calculated to lower the prestige of the law courts in the estimation of the people.

ANAND, 19th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

25. A correspondent who signs himself "Kailas Nath Katju" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 21st September 1912, in which he says that when the Advocate General withdrew the case against the Khan, it was unfair for the Government of India to recapitulate the charges against him. He accuses Government of showing partiality to its own officers and of treating the Khan very unfairly, and he expresses surprise at the publication of a statement said to have been made by the Khan to the Superintendent of Police of Peshawar but which does not bear the signature of the Khan. Regarding the letter about the Islamia College at Peshawar, he deplores the futile attempt made by the Government of India to accuse the Khan of having misrepresented its date.

He expresses doubt as to whether the Khan could have consented to be a member of a deputation to Government, the object of which he strongly disapproved of in private, and he considers that Government should have instituted a sifting inquiry into the whole matter instead of adopting the rôle of an apologist for its subordinates.

He ridicules the idea that a man who owned immovable property worth a crore or so in British India would fly the country if let out on bail, and in conclusion he expresses regret that instead of compensating the Khan of Hoti and sympathizing with him in his trouble, the Government of India should have dealt with the matter in a manner so prejudicial to him.

LEADER, 22nd September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

26. A correspondent who signs himself "KRISHNA RAM MEHTA" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912, in which he expresses regret that Government was led to abandon its impartial attitude in order to vindicate its executive officers in the Hoti Mardan case.

He deplores the Government of India's criticism of Mr. Justice Davar's judgment, and says that the reasons given by Mr. Grant for not releasing the Khan on bail are unconvincing.

He contends that, if the Khan were released on bail, he would not have fled from British India where he possesses valuable property, and he says that the assertion that the Khan would have tried to bribe and intimidate witnesses, if set at liberty, was an unwarranted aspersion on his character.

LEADER, 26th September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

27. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer points out that it has always been the policy of Government to justify executive officials when their actions are criticised by high judicial officers. He therefore expresses surprise that the Hoti Mardan despatch should have caused such a stir in the press, but at the same time he condemns the tone of the Anglo-Indian press in regard to the despatch in view of the attitude it assumed towards Lord Curzon's outspoken criticism of the acquittal of Europeans by Anglo-Indian juries.

(b)—Police.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th September 1912.

Dakaiti in the United Provinces.

28. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), refers to the increase of dakaiti in the United Provinces, and questions the advisability of spending so much money on the police if they are unable to effectively deal with serious crime.

(c)—Finance and Taxation.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th September 1912.

The Allahabad Municipal Board.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), expresses the hope that the Local Government will nominate a capable person to fill the vacancy in the Allahabad Municipal Board caused by the death of M. Jamal-ud-din. The editor suggests that Mr. Abdul Raoof, Muhammad Ishaq Khan or Mir Saiyid Zamin Ali would make a better member than Muhammad Abdul Baqi Khan, who is trying to secure the nomination.

(e)—Education.

LEADER, 24th September 1912.

Education in India.

30. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th September 1912 considers that compulsory education should be introduced in India, and urges that private schools should receive more generous treatment at the hands of Government, and that well-equipped hostels should be established throughout the country.

KAISER-I-HIND, 19th September 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and the attitude of the Hindu leaders.

31. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), expresses surprise at the attitude of the Hindu leaders who seem disposed to accept the charter outlined by Government for the proposed Hindu University. The editor considers that the Hindus are making a mistake, and he says that they should make common cause with the Muhammadans in opposing the decision of Government. He thinks that the Hindus have adopted their present policy simply to spite the Muhammadans, and he appeals to them to abandon their position. He says that the Muhammadans are confident that Government will rescind its decision and that they have decided that they will use the funds that have been collected only for the establishment of the Muslim University. He observes that though the Hindus may be indifferent to the word "Hindu" as the designation of their university, the Muhammadans will never allow their university to be called anything but "Muslim."

He attributes the attitude of the Hindus towards the decision of the Secretary of State to their solicitude to wipe off the blot of disloyalty attaching to their community owing to the anarchical crimes in Bengal, but he says that they should not court the favour of Government at the expense of the goodwill of their Muhammadan countrymen.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI, 16th September 1912.

32. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur) of the 16th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), considers that in view of the decision of the Secretary of State for India in regard to the Muslim University question, the idea of establishing a university should be abandoned. The editor suggests that in case Government refuses to sanction the proposed charter, the funds that have been collected for the university should be remitted to the Sultan of Turkey through the British Government to be utilized in relieving the orphans and widows of the Turk and Arab sufferers in Tripoli.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

AL KHALIL, 16th September 1912.

33. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 16th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), objects to the decision of the Secretary of State for India regarding the Muslim University scheme, and remarks that a university with a charter on the lines approved of by the Secretary of State will be a university merely in name.

The editor urges that this charter should never be accepted, and he expresses regret that the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan attached no importance to the question of affiliation in his article which appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th September (Selections No. 37, paragraph 28). He says that unless the administration of the proposed university remains in the hands of the representatives of the Muslim community, and unless the power to affiliate High schools is granted to the university, it cannot be called "the Muslim University."

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

AL BASHIR, 17th September 1912.

34. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 17th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), reproves his co-religionists for their despondent attitude towards the decision of the Secretary of State with regard to their university scheme, and says that Muhammadans should not make such a fuss over the question of affiliation and should not demand the return of their money.

He informs his co-religionists that the Muslim University Constitution Committee never promised to secure the power of affiliation for the university, and he says that the money that has been collected cannot now be returned.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

MASHRIQ, 17th September 1912.

35. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 17th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), complains that the rules framed by the Muslim University Constitution Committee are too elaborate to be practical as the ideal affiliated school has been set on too high a plane to be within even easy reach of the average school in India. The editor urges the relaxation of the rules governing affiliation in favour of the poorer schools throughout the country.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th September 1912.

36. A correspondent who signs himself "MUHAMMAD MUZAFFAR OF CAWNPORE" contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), in which he expresses regret that the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan attached no importance to the question of affiliation in his article that appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th September (Selections No. 37, paragraph 28).

He states that a Muslim University without the power of affiliation will be a university merely in name, and he urges his co-religionists never to accept the charter outlined by Government.

He takes exception to the views expressed by the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan regarding the designation of the university, and observes that if it is named "the University of Aligarh" it will not appeal to Muhammadan sentiments and the Muhammadan public will cease to support it.

He objects to the decision of the Secretary of State for India in the matter, and urges that, if Government does not change its attitude towards the original scheme, the money that has been collected should be utilized for scholarships in foreign countries.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

37. A correspondent writing in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), refers to the articles by the Hon'ble Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan and Mr. Abdullah, B.A., LL.B., that appeared in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th September and the 11th September respectively (paragraphs 28 of Selections Nos. 37 and 38) and asks the writers how they can call the Muslim University a national university when they are prepared to vest the powers of Chancellor in the Governor General in Council and place the administration of the university in the hands of non-Muslims.

He blames the members of the Muslim University Constitution Committee for drafting the constitution in camera and for not ascertaining public opinion on it before submitting it to Government.

He notes that the draft constitution makes no provision for technical and commercial education, and that the study of Muhammadan history has not been made compulsory.

He says that unless the Muslim University is granted the power of affiliation and unless it is conducted by Muslims it cannot be called a Muslim University, and he therefore urges his co-religionists to decline a charter which is calculated to deprive them of the liberty they enjoy at present in governing the affairs of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

KAISER-I-HIND, 19th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

38. A correspondent contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), in which he says that as the Muslim community is not willing to accept the charter outlined by Government for the Muslim University, the Muslim leaders should establish an independent university.

The editor expresses the same opinion, and asserts that the Muslim community holds very strong views on the university question as regards affiliation and designation, and that it knows how to treat the views of leaders like the Hon'ble Sahebzada who change their views to suit the occasion.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

39. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 25th September), expresses approval of the attitude of Muhammadans towards the decision of the Secretary of State in regard to the Muslim University scheme, and suggests that the funds that have been collected should be utilized in improving the status of the community and in establishing a Muhammadan society on the lines of the National Congress.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

40. A correspondent who signs himself "FAZL AKRAM FROM BISAULI" contributes an article to the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 21st September 1912, in which he deprecates the discussion in the press as to the manner in which the funds that have been collected for the Muslim University should be spent in case the charter is not granted.

He says that Muhammadans should first try to secure a charter of their own making, and that in case they fail in their efforts, the funds should be utilized in opening a high school at the head quarters of each division. He reproves certain of his co-religionists for demanding the return of their money, and protests against the expenditure of the funds other than on the university scheme.

MASHRIQ, 17th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and medical education.

41. A correspondent who signs himself "QAMAR AHMAD, B.A." contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 17th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), in which he complains that the draft regulations do not provide for the teaching of medicine in the Muslim University. He considers that the university should recognize the unani system of medicine and that hakims should be granted diplomas by the university. He urges the All-India Tibbi Conference to take this matter up.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd September 1912.

The Persian course for the School-leaving Certificate examination of 1914.

42. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912 protests against the recent order of the Director of Public Instruction changing the Persian course for the School-leaving Certificate examination of 1914, and remarks that the action of the Director in the middle of the session has caused loss of time and money to students.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

43. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), considers that the condition of Indian agriculturists is deplorable in the extreme, and urges that they should be taught improved methods of cultivation.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

The condition of agriculturists in India.

(g)—General.

44. The editor of the Sudha Nidhi (Allahabad) in the combined issue for March to August 1912 (received on the 20th September), considers that certain vaids should be allowed to take part in the All-India Sanitary Conference to be held at Madras in November.

SUDHA NIDHI, March to August 1912.

The All-India Sanitary Conference, Madras.

He also suggests that two vaids and two non-official Indians should be appointed to the Sanitary Board of the United Provinces.

45. The editor of the Sudha Nidhi (Allahabad) in the combined issue for the months of March to August 1912 (received on the 26th September), states that as vaccination is not compulsory in England, it should be optional in India also. He invites attention to the troubles suffered by Dr. Jethanand of Multan, who refused to have his child vaccinated, and says that the Nambudris of Madras object to vaccination.

SUDHA NIDHI, March to August 1912.

Compulsory vaccination.

He expresses the hope that Lord Pentland, who is himself an anti-vaccinationist, will respect the feelings of the Nambudris in this respect.

46. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912 reviewing the United Provinces sanitary report for 1911, notes with regret that the sanitary condition of these provinces is most unsatisfactory and that the death-rate has been much higher than the birth-rate for the last ten years. The editor admits that Government has done something to improve sanitation, but he contends that much still remains to be done. He urges that Government should give liberal assistance to municipalities to enable them to open up congested areas, and he insists that the trained nurses appointed by municipalities to check infantile mortality should be more efficient. He says that there is no mention in the report as to what steps were taken to combat cholera and plague beyond inoculation, and he expresses regret at the apathy of Government towards these epidemics.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd September 1912.

Public health in the United Provinces.

He urges that it is of the utmost importance for the improvement of sanitation that education should be diffused among the masses and that they should be taught to observe the rules of hygiene and sanitation, and that special steps should be taken to prevent the adulteration of foodstuffs.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 22nd September 1912 notes with satisfaction that the swadeshi movement has not been given up by Bengalis, and it rejoices at the success of the Swadeshi mela held at Calcutta on the 14th September. The editor approves of the intention of the organizers of the mela to start a Swadeshi Chamber of Commerce and a Swadeshi museum, but says that it is more necessary that Indian capitalists and monied men should come forward and establish mills at different centres.

ADVOCATE, 22nd September 1912.

The Swadeshi mela in Calcutta.

Discussing Raja Peary Mohan Mukerji's speech on the occasion, the editor expresses agreement with the Raja's remarks regarding the importance of agriculture, and he approves of the suggestion that the educated classes should turn their attention to agriculture.

48. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912 considers that national well-being can only be secured by proper attention being devoted to agriculture and manufactures. The editor says that the development of industries fosters science and arts, and indirectly benefits agriculture.

LEADER, 22nd September 1912.

Industrialism and economic problems.

He describes how the growth of manufactures leads to enhanced wages, relieves the pressure on land, raises the standard of living, increases the price of raw material and finally introduces labour-saving devices in agricultural operations.

He points out how the high profits realized by capitalists leads to jealousy between capital and labour until the struggle eventually assumes the form of a strike.

He then dwells on the problem of non-employment which he says is caused by fluctuations in the money market, and he criticises the money-grabbing spirit of the West which deprives thousands of workers of employment at a moment's notice. He thinks that the advent of industrialism in India will do away with the millions of able-bodied beggars who infest the country, and he expresses the hope that the money-making spirit of the West will never be adopted by Indians.

ANAND, 19th September 1912.

The protection of cows and the supply of dairy produce.

49. The Ánand (Lucknow) of the 19th September 1912 (received on the 23rd September), considers that public health in this country has been undermined owing to the scarcity of pure milk and ghee, and points out that, although the United Provinces Government is about to pass a bill for the prevention of the adulteration of foodstuffs, the measure cannot prove effective unless the people themselves concert measures for the protection of cows. The editor urges that Hindus should not merely save old and unserviceable cows from starvation and slaughter as a religious duty, but that they should also establish model farms for the supply of dairy produce.

GARHWALI, August 1912.

Forest administration in Kumaun.

50. The editor of the Garhwali (Dehra Dun) in the issue for August 1912 (received on the 23rd September), thanks Sir John Hewett for his speech on the occasion of the opening of a new hospital at Haldwani in which he foreshadowed some improvements in the forest administration of Kumaun. He expresses regret that the forest officials of Kumaun are lacking in experience and do not consult the influential men of the locality.

He says that while the population of Garhwal has been increasing, sufficient land has not been given out for cultivation by the forest authorities with the result that foodstuffs have become very dear. He urges that more land should be let out to cultivation, and he suggests that the inhabitants of villages should not be deprived of their quasi-proprietary rights over the waste lands within the bounds of their villages.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 18th September 1912.

Crime in the Punjab.

51. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), views with alarm the increase in serious crime in the Punjab, as disclosed by the annual report on police administration for 1911, and regrets that, notwithstanding increased expenditure on the Force during the last few years, the Police have not proved more efficient.

The editor reminds Government that, when the Police are incapable of investigating an ordinary criminal case, they can hardly be expected to display much intelligence in political cases.

HINDUSTANI, 23rd September 1912.

Naib tahsildars.

52. A correspondent who signs himself "KOREY MAL ANAND FROM ANUPSHAHR" contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 23rd September 1912, in which he complains of the heavy and exacting work that deputy collectors are required to perform, and suggests that naib tahsildars should be vested with the powers of a third class magistrate.

He also suggests that naib tahsildars should perform the duties of sub-registrars, and thus leave deputy collectors free to devote more attention to their criminal and revenue cases.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd September 1912.

Juvenile smoking.

53. A correspondent who signs himself "LAHRI," writing in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd September 1912 says that smoking is on the increase among boys of tender age, and he urges that juvenile smoking should be made penal in India.

ADVOCATE, 22nd September 1912.

The Bill for the protection of minor girls.

54. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 22nd September 1912 congratulates the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy on the introduction of his bill for the protection of minor girls, and notes with satisfaction that the bill will make it penal for women of ill-fame to keep minor girls other than those whose natural guardians they are. The editor considers that there would be an appreciable decrease in the number of prostitutes if the age of consent of girls were raised to sixteen years. He suggests that the State should, in co-operation with public-spirited citizens, open industrial schools for poor minor girls, and he assures Government of public support in this matter. He also thanks the Hon'ble Mr. Madge for his endeavour to suppress the traffic of white girls in India.

VI.—Railways.

55. A correspondent who signs himself "Baqàr Husain of Wazirganj Farrash Khana, Lucknow," complains in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 18th September 1912 (received on the 21st September), that owing to the racial bias of the Deputy Examiner, Mr. Sundara Chari, he had to resign his post as Foreign Onward Invoice checker in the goods section of the Audit office of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway at Lucknow.

Complaint against the Deputy Examiner, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th September 1912.

He says that his resignation was due to the fact that two of his Hindu juniors were promoted by the Deputy Examiner while no consideration was given to his claims. He remarks that Hindu officers always show partiality to their Hindu subordinates, and he invites the attention of the authorities and of the Muslim League to the matter.

The editor of the Muslim Gazette invites official attention to the matter, but expresses disapproval of the tone in which the correspondent has stated his case.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

The political outlook in Persia.

1. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), says that recent events in Persia clearly show that the Anglo-Russian agreement is but a euphuism for the disintegration of the country. The editor considers that, despite the Liberal ministry in England, Russia will establish her authority at Teheran and will be guilty of further atrocities. ABHYUDAYA, 26th September 1912.

The foreign policy of Japan.

2. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 condemns the friendly attitude of Japan towards Russia, and considers that Japan should have identified herself with China so that there might be two united Asiatic Powers to reckon with the Powers of Europe. ABHYUDAYA, 29th September 1912.

(b)—Home.

Lord Crewe on Indian autonomy.

3. Mr. V. L. Narsimham contributes an article to the September number of the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) (received on the 26th September), in which he takes exception to the attempt made by Lord Crewe to explain away the passage relating to Indian autonomy in the despatch of August 1911. He states that Lord Morley, Lord Hardinge and Mr. Montagu and all responsible Indian officials and English well-wishers of the country are unanimous as regards granting Indians provincial autonomy, and he expresses regret that Lord Curzon and the Times (London) have coerced Lord Crewe into disavowing the declared policy of the Government of India. He admires the political perception and foresight of Lord Hardinge who said "that in the course of time the just demands of Indians for a larger share in the government of the country would have to be satisfied" by giving "the provinces a larger measure of self-government until at last India would consist of a number of administrations autonomous in all provincial affairs, with the Government of India above them all . . . " He considers that Lord Crewe was guilty of an historical inaccuracy in saying that people of different creeds and colour could not participate in the administration of the Empire, and he confidently asserts that such arguments will never induce Indians to misunderstand the third paragraph of the Government of India's despatch. HINDUSTAN REVIEW, September 1912.

The regeneration of India.

4. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 25th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), ascribes the failure of all attempts made hitherto to bring about the regeneration of India to the absence of a common language in the country, and to the excessive predominance of sectarian and provincial feeling among the inhabitants. The editor contends that unless Indians work unanimously and adopt Hindi as their common language, progress is impossible. SADDHARAM PRACHARAK, 25th September 1912.

An appeal on behalf of political prisoners.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), refers to the release of suffragettes in England, and urges that the Government of India should liberate all the political prisoners in Indian jails. ABHYUDAYA, 26th September 1912.

Government servants and political bodies.

6. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), inquires why Mr. Justice Rattigan is allowed to be president of the Anglo-Indian Association, when Indian officials have been prohibited from taking part in political movements. ABHYUDAYA, 26th September 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

7. Mr. G. Subramania Iyer contributes an article to the September number of the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) (received on the 20th September), in which he says that the Government of India has always kept Indians from getting their rightful share of the higher appointments in the public service, and in pursuance of this policy has gone even so far as to disregard acts of Parliament and resolutions of the House of Commons. He states that the Government of India persistently disregarded the Act of 1833, and that when a Committee of the Secretary of State's Council reported in 1860 that simultaneous examinations should be held in England and India the report was suppressed. He again points out that an Act of Parliament was HINDUSTAN REVIEW, September 1912.

passed in 1870 guaranteeing one-fifth of the appointments in the Covenanted Civil Service to Indians, but its provisions were disregarded till 1880. He asserts that the Public Service Commission was in reality appointed in 1886 in order that the Statutory Civil Service might be abolished, and he remarks that in spite of the numerous resolutions adopted by Parliament in favour of simultaneous examinations and the more general employment of Indians in the public services, practically nothing has so far been done.

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

8. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer invites the attention of Indians to the fact that Eurasians enjoy more than a fair share of the lucrative appointments in the Railway, Telegraph, Survey, Customs, Salt and Excise Departments. He states that in government secretariats almost all the registrarships are filled by Eurasians, and he considers that Eurasians in general receive far too generous treatment at the hands of Government.

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

The Nicholson Committee.

9. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 inquires as to the truth of the statement made by the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian that the Nicholson Committee has been appointed to inquire into the question of replacing Sikhs by Gurkhas.

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

Mr. Churchill and the India Office.

10. Referring to a rumour regarding Mr. Churchill's desire to exchange the Admiralty for the India Office, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 remarks that Mr. Churchill is a politician who adapts his views to his own interests.

The editor considers that Mr. Churchill is a Conservative by instinct, and remarks that the India Office is a place where "a Liberal Minister of State can, if he be so minded, without loss of liberalism, act as a brake upon the wheels of progress."

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

11. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 deplores the attempts made by certain Muhammadans and Anglo-Indians to show that the Congress is purely a Hindu body and is inimical to Muhammadans.

The editor states that the Hindus have always been anxious that the Muhammadans should associate themselves with the Congress but that the numerous invitations given to the Muhammadan leaders to join the movement have not so far been accepted.

LEADER, 1st October 1912.

Deportation of Anglo-Indians.

12. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st October 1912 refers to an order of the Government of Bombay requiring Messrs. Furtado, Pereira and Fernandes to leave British territory, and inquires why this order was issued.

LEADER, 1st October 1912.

The coming council elections.

13. Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st October 1912, in which he lays stress on the responsibility of voters in the election of suitable representatives for the Legislative Council. He considers that no vote should be given to any candidate except on public grounds, and he suggests that candidates should issue manifestoes which should be discussed by the electors. In case of municipalities he thinks that the rate-payers should decide who should be elected, and that the members of municipal boards should obey the mandates of their constituents in the matter.

ADVOCATE, 3rd October 1912.

The coming council elections.

14. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 3rd October 1912 considers that the system by which the members of municipal and district boards first elect their delegates and these delegates then elect members for the local Legislative Council should be abandoned. The editor urges that members of municipal and district boards should have votes at elections.

He invites attention to the unfair distribution of votes, and suggests that in fixing the number of votes for each municipal board due regard should be paid to the municipal and intellectual strength of the population and to the income of the board.

III.—Native States.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th September 1912 considers that Sir William Lee Warner's lecture on the Native States of India, delivered at Cambridge, was on the whole conceived in a spirit of sympathy. ADVOCATE, 29th September 1912.

Sir William Lee Warner on the Native States of India.

Discussing some of Sir William's remarks the editor says that no one is entitled to adversely criticise the administration in Native States when the separation of the judicial and executive functions has not as yet been effected in British India, and when thousands of people in Bengal die annually of malaria and cholera for lack of proper sanitation.

With regard to Sir William's reference to the subterfuges adopted by the Chiefs to save themselves from the attacks of the London press, he remarks that the rulers of Native States do not appreciate adverse criticism and resent any encroachment on their rights. He agrees with Sir William that this unhappy state of affairs is due to the lack of healthy public opinion and to the non-existence of a free press, and he expresses the hope that the Chiefs will take Sir William's advice and educate their subjects so that they may be able to take an efficient part in the administration.

16. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 3rd October 1912 protests against the attacks made by Sir William Lee Warner on the administration of Native States in the course of a lecture he recently delivered at Cambridge. The editor asks Sir William to prove that the rulers of Native States are insincere and falsify their administration reports in order to impose upon the public. LEADER, 3rd October 1912.

Sir William Lee Warner on the Native States of India.

He questions the truth of Sir William's statement that Indians do not want sanitary reforms, and remarks that Sir William's lecture is full of dangerous half-truths and does great injustice to Indians.

IV.—Administration.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

17. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun) of the 22nd September 1912 (received on the 30th September), considers that the Government of India has created an undesirable precedent by criticising Mr. Justice Davar's judgment in the Hoti Mardan case. COSMOPOLITAN, 22nd September 1912.

The Hoti Mardan case.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th September 1912 considers that the sentence passed on Maulvi Leakut Husain was too severe, and that the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta had no right to demand the immediate payment of the fine. ADVOCATE, 29th September 1912.

Maulvi Leakut Husain.

19. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 27th September 1912 condemns as reactionary the representation submitted to Government by the European Defence League for an inquiry into the work of the Calcutta High Court, and attributes it to Anglo-Indian hostility to Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Fletcher. LEADER, 27th September 1912.

The Calcutta High Court.

20. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 3rd October 1912 considers that the request of the European Defence Association for an inquiry into the working of the Calcutta High Court is unjustifiable in view of the fact that Indians are fully satisfied with its impartiality and independence. The editor remarks that the European Defence Association appears to want a Court that will favour the executive, but he observes that the creation of such a Court would lead to the disappearance of justice and to the inauguration of a reign of terror. ADVOCATE, 3rd October 1912.

The Calcutta High Court.

(b)—Police.

21. Reviewing the report on the administration of the Police Department for the year ending 31st December 1911, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 24th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), expresses alarm at the increase of crime in these provinces. MASHRIQ, 24th September 1912.

The United Provinces Police.

The editor considers that police methods of investigation require revision, and he says that police officials cannot inspire any confidence in the people until they give up dishonest practices. He notes that it is generally admitted by those in authority that criminal tribes are responsible for a great deal of the serious crime in the provinces, and he expresses regret that, with the exception of the Salvation Army, no agency is at work to reclaim these tribes.

ABHYUDAYA, 29th September 1912.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 remarks that during the last few years there has been very little improvement in the morale of the United Provinces police. The editor observes that the general public is to a large extent to blame for this, and he considers that police work will never improve till the people recognize their rights and realize that the Police Force has been created to minister to their comfort and not to oppress them.

The United Provinces Police.

He says that the European officers of the Force cannot be held responsible for the misdeeds of their subordinates as they do not realize the depths to which the latter can sink. With a view to the reformation of the Force he suggests the imparting of moral instruction to police recruits, the establishment of a special department to watch the doings of the police and free intercourse between the rulers and the ruled, so that the latter may be able to bring delinquencies on the part of the police to the notice of Government.

(c)—Finance and Taxation.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

BHARAT JIWAN, 23rd September 1912.

23. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 23rd September 1912 (received on the 30th September), complains of the scarcity of water at Benares, and asks the municipal authorities to take early steps to ensure a more plentiful supply.

The Benares water supply.

ADVOCATE, 29th September 1912.

24. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th September 1912 considers that Lord Carmichael has taken a wise step in deciding to hold an informal conference on the 9th of October at Darjeeling to consider the question of water supply in the rural areas of his province.

Rural water supply in Bengal.

(e)—Education.

MASHRIQ, 24th September 1912.

25. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID AIJAZ AHMAD, STUDENT, FROM BUDAUN," contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 24th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), in which he complains that head masters of vernacular schools treat their pupils very harshly.

Vernacular middle schools.

He invites the attention of the educational authorities to the matter, and suggests that head masters should not be allowed to inflict corporal punishment on their pupils, and that students should not be compelled to attend schools for more than six hours a day.

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

26. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 considers that Indians should be grateful to Mr. Montagu for his admission that Government has "no hostility to the principle of compulsion" and for the prophecy that "universal and free education must come in India, as it has come in other countries."

Mr. Montagu on Indian education.

The editor, however, considers that compulsory education in India is essential, and he expresses the hope that it will be introduced at an early date.

KAISER-I-HIND, 26th September 1912.

27. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID AHMAD HUSAIN FROM MEERUT" contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 26th September 1912 (received on the 2nd October), in which he expresses dissatisfaction at the decision of Government regarding the affiliation and designation of the proposed Muslim University. He considers, however, that Muhammadans can overcome the difficulties in regard to affiliation by establishing a number of colleges at Aligarh.

The proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities and affiliation.

28. A correspondent who signs himself "FAQIR QAYAM-UD-DIN MUHAMMAD ABDUL BARI FROM FIRANGI MAHAL, LUCKNOW," contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 24th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), in which he condemns the present system of education, and urges the necessity for a Muslim University.

AL BASHIR, 24th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He contends that as the Muslim University scheme is not based on political motives, Government should have no hesitation in granting the Muhammadans a charter of their own making.

He advises his co-religionists to abandon the idea of establishing a Muslim University if Government refuses to grant them the charter they have asked for, and he suggests that the funds that have been collected for the university should in that case be utilized in spreading primary education amongst Muhammadans, in opening technical schools in the country and in propagating the teachings of Islam in India and abroad.

The editor reproves his co-religionists for their despondent attitude regarding the Muslim University, and expresses apprehension lest, in the event of the idea of establishing a Muslim University being abandoned, the younger generation of Muhammadans will become desperate and join the extremist party. He urges the need for carrying on a constitutional agitation against the decision of the Secretary of State.

Another correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID HASSAN MUSSANNA HASHMI" writing in the same issue of the paper takes exception to the language used by certain correspondents in the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) against the organizers of the Muslim University scheme for collecting subscriptions for the university without previously ascertaining the views of Government on the question of affiliation. He urges his co-religionists to use sober language when criticising the actions of their leaders, and he deprecates the demand for the return of the money that has already been subscribed for the Muslim University.

29. Maulvi Shaikh Abdullah, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, Aligarh, contributes the second instalment of his article on the University scheme to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 25th September 1912 (received on the 2nd October), in the course of which he expresses regret that Muhammadans should have been so enthusiastic on the question of affiliation.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 25th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He describes the lines on which European universities are run, and points out that the power of affiliation is not very essential for the well-being of the Muslim University.

He protests against the use of the money that has been collected other than on the university, and suggests that if this money is invested, the interest should be utilized in increasing the efficiency of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

30. Maulvi Abdul Wadood of Bareilly contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 25th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), in which he expresses approval of the attitude of the members of the Muslim University Constitution Committee towards the decision of the Secretary of State, and urges his co-religionists to foster the enthusiasm for national movements that the university scheme has aroused in the community.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 25th September 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

31. A correspondent who signs himself "HAFIZ MOHAMMAD NUR FROM ILAHI BAGH, GORAKHPUR," contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 1st October 1912, in which he reproves his co-religionists for their despondent attitude towards the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the Muslim University.

MASHRIQ, 1st October 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

He urges his co-religionists to agitate on constitutional lines against the decision, and to send a deputation to England to request the Secretary of State to rescind it.

He objects to the use of the university funds otherwise than on the university, and expresses regret that some of his co-religionists should have demanded the return of their money.

The editor protests against the idea prevailing amongst the Muhammadans that the organizers of the university scheme were aware of the views of Government on the question of affiliation before they appealed for funds, and that they purposely deceived the public.

He also takes exception to the language used by some writers in condemning the Muhammadan leaders who, he says, could never be guilty of deception.

In conclusion he expresses the opinion that for the present the power of affiliation is not essential for the welfare of the Muslim University, but he suggests that Government should grant a charter which should permit the affiliation of colleges of a specified standard.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 25th September 1912.

Consumption of intoxicants in the Punjab.

32. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 25th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), expresses regret at the widespread prevalence of the drink habit in the Punjab, and urges a vigorous temperance campaign and the closing of liquor shops by Government.

ABHYUDAYA, 26th September 1912.

Sale of cocaine at Allahabad.

33. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th September 1912 (received on the 30th September), complains that the sale of cocaine has been rapidly increasing at Allahabad for some time past and that the local police have done practically nothing to check the evil.

ABHYUDAYA, 29th September 1912.

The proposed reduction in office establishments.

34. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 is opposed to any reduction in office establishments under Mr. Pike's scheme on the ground that the work in the various government offices is already too heavy. The editor contends that if the work were light there would be no occasion for the general complaint that most of the government offices are not closed on local and sometimes even on gazetted holidays.

LEADER, 29th September 1912.

Outrages upon females.

35. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 29th September 1912 has the following :—

"OFFENCES AGAINST WOMEN.

SIR,—If the vernacular press of Bengal is to be believed, offences against women are very common in Bengal. The vernacular papers report many such cases week after week. And it is fair to assume that there must be a good many unrecorded cases too. So far it does not seem that the steps taken by the authorities to put down this evil have been effective. The matter, however, is so important that we beseech the Government of His Excellency Lord Carmichael to cause a special investigation of it to be made with a view to the adoption of measures of just severity which may be called for.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 2nd October 1912 (received on the 5th October) publishes a contributed article in which the writer protests against the British Foreign policy in regard to Persia.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 2nd October 1912.

The situation in Persia.

He considers that the Anglo-Russian entente will be of no avail to the British in the event of a war between Germany and England, and he advises Sir Edward Grey to remodel his policy regarding Persia if he is anxious to secure the support of the Muhammadan countries for England.

2. The Abhudaya (Allahabad) of the 6th October 1912 (received on the 9th October) deplores the gradual occupation of Northern Persia by Russia, and attributes it to the weakness of Sir Edward Grey. The editor considers that Sir Edward Grey should be replaced by a stronger and more reliable Foreign Minister.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th October 1912.

The situation in Persia.

3. Referring to Tibetan affairs the editor of the Leader (Allahabad), in the issue of the 4th October 1912, considers that there is no reason why Britain should oppose the sovereignty of China in Tibet. He maintains that if Britain adopts an aggressive policy in regard to Tibet, her example will be generally followed by Russia and Japan who, he says, are only waiting for an excuse to occupy Mongolia and Manchuria.

LEADER, 4th October 1912.

The future of Tibet and England.

(b)—Home.

4. The following lines occur in a poem entitled "The sleep of the Gods" contributed by Krishna Chaitanya Goswami to the August number of the Maryada (Allahabad) (received on the 30th September):—

MARYADA, August 1912.

The condition of India.

* * * * * * *

"Your children are suffering from poverty, O Gods.
Behold, they are half dead on account of hunger.
That place is infected by plague and other diseases and is full of misery.
A thousand pities, a place that was once so happy is now the abode of grief and misery.
The disappearance of unity has brought about a woeful spectacle,
And brothers are quarrelling among themselves."

* * * * * * *

"Not to mention women, even the men have no education,
And are sorrowfully suffering while their enemies laugh at them.
Yes, those very people who have learnt all their arts and have become perfect.
It is a very great injustice to laugh at them."

* * * * * * *

"What will be our condition during the four months of separation (the Hindu Gods are supposed to sleep for months, i.e. from August to November)."

* * * * * * *

5. The Prem (Brindaban) of the 5th October 1912 (received on the 11th October) publishes a contributed article in which the writer discusses the contingency of war, and suggests means by which India may be enabled to protect herself from invasion by Russia, Afghanistan or Japan. His scheme is that the Nizam of Hyderabad should be in general charge of the military operations, and that India should be divided into four or five divisions, each of which should be under the control of one of the leading Native Princes. Immediately on the outbreak of hostilities he suggests that the Viceroy should go to Hyderabad with a bodyguard of five thousand British soldiers and should take up his residence there, and that two warships should remain anchored at Bombay to take over European refugees. He says that on the cessation of hostilities the Native Princes should be granted large territories as a reward for their military services.

PREM, 5th October 1912.

The defence of India.

6. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 6th October 1912 notes with regret that the revised council regulations have not removed any of the inequalities under which the

LEADER, 6th October 1912.

The revised council regulations.

Hindus of these provinces suffer. The editor invites attention to the injustice of allowing Muhammadan graduates and title-holders to vote, while Hindus satisfying the same requirements still remain without a vote. He protests against the over-representation of the Muhammadans, and urges that Hindus should be treated like Muhammadans and given direct representation. He considers that the representative of the Indian commercial community should be elected and not nominated, and that Kumaun should not be unrepresented.

He takes exception to the present arrangement by which the elected members are placed in a minority of six in the local council, and in conclusion he urges the Lieutenant-Governor to exercise his power of nomination in favour of the Hindu community.

LEADER, 9th October 1912.

The revised council regulation.

7. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 9th October 1912 expresses dissatisfaction with the new council regulations for the United Provinces. The editor complains that the property qualification in the case of the landholders' electorate has not been lowered and that official elected members of district and municipal boards are still allowed votes.

ADVOCATE, 10th October 1912.

The revised council regulations.

8. Discussing the revised council regulations the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 10th October 1912 notes with regret that the Kumaun division is still to continue unrepresented. The editor protests against the disabilities under which Hindu graduates and income-tax payers suffer in the matter of council elections, and he considers that Government would be well advised to redress the special grievances of Hindus in this respect at an early date.

MARYADA, August 1912.

The law of sedition in India.

9. Referring to the conviction of a schoolmaster in Thana (Bombay Presidency) for speaking seditiously, the editor of the Maryada (Allahabad) in the issue for August 1912 (received on the 30th September) considers that the law of sedition in India is too elastic as it is apparently applicable to private conversations.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th October 1912.

The law of sedition in India.

10. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 6th October 1912 (received on the 9th October) contrasts the leniency with which the violent speeches of Sir Edward Carson and other Ulster Unionist leaders are treated with the harshness with which sedition even in private conversations is regarded in India. The editor attributes this state of affairs to the moral weakness of Indians who quietly submit to all injustice and do not fight for their rights like the Irish.

ANAND, 3rd October 1912.

Pan-Islamism and the Amir of Afghanistan.

11. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 3rd October 1912 (received on the 7th October), invites attention to the discontent prevailing among Indian Muhammadans owing to the state of affairs in Morocco, Tripoli, Egypt, Turkey and Persia. The editor asserts that Muhammadans all over the world now look to the Amir of Afghanistan as the last hope of Islam, and he points out that the Amir is making a bid for the religious leadership of the Islamic world by appointing Turkish officers in his army, cultivating closer relations with Turkey, Kerbela and Najaf, and by appointing representatives at Mecca, Medina and Baghdad.

He ridicules the political ignorance of Indian Muhammadans who expect the British Government to act as a protector of Muhammadan states, and he condemns the action of the Muslim leaders who, he says, inflame the passions of the masses without considering the consequences.

In conclusion he suggests that the Government of India should keep a watchful eye on the progress of events in Afghanistan and should not permit the spirit of Jehad (Muslim religious war) to spread into British India.

AL MUSHIR, 4th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

12. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 4th October 1912 (received on the 9th October) regrets to note that certain European writers attribute ulterior motives to the Muhammadans of India because of their sympathy for their suffering co-religionists in Tripoli and Persia. The editor assures Government that Indian Muhammadans are not Pan-Islamists but are loyal subjects of the British Crown, and he appeals to European journalists not to create strained relations between the rulers and ruled in India by indulging in sensational writings.

The Punjab Police.

13. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th October 1912 expresses concern at the increase of crime in the Punjab. The editor expresses agreement with Sir Louis Dane's opinion that increased expenditure on the Police department has not brought about an improvement in the morale and working of the force. He considers that Sir Louis Dane's remarks apply with equal force to the United Provinces, but he is glad to note that honest efforts are being made to purify police methods.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

14. A correspondent who signs himself "Muhammad Hamid from Orai" contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 2nd October 1912 (received on the 10th October), in which he considers that Muhammadans should accept the charter outlined by Government for the Muslim University.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 2nd October 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

15. The Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 3rd October 1912 (received on the 9th October) condemns the policy of those leaders who advise Muhammadans to accept the charter outlined by Government for the proposed Muslim University. The editor considers that his co-religionists should agitate against the decision of the Secretary of State regarding affiliation and should request him to rescind it. He also urges the necessity of amending certain clauses in the constitution of the University, and says that the income from the funds that have been collected should not be spent otherwise than on a federal university.

KAISAR-I-HIND, 3rd October 1912.

The Muslim University fund.

16. Referring to the various suggestions regarding the expenditure of the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th October 1912 reproduces the suggestion of the Observer (Lahore) that Rs. 15 lakhs should be used for raising the Aligarh College to the status of a local university, and that the remaining 20 lakhs should be utilized in creating a general Muslim scholarships fund.

LEADER, 4th October 1912.

The presidentship of the educational conference.

17. Dr. Mahmud, Bar.-at-law, contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 2nd October 1912 (received on the 5th October), in which he suggests that Major Saiyed Husan Bilgrami should be elected president of the coming session of the Muhammadan Educational Conference.

The editor supports this suggestion, and says Major Bilgrami's high educational qualifications and political acumen eminently fit him for the presidentship of the conference.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 2nd October 1912.

The Agra Medical school and Muhammadans.

18. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 2nd October 1912 (received on the 5th October) publishes a contributed article in which the writer refers to the expulsion of Amir Ahmad from the Agra Medical school and urges the Muslim League to insist on his readmission into the school.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 2nd October 1912.

LEADER, 4th October 1912.

Industrial education in the Punjab.

19. Referring to the proposals submitted to Government by the Punjab Industrial Education Committee, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th October 1912 considers that the industrial education question is an urgent one and that Sir Louis Dane should give it his attention as early as possible.

(f) Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st October 1912.

Famine and cow protection.

20. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st October 1912 (received on the 7th October) attributes famines to the failure of the rains and to defective cultivation. In this connection the editor remarks that fields cannot be properly irrigated from wells owing to the inadequate supply of bullocks, and he therefore appeals to Muhammadans to give up cow-killing if they want to save their country from famine.

(g) General.

AL BASHIR, 1st October 1912.

The swadeshi movement in India.

21. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 1st October 1912 (received on the 5th October) advises his co-religionists to co-operate with the Hindus in extending the swadeshi movement in the country.

He condemns the use of foreign goods as disastrous to the growth of indigenous industries, and he urges the boycott of all imports with the exception of articles manufactured in England. He says that though Government is not prepared to levy protective duties on imported articles, Indians are free to discard them, and he urges his countrymen to foster home industries and thus keep their money in their country.

ANAND, 3rd October 1912.

Sanitation in the United Provinces.

22. Reviewing the report of the administration of the Sanitation department for the year 1911, the Anand (Lucknow) of the 3rd October 1912 (received on the 7th October) expresses concern at the excess of deaths over births in the United Provinces, and appeals to Government to allot more funds for sanitation work.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAKA, 4th October 1912.

Vaccination.

23. The Bharat Sudasha Pravartaka (Fatehgarh) for the 4th October 1912 (received on the 9th October) refers to the agitation against vaccination and suggests that Government should appoint a commission of medical experts to decide whether vaccination is of such utility as to justify the enormous expenditure it entails.

LEADER, 5th October 1912.

Plague and travelling dispensaries.

24. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 5th October 1912 notes with regret that science is apparently unable to solve the problem of plague. Discussing the measures adopted on the occasion of an outbreak of plague, the editor considers that the evacuation of houses leads to great inconvenience and discomfort and is at best only a temporary remedy. He suggests that Government should remodel all infected towns by opening up congested areas, destroying uninhabitable hovels and by providing sanitary dwellings. He deplores the falling off in the number of inoculations during the year 1911, and urges that the masses should be induced to submit to inoculation. He notes with regret that Sir John Hewett was opposed to the appointment of inoculation officers, and suggests that Government should accept the services of every one who volunteer for inoculation work. He notes with satisfaction that travelling dispensaries did good work during the year 1911.

ADVOCATE, 6th October 1912.

Adulteration of food.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 6th October 1912 comments on the adulteration of food-stuffs, and urges Government to put a stop to it.

ADVOCATE, 6th October 1912.

Settlement operations in Kumaun.

26. According to the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 6th October 1912, the people of Garhwal are complaining that the forest officers have placed the boundary pillars of reserved forests too near the villages and have left very little grazing ground for the cattle in the different villages. The editor says that the conversion of district forests into reserved forests is being carried out without due consideration for the people of the areas concerned, who, he states, have been deprived of all means of obtaining fuel and have been allotted grazing land at a considerable distance from their villages. He protests against the afforestation of waste lands on the ground that it will render further agricultural expansion impossible, and he suggests that instead of appropriating waste lands, Government should encourage the local zamindars to utilize them for agricultural purposes.

V.—Legislation.

27. The Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 3rd October 1912 (received on the 9th October) expresses gratification at the introduction of the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy's Bill for the protection of minor girls, and considers that the clauses relating to the guardianship of girls and to the raising of the age of consent to sixteen will prove effective in bringing about a considerable decrease in the number of prostitutes. The editor also welcomes the Hon'ble Mr. Madge's Bill for the suppression of the traffic in white girls, and remarks that the Government of India will earn the everlasting gratitude of Indians by bringing these two Bills permanently on the Statute Book.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 notes with regret that the European Powers are apparently hostile to Asiatic countries at the present moment. The editor refers to the obstacles put by Britain and Germany in the way of China's raising a loan, and remarks that England's action in the matter justifies the conclusion that she is trying to extend her influence in Tibet. He expresses regret that England, the home of freedom, should have thus tarnished her fair name by retarding the growth of a republic in China.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

Asiatic countries and the European Powers.

He next refers to the unsolicited intervention of England and Russia in Persian affairs, and dwells on the atrocities committed by Russia in Persia. He considers that the British Government is partly responsible for these atrocities, as, in his opinion, Russia could not have perpetuated them without the moral support of England.

He says that the agitation of the European Powers to secure autonomy for the Balkan provinces of Turkey at a time when she is at war with Italy, is characteristic of the aggressive policy of the Powers towards weaker and non-Christian countries.

In conclusion he observes that the demand of the European Powers for the grant of autonomy to Macedonia and Albania will be justifiable only when they have conceded self-government to the races they themselves govern.

2. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 refers to the atrocities committed by Englishmen on the native labourers working on their rubber plantations in Peru, and inquires why Western historians, who speak with horror of the love of ancient oriental rulers for bull-fighting, close their eyes to the misdeeds of their own countrymen.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

The atrocities in Peru.

3. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 13th October 1912 says that Indians should not merely take an academic interest in Turkish affairs but should profit by them. The editor remarks that the failure of Turkey to protect Tripoli from Italian aggressions was due to her weakness and to the lack of foresight on the part of her statesmen, and he urges that this should teach Indians to be most scrupulous in the discharge of their duties towards their country.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th October 1912.

The lesson to be learnt from Turkey.

4. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 16th October 1912 refers to the meeting of Musalmans held in Calcutta to express sympathy with Turkey in her present troubles, and urges the Muhammadans to hold similar meetings in different parts of India and to collect funds for the Turkish sufferers.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 16th October 1912.

The Muslims and Turkey.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th October 1912 says that although the Anglo-Russian Convention guarantees the integrity and independence of Persia, Russia has infringed the terms of the Convention in occupying the northern portion of Persia. The editor considers that the British Government has betrayed lamentable weakness in not opposing the aggressive policy of Russia in Persia and in not compelling her to abide by the terms of the Convention. He observes that Persia cannot be said to be independent when she cannot employ servants of her own choice, utilize the loans she has raised or convene her National Assembly without the permission of the Russian Government. He remarks that all this shows that Western civilization, notwithstanding its wonderful progress in the material world, still fosters a very low standard of morality.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th October 1912.

The situation in Persia.

(b)—Home.

6. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 8th October 1912 (received on the 14th October), refers to the opinion expressed by Capital (Calcutta) that the writer of the article on Pan-Islamism in the Times (London) was Sir John Hewett and

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 notes with regret that the European Powers are apparently hostile to Asiatic countries at the present moment. The editor refers to the obstacles put by Britain and Germany in the way of China's raising a loan, and remarks that England's action in the matter justifies the conclusion that she is trying to extend her influence in Tibet. He expresses regret that England, the home of freedom, should have thus tarnished her fair name by retarding the growth of a republic in China.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

Asiatic countries and the European Powers.

He next refers to the unsolicited intervention of England and Russia in Persian affairs, and dwells on the atrocities committed by Russia in Persia. He considers that the British Government is partly responsible for these atrocities, as, in his opinion, Russia could not have perpetuated them without the moral support of England.

He says that the agitation of the European Powers to secure autonomy for the Balkan provinces of Turkey at a time when she is at war with Italy, is characteristic of the aggressive policy of the Powers towards weaker and non-Christian countries.

In conclusion he observes that the demand of the European Powers for the grant of autonomy to Macedonia and Albania will be justifiable only when they have conceded self-government to the races they themselves govern.

2. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 refers to the atrocities committed by Englishmen on the native labourers working on their rubber plantations in Peru, and inquires why Western historians, who speak with horror of the love of ancient oriental rulers for bull-fighting, close their eyes to the misdeeds of their own countrymen.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

The atrocities in Peru.

3. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 13th October 1912 says that Indians should not merely take an academic interest in Turkish affairs but should profit by them. The editor remarks that the failure of Turkey to protect Tripoli from Italian aggressions was due to her weakness and to the lack of foresight on the part of her statesmen, and he urges that this should teach Indians to be most scrupulous in the discharge of their duties towards their country.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th October 1912.

The lesson to be learnt from Turkey.

4. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 16th October 1912 refers to the meeting of Musalmans held in Calcutta to express sympathy with Turkey in her present troubles, and urges the Muhammadans to hold similar meetings in different parts of India and to collect funds for the Turkish sufferers.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 16th October 1912.

The Muslims and Turkey.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th October 1912 says that although the Anglo-Russian Convention guarantees the integrity and independence of Persia, Russia has infringed the terms of the Convention in occupying the northern portion of Persia. The editor considers that the British Government has betrayed lamentable weakness in not opposing the aggressive policy of Russia in Persia and in not compelling her to abide by the terms of the Convention. He observes that Persia cannot be said to be independent when she cannot employ servants of her own choice, utilize the loans she has raised or convene her National Assembly without the permission of the Russian Government. He remarks that all this shows that Western civilization, notwithstanding its wonderful progress in the material world, still fosters a very low standard of morality.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th October 1912.

The situation in Persia.

6. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 8th October 1912 (received on the 14th October), refers to the opinion expressed by Capital (Calcutta) that the writer of the article on Pan-Islamism in the Times (London) was Sir John Hewett and expresses regret that a responsible officer like Sir John should have published such an objectionable article.

AL BASHIR, 8th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

He advises Sir John Hewett to vindicate himself by bringing a defamation suit against Capital and suggests that until Sir John proves his innocence, his pension should be withheld.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 9th October 1912.

The political policy of Muhammadans.

7. Shams-ul-Ulma Maulvi Shibli Nomani contributes an article to the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 9th October 1912 (received on the 14th October), in which he condemns the present political policy of the Muhammadans and says that the leaders of the Muhammadans are ignorant of the correct meaning of politics. He compares the resolutions passed at the various sittings of the All-India National Congress with those passed at the meetings of the Muslim League and expresses regret that the members of the Muslim League should have discussed only communal subjects and should have avoided topics that concern the country at large.

He urges the need for extending the sphere of influence of the Muslim League and suggests that the executive committee of the League should be purged of zamindars and taluqdars and that it should be composed of persons of independent views and moral courage.

In conclusion he appeals to his co-religionists to improve their relations with the Hindus and to diffuse political education amongst the masses.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

Political prisoners in the Andamans.

8. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 expresses the opinion that the hard labour and rigorous treatment to which Ulaskar Dutt, a political prisoner, has been subjected in the Andamans are responsible for his mental aberration. The editor asks the Government of India to direct a thorough inquiry into the matter and to liberate Ulaskar Dutt in view of the precarious state of his health.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th October 1912.

The revised United Provinces Council regulations.

9. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 notes with regret that the revised Council regulations have not removed any of the inequalities under which the Hindus of these provinces suffer, and remarks that Sir John Hewett's last act will long be remembered as it clearly shows his inner feelings towards the rights and aspirations of the people.

LEADER, 11th October 1912.

The Bombay Legislative Council.

10. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 11th October 1912 considers that the non-official members of the Bombay Council have not fully exercised the new rights given them under the Councils Act of 1909. The editor congratulates the Council on the Improvement Trust Amendment Bill, but in regard to the extension of college education he observes that the Presidency has not been fairly treated. He deplores the rejection of the Hon'ble Mr. R. P. Karandikar's resolution regarding the local cess on excise revenue, and urges that, in view of the enormous increase in excise revenue, Government should enhance the compensation it pays to district boards for the loss of this cess.

The consumption of chandu and cocaine at Allahabad.

11. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th October 1912 again refers to the increased consumption of cocaine and chandu (an opium preparation) at Allahabad, particularly in the Ahiyapur ward, and urges that the best way of putting an end to this evil is to offer rewards for the arrest of all unlicensed dealers in cocaine and chandu. The editor observes that the amount of these rewards should be deducted from the pay of the head constables and sub-inspectors who fail to bring the offenders to book.

12. The editor of the Independent (Allahabad) in the issue of the 14th October 1912 complains of the unhealthy condition of the streets and roads in Allahabad city and of the dirty drains in the Badshahi mandi ward, and expresses regret that the members of the municipal board do not pay proper attention to the improvement of the sanitary conditions of the city. INDEPENDENT, 14th October 1912.

The Allahabad Municipality.

13. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th October 1912 publishes an article contributed by Pandit Indra Narayan Dwivedi in which he finds fault with the Allahabad District Muslim League for complaining that the Allahabad District Board neglects Muhammadan interests, and does not employ a sufficiently large number of Muhammadans in its Education department. He admits that there are few Muhammadans on the teaching and inspecting staff of the Board, but he urges that Muhammadans themselves are to blame for this, as they are unwilling to enter a department where they cannot increase their incomes by illegal means. He maintains that the number of Muhammadan teachers in village schools is by no means small and that qualified Muhammadans are not available for employment in tahsili schools. He ridicules the Muslim League for its preposterous demands and suggests that a district Hindu sabha should be established to lay before Government and the public the correct version of the misrepresentations made by the Muhammadans. ABHYUDAYA, 17th October 1912.

The Allahabad District Board.

(e)—Education.

14. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 10th October 1912 (received on the 12th October), advises the Hindus to accept the Government decision in regard to the University question, and to establish a residential university for the present. The editor considers that when the proposed university will have proved its worth, Government will grant it powers of affiliation. ANAND, 10th October 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

15. The Sahifa (Bijnor) of the 12th October 1912 (received on the 16th October), reproves Hindus and Muhammadans for their despondent attitude regarding the Hindu and Muslim Universities and urges them to continue their efforts to secure independent universities. SAHIFA, 12th October 1912.

The proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities and affiliation.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 13th October 1912 expresses the hope that Government will give due effect to the suggestions made by Lieutenant-Colonel Atkinson and Mr. Dawson by making Technical and Engineering Colleges more useful and practical. The editor suggests that Government should also take into consideration the question of providing employment for those who have already passed out of the Technical and Engineering institutions in India. The Benares Town Hall and public meetings

18. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 17th October 1912 joins the Tribune (Lahore) in protesting against the refusal of the District Magistrate of Benares to allow Lala Lajpat Rai to use the Town Hall. The editor considers that neither as the chairman of the municipality nor as District Magistrate can he legally prevent an ordinary public meeting being held in the Town Hall, his powers being limited to the suppression of a seditious meeting or of an unlawful assembly.

He urges that as the question is one of the utmost public importance, Government should be asked to settle it.

V.—Legislation.

MASHRIQ, 8th October 1912.

The Wakf Validation Bill.

19. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 8th October 1912 (received on the 11th October), publishes a contributed article in which the writer urges Government not to allow the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah's waqf Bill to become law as it would interfere with the religious liberties of the Muhammadans.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 9th October 1912.

The Bill for the protection of minor girls.

20. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 9th October 1912 (received on the 14th October), publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses gratification at the introduction of the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy's Bill for the protection of minor girls, and urges Indians to support it unanimously so as to ensure its becoming law.

ADVOCATE, 17th October 1912.

The proposed Bill for the suppression of gambling.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 17th October 1912 welcomes the Bill for the suppression of gambling that the Bengal Government proposes to submit to the Government of India and urges that it should be passed without delay in order to prevent the ruin of innumerable families. The editor suggests that the measure should not be confined to Calcutta only, but should be made applicable to the whole country.

22. The editor of the Tajir (Meerut) in the issue of the 11th October 1912 (received on the 14th October), describes the importance of Juma prayers for Muhammadans, and expresses regret that Fridays have not been recognized by Government as a general Muhammadan holiday.

He urges the necessity for granting two hours' leave to Muhammadan employés in courts and government offices on Fridays.

AL BASHIR. 15th October 1912.

Juma prayers.

23. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue the 15th October 1912 expresses regret that Government has not yet sanctioned two hours' leave to Muhammadans on Fridays to enable them to offer their Juma prayers, and he urges his co-religionists to memoralize Government on the subject and to hold meetings in different parts of India in order to pass resolutions in support of their request. He also urges Government to grant the Muhammadans three days' holiday on the occasions of Id-ul-Fitr and Id-ul-Zuha.

SADDHARM PRACHARAK, 16th October 1912.

The Naini Tal Arya Samaj.

24. The Saddharm Prachárak (Kangri, Bijnor) of the 16th October 1912 publishes a resolution passed by the Bulandshahr Arya Samaj protesting against the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Naini Tal regarding the singing of hymns by the Arya Samaj during the month of Ramzan, and asking the Lieutenant Governor to declare the order illegal.

The editor suggests that the Naini Tal Arya Samaj or the United Provinces representative Arya Samaj association should seek redress by preferring an appeal against the order in the Allahabad High Court.

ADVOCATE, 17th October 1912.

The need for an All-India Hindu Association.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 17th October 1912 says that a committee will be convened in connection with the forthcoming session of the Punjab Hindu Sabha at Delhi to discuss the question of starting an All-India Hindu Association with Delhi as its head quarters. The editor considers that the formation of such an association is absolutely necessary to safeguard particular Hindu interests and to take up social problems relating to the moral, educational and material advancement of the Hindu community. He expresses himself in favour of the movement, but only if there are public-spirited Hindus willing to devote themselves to the organization and if funds are available. He observes that great care should be taken in selecting a leader for the new movement and that the man finally selected should have the confidence of the people and the State alike. He expresses the hope that a sufficiently large number of middle class Hindus will go to Delhi to take part in the deliberations of the committee.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 16th October 1912 (received on the 22nd October), observes that England should consult her own interests by maintaining the integrity and independence of the Persian Empire. The editor considers that the intention of Russia is to extend her dominions to the Persian Gulf with the ultimate object of invading India. He therefore advises Sir Edward Grey not to allow further Russian aggressions in Persia.

AL KHALIL, 16th October 1912.

The situation in Persia.

2. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 17th October 1912 (received on the 22nd October), bewails the lot of the Muhammadan kingdoms of the world, and asserts that the Balkan war is the result of Christian animosity towards Islam. The editor, however, considers that this war will be beneficial to Turkey as it will heal the bitter differences between the opposing parties in the State, and will revive the martial spirit of the people and will give a renewed lease of life to young Turkey. He notes that the operations in Tripoli gave no scope for the military ardour of the Turks, but he expresses confidence that now that the seat of war has been transferred nearer home, Turkey will be able to display her military prowess to the full.

KAISER-I-HIND, 17th October 1912.

The Balkan war.

3. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 22nd October 1912 expresses dissatisfaction at the terms on which Turkey has concluded peace with Italy. The editor, however, admits that Turkey was placed in a difficult position by the declaration of war by the Balkan Confederacy and had to submit to the terms proposed by Italy.

AL BASHIR, 22nd October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He expresses confidence that the Arabs will fight for the independence of Tripoli, and that Turkey will again turn her attention to Tripoli when the Balkan war is over. In conclusion he appeals to Indian Muhammadans not to withhold their sympathy from Turkey in the present crisis.

In the same issue the editor ridicules an article that appeared in the Pioneer (Allahabad) praising Italy's prowess and attributing peace to Italy's military successes in Tripoli.

4. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 23rd October 1912 considers that Turkey has betrayed the Arabs of Tripoli by concluding peace with Italy. The editor thinks that the Arabs will not submit tamely to Italian domination, and says that all the horrors of war will be repeated in Tripoli.

OUDH AKHBAR, 23rd October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He points out that Turkey has now lost much of her prestige in the eyes of the Muslim world, and he expresses apprehension lest Yemen will also pass out of her hands.

5. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 23rd October 1912 expresses agreement with the view of His Highness the Agha Khan that the Muhammadans of India should for the present postpone all their national movements and make every possible effort to help their Turkish brethren in their trouble.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 23rd October 1912.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

He urges his co-religionists to organize committees in different parts of the country for the collection of funds to relieve the distress of the widows and orphans of the Turks wounded and killed in the Balkan war, and he also urges them to hold meetings to protest against the Balkan Committee formed in London with the object of helping the Balkan States.

Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 22nd October 1912 publishes a similar article, and urges Government to withdraw all British officers from the Greek Fleet.

AL BASHIR, 22nd October 1912.

(b)—Home.

6. A correspondent who signs himself "M. A. Wadood from Allahabad" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 17th October 1912, in which he condemns the article on Pan-Islamism and the Amir of Kabul that appeared in the Times (London). He admits, however, that recent events in Morocco, Tripoli, Egypt and the Balkans have convinced the Muslims that Islam is in peril, but he considers that it is only natural that Indian Muslims should sympathize with their co-religionists in other countries. He expresses the opinion that Pan-Islamism is a growing movement, but he assures the Hindus that it will but strengthen the cause of Indian nationalism.

LEADER, 17th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

AL MUSHIR, 18th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

7. Referring to a statement in Capital (Calcutta) to the effect that Sir John Hewett was the author of the article on "Pan-Islamism and the Amir of Kabul," that appeared in the Times (London), Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 18th October 1912 (received on the 22nd October), notes that Sir John has injured the cause of Muhammadanism by publishing this article as it must cause the Muhammadans to be veiwed with distrust. The editor condemns the publication of articles of this nature which in his opinion tend to still further widen the breach between the rulers and the ruled.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th and 14th October 1912.

Referring to the same subject the editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly) in the combined issue of the 7th and the 14th October 1912 (received on the 25th October), says that it is unworthy of Sir John Hewett to have made such an unfounded attack on the Indian Muhammadan community.

He expresses regret that in spite of having spent the best part of his life in India, Sir John still misunderstands Muhammadans.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

8. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 19th October 1912 denies the existence of any Pan-Islamic movement in India or elsewhere, and in support of his contention says that if a Pan-Islamic movement really existed, Russian atrocities in Persia and French and Italian aggressions in northern Africa would have been impossible.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

9. The editor of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) in the issue of the 21st October 1912 remarks that if Sir John Hewett was the writer of the article on Pan-Islamism in India that appeared in the Times (London) he should not have been created a Lieutenant Governor as he was obviously too prejudiced to administer the affairs of a province impartially.

RAHBAR, 14th October 1912.

The working of the Press Act.

10. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 14th October 1912 (received on the 17th October), protests against the action taken by Government against the Punjab Advocate (Mianwali), and considers that in view of the fact that it is the only paper that represents the grievances of the Hindus of the North-West Frontier Province, its publication should not be stopped.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 18th October 1912.

Council regulations.

11. The editor of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) in the issue of the 18th October 1912 (received on the 22nd October), expresses regret that the Kumaun division is to remain unrepresented in the local Council.

He asserts that the people of the Kumaun division are in no way inferior in intellectual attainments to those of the other parts of the province, and he urges Government to nominate a deserving person from the division to the Council.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th October 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

12. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 19th October 1912 expresses regret at the growing tension of feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans, and suggests that both communities should co-operate in demanding independent universities, in encouraging the swadeshi movement, and in boycotting foreign goods.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 23rd October 1912.

The Indian National Congress and the Muslim League.

13. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 23rd October 1912 publishes an article from the pen of "AN EDUCATED MUHAMMADAN," in which the writer compares the ideals, aims and objects of the Muslim League with those of the Indian National Congress, and expresses regret that the ideals of the Muslim League do not create in the Muhammadans a zeal for the improvement of their condition.

He considers that the low ideals of the League are responsible for the growing effiminacy of Muhammadans, and he urges the members of the League to effect a complete change in its constitution, to adopt the ideals of the Congress, and to put the resolutions passed at the meetings of the League into practical effect.

14. A correspondent who signs himself "An able and experienced police officer" contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 17th October 1912 (received on the 22nd October), in which he suggests that in cases in which the accused are named by the complainants the police should take no action beyond sending the case to the magistrate and seeing that the witnesses on both sides attend court. He considers that this procedure would bring about a considerable decrease in the number of false charges, as the complainants under these circumstances would be more liable to prosecution for perjury.

Police reform.

KAISER-I-HIND, 17th October 1912.

He thinks that the attention of the police should be confined to the prevention of crime and to the investigation of cases in which the names of offenders are not known. He says that the police should never try to collect evidence by show of force but should always conduct their inquiries as unostentatiously as possible.

He expresses the opinion that if his suggestions are adopted, bribery, dishonesty and oppression will be gradually eliminated from police administration.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment affairs.

15. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of the 16th October 1912 (received on the 24th October), appeals to the educated Hindus of Agra to reform the condition of the municipality, and suggests that the inefficient members of the municipal board should be replaced by better men at the next elections.

The Agra Municipality.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 16th October 1912.

16. The editor of the Nasim-i-Agra in the issue of the 19th October 1912 complains of the dilapidated state of the municipal buildings in Agra, and says that the public latrines are in a disgraceful condition.

The Agra Municipality.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th October 1912.

He attributes this state of affairs to the carelessness of the present secretary-engineer, and suggests that his services should be dispensed with.

17. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th October 1912 publishes comparative death-rate statistics of the larger towns of the United Provinces to show the insanitary condition of Benares city, and concludes with the following remarks :—

The Benares Municipality.

LEADER, 18th October 1912.

"It is time that the municipal board of Benares bestirred itself resolutely to tackle the situation and improve its sanitation by embarking upon a comprehensive scheme of town improvement. We would also draw the attention of the Government to the sorry condition of public health in that town, in spite of its improved drainage and water works, and to the necessity of relieving congestion in it."

(e)—Education.

18. The editor of the Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) in the combined issue for August and September 1912 (received on the 18th October), advises Hindus to accept the charter outlined by Government for the proposed Hindu University, and he expresses the opinion that agitation regarding the question of affiliation is mere waste of time.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, August and September 1912.

The editor of the Tyagi Brahman (Meerut) in the issue for September 1912 (received on the 22nd October), expresses a similar opinion, but insists that all existing schools and colleges within the city of Benares should be affiliated to the Hindu University.

TYAGI BRAHMAN, September 1912.

LEADER, 19th October 1912.

Primary education.

19. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th October 1912 takes exception to the closing of a large number of primary schools in the Benares district, and considers that this step is opposed to the educational policy of Government.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, August and September 1912.

Forest administration in Kumaun.

20. The editor of the Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) in the combined issue for August and September 1912 (received on the 18th October), regrets to note that the administration of the forests in Kumaun has now been entrusted to the forest authorities. He expresses apprehension lest the villagers may not be treated with due consideration by the forest authorities, and he urges Government to devise means to protect their interests.

(g)—General.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, August and September 1912.

Government servants at Pauri.

21. The editor of the Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) in the combined issue for August and September 1912 (received on the 18th October), asserts that the cost of living at Pauri is high, and he considers that the government servants in the locality should be given extra allowances.

LEADER, 18th October 1912.

Patronage and public appointments.

22. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th October 1912 concludes its leading article entitled "Patronage and public appointments" with the following remarks:—

"The point is that so long as the public service is not freed from the taint of patronage—and this can never be done so long as some sort of competitive test for admission to the public service is not insisted upon—the men in the service cannot be relied upon to show independence of judgment and power of taking the initiative which are as much necessary for administrative efficiency as a proper sense of duty and official discipline. A spirit of subserviency which alone can be the result of what is euphemistically called the principle of selection can never elevate the status of an Indian officer, and an officer recruited in this way and looking for his promotion to the same means can never command the same respect either from his European colleagues or his subordinates as a competition walah can."

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th October 1912.

Muhammadans and commerce.

23. A correspondent who signs himself "AHMAD HUSAIN KKAN RAHAT FROM BOMBAY" contributes an article to the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th October 1912, in which he expresses regret that educated Muhammadans seek government service and discard trade. He urges his co-religionists to develop indigenous industries and to devote their energies to trade.

LEADER, 22nd October 1912.

Plague and the United Provinces Government.

24. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd October 1912 protests against the indifference hitherto shown by the Local Government in adopting measures for the prevention of plague. The editor asserts that during recent years much better work was done in this respect in the Central Provinces and the Punjab, and he urges the United Provinces Government to adopt timely measures to arrest the spread of plague this year.

I.—Politics.

1. One Bala Ji from Tokio contributes an article entitled "The Japanese national day" to the Maryada (Allahabad) for September and October 1912, in which the following passage occurs:— MARYADA, September and October 1912.

The Japanese national day.

"The 14th of March 1868 marks the rise of modern Japan . . . Prior to this date the Japanese had a bandage on their eyes which they had put on with their own hands. They had tied their hands, and had fettered their legs, with the result that clever crows and vultures began to peck at her (Japan) and she was unable through her ignorance and helplessness to protect herself. On this day Japan awoke, tore away the bandage from her eyes, burst her bonds, overcome her weakness and drove away these vultures (foreigners) . . .

This day heralds the decline of Europeans and the regeneration of the Asiatics."

2. The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) in the issue for October 1912 (received on the 2nd November), expresses dissatisfaction with the terms on which Turkey has concluded peace in Tripoli, but admits that the situation in the Balkans to some extent justified her doing so. He points out that this peace has marred the prospects of Muslim ascendancy in Africa, as the African tribes will not in future be able to get rifles and ammunition through Tripoli. He attributes the Balkan war to Christian fanaticism, and appeals to all Moslems and Asiatics to help Turkey in what he calls the last struggle between Europe and Asia, between Christianity and Islam. URDU-I-MUALLA, October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He is glad to note that the Hindu Press has shown great enthusiasm for the Turkish cause.

In conclusion he appeals to Indian Muhammadans to boycott all European goods.

3. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 23rd October 1912 (received on the 28th October), expresses disappointment at the terms on which Turkey has concluded peace with Italy, and accuses Turkey of selling the independence of Tripoli. The editor considers that Turkey's action in the matter will alienate the sympathy of the whole Muslim world from her. MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 23rd October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

The Sahifa (Bijnor) of the 26th October 1912 expresses similar views on the subject. SAHIFA, 26th October 1912.

The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 24th October 1912 (received on the 28th October), points out that Turkey will be placed in a very awkward position if she has to help Italy to wrest Tripoli from the Arabs. NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th October 1912.

Referring to the Balkan war, the editor considers that the only true friend of Turkey is England, and he says that Indian Muhammadans should be grateful to her for her prompt declaration of neutrality. He appeals to his co-religionists to subscribe liberally for the relief of the distressed and wounded in Turkey.

4. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 24th October 1912 (received on the 28th October), considers that the situation in the Balkans fully justified Turkey in accepting the terms of peace offered by Italy. The editor, however, considers that Turkey in all probability advised Sheikh Sennoussi and the Arabs to fight for the independence of Tripoli. ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 25th October 1912 (received on the 28th October), expresses similar views, and says that the Arabs will never permit the Italians to penetrate any further into Tripoli. AL MUSHIR, 25th October 1912.

5. The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow) in the issue of the 28th October 1912 takes exception to the conclusion of peace between Italy and Turkey, and says that the Turks have done a great wrong to the Arabs by making peace with the Italians. TAFRIH, 28th October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

He considers that the unjustifiable action of the Turks in making peace will alienate the sympathy of the Arabs of the Hedjaz and Yemen, and he thinks that both these countries will soon come under the protection of one of the European Powers.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 30th October 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

6. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 30th October 1912 takes exception to the conclusion of peace between Italy and Turkey, and remarks that the peace will lower the prestige of the Turks in the eyes of the Arabs and of Muhammadans in general and that the Arabs in other parts of the Turkish Dominions will gradually throw off the Turkish yoke. The editor, however, expresses the hope that the Turks have not recognized the Italian sovereignty over Tripoli, and that the Tripolitain Arabs will continue to fight against the Italians.

Writing in the same issue Sardar Muhammad Aslam Khan Baluch, editor, Al Mu'in (Amritsar), expresses regret that Turkey has concluded peace with Italy, and says that Turkey has betrayed the Arabs in Tripoli and has alienated the sympathy of the whole Muslim world by her action. He urges Indian Muhammadans to boycott the Turks who have proved themselves treacherous to Islam.

The editor of the Muslim Gazette deplores the tone of this article, and contends that the grave situation in the Balkans compelled Turkey to conclude peace. In conclusion he urges Indian Muhammadans not to adopt a suicidal policy by withdrawing their sympathy from Turkey.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th October 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

7. Saiyid Raza Ali, B.A., LL.B., of Moradabad, contributes an article to the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 26th October 1912, in which he deplores the situation in Morocco and Persia, and says that if Turkey is defeated by the Balkan Confederacy, the Muhammadans will be in the position of a subject race throughout the world. He suggests that besides contributing for the relief of the distressed and wounded in Turkey, India should send eight or ten thousand young Muhammadan volunteers to assist Turkey. He expresses confidence that Government will not object to Indian Muhammadans volunteering for service in Turkey, but in case Government is not prepared to allow this, he suggests that those who want to fight for Turkey should leave India without disclosing their destination.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 30th October 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 30th October 1912 publishes Mr. Shaukat Ali's appeal for Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

In the same issue Dr. Abdul Hakim of Rampur appeals for funds for the Red Crescent Society of Constantinople.

The editor supports both these appeals, and urges Muhammadan youths, who know how to shoot, to proceed to Constantinople. He contends that the raising of a body of volunteers in India for service in Turkey will in no way embarrass England as regards the policy of neutrality to which she is pledged, and he expresses confidence that Government will not prevent Indian Muhammadans from volunteering to serve with the Turkish colours.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 31st October 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

9. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 31st October 1912 (received on the 2nd November), urges Indian Muhammadans to proceed to Turkey as volunteers. The editor says that the funds that have been collected for the proposed Muslim University should be utilized for helping wounded and distressed Muhammadan volunteers. In case Government refuses to permit the enlistment of volunteers, he suggests that this money should be given to the wandering Bedouin Arab tribes on condition that they fight for Turkey.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 30th October 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

10. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 30th October 1912 takes exception to the Pioneer's commendation of Italian diplomacy and military strategy in the Italian-Turkish war, and adversely criticizes the article entitled "The Balkan war and Asia" published in the Englishman (Calcutta). The editor denies the existence of any real Pan-Islamic movement in India, and urges his co-religionists to revive among themselves the brotherly feeling which is enjoined upon them by their religion.

He says that if Pan-Islamism had really been in existence in India, the Indian Muhammadans would have contributed a much larger sum to the Turkish Relief Fund at a time when they saw that Christian Europe officially and unofficially was rendering help to the Balkans.

11. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 29th October 1912 (received on the 1st November), publishes Sheikh Ahmad Ali Kidwai's appeal for funds for the Turkish Red Crescent Society. The editor lends his support to the appeal, and reminds Indian Muhammadans of the help they gave to Turkey in the war of 1877.

MASHRIQ, 29th October 1912.

Subscriptions for the Turkish Red Crescent Society.

12. The editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette in the issue of the 23rd October 1912 (received on the 28th October), says that the Balkan States could not have declared war against Turkey if they had not been secretly instigated to do so and promised support by some of the European Powers.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 23rd October 1912.

The Balkan war.

He refers to the proclamation of the Balkan States that the war in which they are engaged is "a new crusade," and he considers that as the struggle has now resolved itself into a religious war, the Turks will fight with all the fanaticism of their race and the Muhammadans of the East will be drawn into it.

He cordially agrees with His Highness the Agha Khan that the Muhammadans of India should render every possible help to their Turkish brethren, and he urges them to collect funds for the relief of the widows and orphans of the Turks wounded and killed in the war.

He appeals to England to help Turkey, and says that she will but consult her own interests by doing so.

13. The Musáfir (Agra) of the 25th October 1912 (received on the 28th October), ridicules the contention that the action of the Balkan Confederacy against Turkey is influenced by religious motives. The editor asserts that the Christian nations of the present day are very tolerant in religious matters, and he considers that the Balkan war has been caused by religious fanaticism and cruelty on the part of the Turks.

MUSAFIR, 25th October 1912.

The Balkan war.

14. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 29th October 1912 says that when the Balkan States openly declare that their present war is "a new Christian crusade against Turkey" it is no wonder that Indian Muhammadans express sympathy for their Turkish brethren. The editor urges his co-religionists to curtail their expenses and to contribute to the Turkish Relief Fund.

AL BASHIR, 29th October 1912.

The Balkan war.

He discountenances the idea of Indian Muhammadans going out to Turkey as volunteers, but urges the need for pecuniary help for the Turkish sufferers.

He objects to the sending of false reports by Reuter to India about Turkish reverses, and remarks that such reports cause resentment and indignation amongst the Muhammadans.

15. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 30th October 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer says that the Balkan States could not have declared war against Turkey if they had not been instigated to do so by Russia and Austria. He expresses apprehension lest the present war may develop into a European conflagration, and he says that if this is the case and England helps Russia against Turkey, she will incur the odium of the Muhammadan subjects in all her possessions.

16. Referring to the article on "Pan-Islamism and the Amir of Kabul" that appeared in the Times (London) the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 26th October 1912 regrets to note that the sympathy shown by Indian Muhammadans for their distressed co-religionists in Tripoli and Persia has been misconstrued into a dangerous Pan-Islamic movement. The editor asserts that Indian Muhammadans are loyal, and in support of his contention, instances their calm attitude on the question of the Muslim University and on the annulment of the partition of Bengal. He enquires of the writer in the Times whether human nature can possibly withhold sympathy from the victims of barbarous cruelties practised in Tripoli and Persia, and expresses surprise that Indian Muhammadans are taken to task for showing such sympathy.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

In conclusion he thanks Professor Vambery for showing the worthlessness of the opinion of the writer of the article in question.

Pan-Islamism in India.

17. Referring to the article in the Times (London) on "Pan-Islamism and the Amir of Kabul" the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 29th October 1912 (received on the 1st November), enquires whether the writer of this article can refer to any occasion when the Muhammadan states were influenced by Pan-Islamism to combine against a Christian power. The editor asserts that Pan-Islamism is not a political or military movement, but is purely religious in character. He denounces the idea that the Muhammadans are a fanatical and bigoted race, and he says that history will show that Christians have been more influenced by religion than Muhammadans. He considers that the Pan-Islamic movement which aims at the social, moral and religious uplifting of the Muhammadans of the world, should command the sympathy of every right-minded Christian and Hindu.

LEADER, 30th October 1912.

Talukdars and Council election.

18. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 30th October 1912 blames Sir James Meston for what it calls his unsolicited intervention in the election of the representative of the British Indian Association. The editor further takes exception to the appointment of the Chief Secretary and the Commissioner as members of the sub-committee formed to nominate the representative of the Association. He considers that instead of the British Indian Association, all zamindars of Oudh who satisfy the tests that have been imposed in the case of the Agra landholders, should form the electorate and that a free choice should be allowed. In conclusion he urges that officials should have no part in elections of any description.

LEADER, 1st November 1912.

The Council Regulations.

19. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st November 1912 complains that the number of voters in the general electorate in the United Provinces is smaller than in the Muhammadan or in the landholder electorate and that 287 voting delegates out of whom 197 are representatives of the district (rural) boards cannot be said to represent the community. The editor further points out that 78 out of the 287 delegates are Muhammadans, though Muhammadans form only 14 per cent. of the population and have a separate electorate of their own. He also takes exception to the plurality of votes enjoyed by landholders, and he urges that the same individual should not be elected as a voting delegate by a municipal and by a district board.

ADVOCATE, 31st October 1912.

An executive council for the United Provinces.

20. Referring to the rumour that the United Provinces are to be given an executive council at an early date, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 31st October 1912 expresses the hope that Lord MacDonnell and Lord Curzon will not oppose the creation of the council. The editor contends that the United Provinces have a greater claim to an executive council than the backward provinces of Behar and Orissa, and he considers that in view of the fact that Sir James Meston is in favour of an executive council its creation should not be delayed any longer.

MARYADA, September and October 1912.

The regeneration of India.

21. The Maryada (Allahabad) for September and October 1912 publishes an article contributed by Lala Lajpat Rai on "The obstacles in the way of the progress of Hindus." The writer attributes the general failure of the Hindus to achieve success in life to their belief in the unreality of the world, and he considers that this baneful doctrine has induced diffidence and pessimism in their character to such an extent as to wholly incapacitate them for national progress.

He refers to the efforts of Raja Ram Mohan Roy, and urges the Hindu leaders to devise means to improve the national character of their community and to infuse fresh hope and a spirit of self-reliance into their people.

URDU-I-MUALLA, October 1912.

Mr. Tilak's release.

23. The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) in the issue for October 1912 (received on the 2nd November), publishes the proceedings of a meeting held on the 27th October at Achal Talab, Aligarh.

The meeting was presided over by the editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla and was addressed by him and by Babu Anandeo Prasad Ghazipuri, Honorary Secretary, United Provinces Nationalist Association. The city inspector with constables in uniform was present to preserve order. The Superintendent of Police passed by in his motor during the meeting. There was a fair attendance, and considerable cheering and shouting of Bande mataram.

Resolutions urging the release of Mr. Tilak and Ulaskar Datt and asking for the better treatment of political prisoners and condemning the anti-Asiatic religious war declared by the Balkan Confederacy against Turkey were passed.

It was also proposed that a Tilak Release Fund be opened with a view to enable Mr. Anandeo Prasad Ghazipuri to tour through the province in order to hold similar meetings with a view to securing the release of Mr. Tilak.

24. The Maryada (Allahabad) for September and October 1912 publishes a short article on Ireland by Pandit Debi Dutt Dwivedi. The following passage occurs in the prefatory remarks:—

"England, Ireland and Scotland, these three countries form the United Kingdom of Great Britain. England conquered the last two countries, because might is right.

He who fears death dies or is killed. The countries whose inhabitants fight with the knowledge that they have been born only to die and to serve their country still enjoy independence, as in the case of Japan, whereas people who sheltered themselves in their houses through fear were crushed and their descendants became serfs and died of starvation."

TAJIR, 11th October 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

26. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 11th October 1912 complains that the Hindus who are predominant in every part of the country oppress the Muhammadans and are gradually dispossessing them of their mosques and burial grounds. The editor says that the Hindus do not allow the Muhammadans to represent their grievances to the authorities, and that when Muhammadans have recourse to the press to ventilate these grievances, action is taken against them under the Press Act.

In conclusion he expresses the opinion that it is unjust to impute disloyalty or to attribute Pan-Islamic feelings to the Muhammadans who represent the just grievances of their co-religionists to Government.

Continuing the subject in the issue of the 25th October 1912 (received on the 31st October), the editor reproduces an article from the Zamindar (Lahore), in which Hindus were said to be oppressing Muhammadans and to have prevented them from laying their grievances before the authorities. He refuses to believe that the growing bitterness of feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans is due to cow-killing alone, and referring to the book entitled, Beef in Ancient India by Dr. Rajendra Lal Mitra, L.L.D., he remarks that when Hindus are not only allowed but are also enjoined by the Vedas to kill cows for religious purposes (as proved by Dr. Mitra in his book) it is wrong to believe that they hate Muhammadans simply because they kill cows.

LEADER, 31st October 1912.

Indian autonomy and progress.

27. Saiyid Wazir Husain contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 31st October 1912, in which he contends that most of the criticism against the Indian demand for "self-government on colonial lines" is due to the absence of a clearly defined scheme of self-government, and he urges the formulation of such a scheme at an early date. He considers that in order to meet Lord Crewe's objections the scheme should ensure the presence of British troops and officials in India.

He appeals for greater co-operation between the different communities in India, and he insists that the interests of the minorities should be adequately protected. He further suggests that the work of mass education and social and hygienic reforms should be taken in hand and vigorously pushed forward.

ARYA MITRA, 1st November 1912.

New Delhi.

28. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st November 1912 has the following :—

"Lord Hardinge, accompanied by Indian Chiefs, will make his entry into Delhi with great éclat on the 23rd December this year. Fireworks manufacturers have been summoned from London and great preparations are being made. It is estimated that the cost of building new Delhi will be fifty crores of rupees. If unfortunate Indians are dying of starvation, let them die. If the Goddess of Famine assumes a fearful aspect and wants to devour India, don't heed or talk of it. Let there be no hindrance at all to the amusements and recreation of Europeans. This is the policy in which your well-being consists.

The editor asks the Muslim League and the Muhammadan press to address Government on the matter.

30. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 31st October 1912 considers that the sentence of one year's imprisonment passed on Mr. Arnold in the Burma Critic defamation case was unduly severe. 34. He sees no reason why Government should insist that the proposed University should be called the University of Aligarh as he is unable to understand why the denomination of the Muslim University or the power of affiliation should set it at variance with any of the existing universities.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 30th October 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

Discussing the various reasons given by Government for not accepting the Muhammadan idea of a university, he maintains that the establishment of a Muhammadan University will raise the standard of education throughout the country. "I do not understand why hatred for Aurangzeb has so blinded the non-Muslim press . . . , that it has forgotten the deeds of its ancestors and is bent on wounding the feelings (of Muhammadans).

Will those who stigmatize Muhammadans as bigoted and biased take no notice of the faithlessness, vulgar abuses and quarrels of the non-Muslims . . . who are led by religious fanaticism to abuse Aurangzeb . . . who was born of a Hindu mother . . . the Hindus are called civilized and faithful even if they indulge in abuse . . .

In my opinion, if the Hindus are really truth-loving and faithful or loyal they should have refrained from abusing Aurangzeb, considering that he was their sister's son or adopted son. If not, they (Hindus) should have seen that their (Hindus') ancestors were also guilty of the (evil) actions attributed to Aurangzeb by non-Muslim writers. Aurangzeb was not an angel . . . he did not come into this world like Christ, who was the Son of God, and was free from faults. He was after all human . . . When the Rishis and Munis (Hindu saints) themselves were guilty of a thousand faults it was impossible for him (Aurangzeb) to be faultless.

MUSAFIR, 25th October 1912.

The Ram Lila at Deoband.

The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st October 1912 (received on the 28th October), expresses similar views on the subject, and contends that as no Muhammadan festival was being celebrated at the time there was no necessity to prohibit the Ram Lila.

RAHBAR, 21st October 1912.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 5th November 1912 considers that Turkey has generally been very badly treated by the European Powers, and that Russia is the greatest enemy of Islam. The editor invites attention to the British and Russian ambitions in Tibet and Mongolia respectively, and he expresses apprehension that the partition of China is fast approaching. He also refers to the military activity in Afghanistan, and expresses doubts as to the future of this country.

The political outlook.

MASHRIQ, 5th November 1912.

He predicts that the land-hunger of the European Powers will some day lead to a general conflagration that will destroy all science, arts and agriculture and will bring about the birth of a new era.

2. The Anwar-i-Alam (Dehra Dun) of the 24th September 1912 (received on the 7th November), publishes an article entitled "A letter from the Prophet Muhammad to Jesus Christ" which runs as follows:—

Christian Powers and Islam.

ANWAR-I-ALAM, 24th September 1912.

"To-day I wish to make some friendly complaints to You (complaints which have long remained unexpressed in my heart).

I am obliged to invite Your attention to the unjustifiable aggression and cruelty with which Your followers are treating mine.

You are fully aware what an intense love I bear for my followers, so much so that I love them more than I loved my grandsons, Hassan and Hussain, and my daughter, Fatima. Their prosperity is my highest desire and their well-being my chief aim. Their grief is my grief, and their happiness is my joy.

I felt more grief at the slaughter of innocent Muhammadans in Tripoli than I felt at the slaughter of my grandchild, Hussain.

I cannot fully describe what an intense grief I felt at the killing of innocent women and children in Tripoli and of Saqqahul-Islam in Persia.

The throne of my merciful and forbearing God was shaking. Thank God, that at the time God was in a merciful mood. If He had adopted an angry mood (even for a second) no one can foretell what the dire result would have been.

I have been informed that a section of Your followers desire to bombard the Kaaba and my mausoleum. O Italians! do it and do it indeed! O foolish persons! destroy the house of God and my mausoleum and reap the fruit of your misdeeds.

O kind-hearted and good-natured Prophet, is the action of Your followers in Tripoli, Morocco and Persia in accordance with Your teachings? Have You given Your consent to it? No, never! Your sacred teaching "If a person smite thee on the right cheek turn him the left also" is quite contrary to their actions. Well, my dear friend Christ, Your followers have determined to wipe out Islam from the face of the earth, but they should remember that as long as the world lasts Islam will prevail. Short-sighted enemies in their folly think that they can destroy Islam. They will be destroyed themselves. It is one of the articles of my faith, according to the commandment of God, to revere You. Muhammadans are strictly following their commandments, but it is a pity that Your followers openly abuse me, and see how the actions of Your followers differ from those of mine.

I am overwhelmed with grief and wish to curtail my complaints. Please send a reply through Gabriel as soon as possible so that my noble friend (Gabriel) should not be put to unnecessary trouble."

3. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 5th November 1912 deplores the action of Turkey in concluding peace with Italy, and remarks that Turkey has, by betraying the Arabs of Tripoli, alienated the sympathy of the Muslim world from herself. The editor says that, in spite of her guardianship of the holy places of Islam, Turkey will never regain the spiritual leadership of Islam.

The future of Islam.

MASHRIQ. 5th November 1912.

He predicts that Shaikh Sennousi will be the future leader of Islam, and says that the Shaikh may yet teach a severe lesson to the Christian world.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

4. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 6th November 1912 annonuces that it has opened a Balkan Fund, and it makes a stirring appeal to Indian Muhammadans to contribute liberally to this fund. The editor invites attention to the fact that the Balkan confederacy and Christian priests have not hesitated to lend a religious colouring to the Balkan war, and he asserts that the war is in fact the final trial of strength between Islam and Christianity. He dwells at length on the manner in which Turkey has been gradually deprived of her European possessions, and he attributes the action of the Balkan confederacy to a conspiracy to drive out the Turks from Europe. He, however, assures his co-religionists that Turkey will contest every inch of her territory and that the waters of the Bosphorous will be dyed crimson with blood before she consents to abandon Constantinople. He appeals to Indian Muhammadan youths to proceed as volunteers to Turkey, and he urges them not to hesitate to sacrifice their lives for the protection of Islam.

An appeal for volunteers and funds for Turkey.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

5. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 6th November 1912 is glad to note that Muhammadan youths are coming forward in increasing numbers as volunteers for Turkey. The editor reminds his co-religionists that they are descended from a brave, fighting race, and he urges them not to hesitate in sacrificing their lives for the protection of Islam at this critical moment. He says that if Indian Muhammadans do not give practical proof of their valour at this time they will be regarded "as a useless and paralysed limb of the British political body," and he urges that the military spirit that has existed among the Muhammadans for centuries should now be called forth for the defence of the community and the country. He concludes with the following words: "Can it possibly be a matter of pride for the British political body to rule over dead and despondent limbs, even when the only just occasion for pride is when it rules over living, strong and useful members? From this point of view it is necessary that Muhammadans, who form a limb of this empire, should give practical proof of their life, fervour and strength."

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

AL KHALIL, 1st November 1912.

6. The editor of Al Khalil (Bijnor) in the issue of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 4th November), appeals in the name of religion to Indian Muhammadans to proceed to Turkey as volunteers if the British Government permits them to do so.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st November 1912.

The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) in the issue of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 4th November), also appeals to his co-religionists in the name of religion to proceed to Turkey as volunteers, and he says that when Russia has sent £100,000 to relieve the distress of the Christian sufferers in the Balkan war, it is the duty of the Indian Muhammadans to help their Turkish brethren to the best of their ability. In conclusion he asks the British Government to permit Indian Muhammadans to proceed to Turkey as volunteers.

KAISER-I-HIND, 31st October 1912.

The editor of the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) in the issue of the 31st October 1912 (received on the 4th November), congratulates Mr. Shaukat Ali for having stated his intention of going to Turkey as a volunteer, and expresses the hope that other Indian Muhammadans will follow his example.

AL KHALIL, 1st November 1912.

7. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 4th November), blames the young Turks for dethroning Sultan Abdul Hamid, and holds them responsible for the present deplorable situation in Turkey.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor remarks that as soon as Sultan Abdul Hamid was dethroned "the civilized cut-throats of Europe began to attack Turkey with their knives." He asserts that Abdul Hamid is the only person who can overcome the difficulties with which the present Turkish Government is confronted, and he suggests his immediate reinstatement as Sultan.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd November 1912.

8. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 3rd November 1912 expresses surprise at the reported Turkish reverses in the Balkan war and concludes that either the confederacy is secretly getting help from some of the European Powers or the Turks are disgracefully demoralized.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor finds fault with the constitutional government of Turkey, and remarks that, since the inauguration of the constitutional régime, Turkey has been losing one province after another.

He appeals to the patriotic Muhammadans of Turkey in particular and to the Moslem world generally to make efforts to improve the deplorable condition of the Turks, and he expresses the apprehension that if the present state of affairs in Turkey continues for any length of time, independent Muhammadan kingdoms will disappear from the face of the earth.

9. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 3rd November 1912 considers that Turkey has done nothing that merited her being attacked by the Balkan States. The editor asserts that the young Turks have been actuated by a strong desire for progress, but he urges that four years is too short a period in the life of a nation to judge of its achievements. He recounts the difficulties in which Turkey was placed by her internal troubles and her war with Italy, and expresses regret that instead of showing sympathy with her, Christian Europe treated her either with indifference or with opposition. He invites attention to the state of affairs in China, Persia, Turkey, Egypt, Morocco and Tripoli, and remarks that if Asiatic nations want to preserve their political existence they must adapt themselves to altered circumstances and move with the times.

LEADER, 3rd November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

10. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 5th November 1912 blames the young Turks for dethroning Sultan Abdul Hamid and for proclaiming a weak and incapable man as his successor. The editor also holds the young Turks responsible for enlisting Christians in the Army, and remarks that the fall of Kirk Killisa was mainly due to the infidelity of the Christian soldiers.

He takes exception to the appointment of Kamil Pasha as Grand Vazir and deplores the Porte's request to the Powers for mediation.

He considers that the end of the Turkish Empire is at hand, and he remarks that it would have been better for the Turks if they had fought to the last and had not ignominiously asked for peace.

AL BASHIR, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

11. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 5th November 1912 expresses disapproval of Mr. Muhammad Ali's scheme for raising a loan in India for the Turkish Government for which he has obtained the permission of the Viceroy, and says that the Muhammadans of India are too poor to contribute any large amount to Turkey.

He, however, urges his co-religionists to contribute liberally to the Turkish Relief Fund.

AL BASHIR, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

12. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 5th November 1912 says that the Englishman's (Calcutta) editorial note to the effect "that for the continuance of peace in Asia it would be better if Turkey were defeated in the Balkan war" will lead the Indian Muhammadans to think that the European Powers and the British Government are secretly helping the Balkan confederacy to bring about the overthrow of the Ottoman Empire and will create bitter feelings against the English.

The editor says that Indian Muhammadans are quite justified in expressing their sympathy with the Turks, and he urges Government to demand security under the Press Act from the Englishman for causing hatred amongst the Indian Muhammadans against the British Government.

He takes exception to the exciting of religious fanaticism among the people by Christian missionaries in England and to their insinuation that Muhammadans were responsible for the Indian Mutiny of 1857.

In conclusion he says that the aggressive policy of Christian Europe towards Muhammadan kingdoms is the real cause of the spread of the Pan-Islamic movement, and that the European Powers are themselves responsible for the progress the movement has made.

AL BASHIR, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

13. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 5th November 1912 refuses to believe in the reported Turkish reverses, and remarks that the war reports sent out to India are mostly fabricated by Reuter.

MASHRIQ, 5th November 1912.

He says that the Balkan States could not have declared war against Turkey had they not been urged to do so and promised support by the European Powers.

He holds that the Balkan States exist merely through the sufferance of the European Powers, and that if they had been Muhammadan kingdoms the Powers would not have allowed them to retain their independence.

MASHRIQ, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Tripoli.

14. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 5th November 1912 reminds the Tripolitain Arabs of their solemn oath to contest every inch of Tripolitain ground before yielding it to the Italians, and urges them to prefer extinction to subjugation. The editor cites the example of the Arabs in Morocco and Algiers and appeals to the Arabs of Tripoli to give the Muslim world a stirring example of valour and self-sacrifice in their final struggle for independence.

He attaches little weight to what he calls the paper treaty between Turkey and Italy, and says that the Turks, who already repent it, may be inclined to change their mind regarding Tripoli in the event of a general European conflagration.

In conclusion he assures the Arabs of the sympathy and help of Indian Muhammadans.

AL MUSHIR, 4th November 1912.

The Italian-Turkish war.

15. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 4th November 1912 takes exception to the action of the British Government in being the first to recognize the Italian sovereignty over Tripoli, and says that England's action in this respect will cause resentment to the Muhammadans of India.

KAISER-I-HIND, 31st October 1912.

The Balkan war.

16. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 31st October 1912 (received on the 4th November), attributes the Balkan war to a conspiracy of the Christian Powers to overthrow all the independent Muhammadan kingdoms in the world. The editor characterizes this war as a crusade against Islam, and he invites the attention of Indian Muhammadans to the possibility of their Calephate being destroyed and of their holy places passing into Christian hands.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

The Balkan situation.

17. Referring to the observation of the Englishman (Calcutta) that a Turkish victory in the Balkan war would create new hopes and ambitions in the Indian mind, the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 6th November 1912 considers that this is apparently a veiled suggestion to England to bring about the downfall of Turkey. The editor says that if the British Government puts this suggestion into effect, it will fan the flames of sorrow and indignation in the hearts of Indian Muhammadans and will lead to very undesirable results. He advises England to be at least neutral and not to hinder the Turks from enjoying the fruits of their victory if they come out successful in the war. He claims that no European Power can deceive Muhammadans by outwardly showing sympathy for them while secretly following an anti-Muhammadan policy, and he advises the Powers that rule over Asiatic races not to have recourse to duplicity, but to trust their subjects and to show every regard for their feelings and aspirations. He says that the atrocities in Tripoli and Persia have roused the indignation of Muhammadans and he predicts that this indignation will show its results some day.

In conclusion he asks the European nations not to be misled by the silence of the Muslim world which at present refrains from expressing its bitter feeling.

KANYAKUBJA HITKARI, October 1912.

The poverty of India.

18. The Kanyakubja Hitkari (Cawnpore) for October 1912 (received on the 7th November), publishes a poem entitled "Farewell to the manes" contributed by a correspondent who signs himself "SHAH," in which the following lines occur :—

* * * * * * * * *

"O manes, we are extremely grieved to part with you,
You leave us empty-handed, we have nothing to present to you."

* * * * * * * * *

"The times that you saw and enjoyed, O manes,
Are to-day no more than faint recollections."

* * * * * * * * *

"Not even in dreams are the former resources of happiness found.
At present India is in the grip of poverty and disease.
Hard are the times; our income is not a single pice,
Yet famine visits us as a guest every now and then.
Alas! O manes, what should we say to you?
Sometimes we do not get a single meal."

* * * * * * * *

"O ancestors, a very critical moment has arrived,
They (Indians) are discarding their old traditions and are showing a preference for the new order of things.
They have lost their sovereignty and former happiness and depend upon others for bread;
Like dolls they play into the hands of others."

JADU, 29th October 1912.

Pan-Islamism in India.

19. The Jadu (Jaunpur) of the 29th October 1912 (received on the 4th November), denies the existence of any real Pan-Islamic movement, and says that no Muhammadan Power has yet helped another in time of distress. The editor suggests that meetings should be held in different parts of India to protest against the article entitled "Pan-Islamism in India" that appeared in the Times (London), and he asks Sir John Hewett to disclaim the authorship of this article.

KAISER-I-HIND, 31st October 1912.

Al Halal (Calcutta).

20. A Benares correspondent contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 31st October 1912 (received on the 4th November), in which he says:—

"I did not intend to take up your space or to waste the time of your readers in discussing personalities. But persons who are just entering into a state of political consciousness will learn much from every word of the following letter. As the letter is very long, only portions of it are given for the information of your readers. A perusal of this letter will specially benefit those who intend to become the leaders or reformers of their community. It has generally been observed that as soon as any one devotes himself with sincerity of heart to the welfare of the community, his detractors begin to put difficulties in his way till at last he is compelled to give up his work in sheer disgust.

But such men should not lose hope.

LETTER.

'O Pharaoh of the age, O Nimrod of the Times, O Satan, son of Satan, you think that by publishing Al Halal (Calcutta) and inserting verses of the Qoran you will become a reformer of the community . . . Are you not ashamed that you abuse those admittedly respected and true leaders of the community who can buy and distribute bogus, bigoted Qoran-reading mullahs like you? O shameless villian, after all what do you think yourself to be? The present is the age of education and enlightenment, and even a schoolboy laughs at the ignorance of the maulvis . . . Remember that now people will not be caught in the snare of your religious (show), now the ascendency of religion is gone, you will see and again, I say, you will see that every educated gentleman will spit in your face and will crush the bones and ribs of your invitations to follow the teachings of the Qoran and your other nonsense . . . It is quite possible that the servants of those great and glorious leaders whom you attack possess more money than you . . .

At first you people published the Muslim Gazette and now, when you have guaged the public feeling to some extent, you have published Al Halal, which in the language of your Qoran is, in reality, vice (personified), you are now dancing freely . . . The Comrade also is pursuing a double-faced policy with a view to become the leading paper of both parties. It is quite possible that it has also joined this conspiracy . . .

It is not proper for you to stir up these big men at whose merest nod your feet can be placed in irons. If their lips move ever so little, you, with all your relgious learning, your Arabic libraries, your teachings of the Qoran and the show of your Al Halal office, will go to perdition and be destroyed . . . We will after all be compelled to take steps to put down this trouble and to give you an idea of what will happen. I may say, that you will be wiped out of existence for ever.'"

Commenting on the above letter the writer considers that it must have been written by a follower of one of those gentlemen who want to monopolize the community. He says that it is no wonder that the servants of such gentlemen possess more money than the editors of newspapers. He deplores the irreligiousness of the writer of the letter and attributes it to the defective system of secular education prevalent in India.

Referring to the threats of imprisonment held out to the editors of papers like Al Halal he says that prison has no terrors for patriotic and unselfish workers. He advises Al Halal not to encourage the writers of such disgraceful letters by publishing them in its columns but to carry on its work fearless of misguided criticism.

ADVOCATE, 7th November 1912.

Political prisoners in the Andamans.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 7th November 1912 considers that as the Punjab Government has been successful in effecting the reclamation of hardened criminals by kind and gentle treatment, there is no reason why the political prisoners in the Andamans who were driven to crime under the influence of the political excitement following the partition of Bengal, should not also be reformed. The editor asserts that these political offenders are mostly educated young men belonging to respectable families and that they do not deserve to be herded with common felons or to be submitted to the hardships of ordinary prison life.

He states that political prisoners are handcuffed for refusing to do irksome work or to take food, and he appeals in the name of humanity to His Excellency the Viceroy to inquire into the matter and to do something to relieve the sufferings of these young men.

He also urges a speedy consideration of the case of Ulaskar Dutt, who is reported to have become insane.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd November 1912.

The Punjab Hindu Sabha.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 3rd November 1912 expresses appreciation of the presidential address of the Hon'ble Lala Shadi Lal at the last session of the Punjab Hindu Sabha at Delhi.

The editor agrees with the president in urging that the Punjabis should devote more attention to the spread of Hindi among themselves, but he notes with regret that the entire proceedings of the sabha were conducted in English and Urdu and he expresses the hope that this will not occur again.

23. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd November 1912 referring to the abolition of the post of superintendent of cattle pounds in the Agra Municipality, suggests that the work of supervision of cattle pounds should be entrusted to the Secretary-Engineer. The editor urges the reduction of the salaries of the high-paid officials of the municipality, and he appeals to the members of the board to give more attention to municipal work and to devise means to reduce municipal expenditure.

He complains of the inefficient supervision of municipal work by the Secretary-Engineer, and states that a serious case of defalcation by a cattle pound muharrir remained undetected for a year. He refers to the octroi refunds that have risen from 40 to 50 per cent., and states that the deplorable condition of the Public Works department of the municipality proves that the Secretary is not a practical engineer. He protests against the squandering of public money by municipal officials, and in conclusion he says that all inefficient employés of the municipality should be dismissed and should be replaced by men who are qualified by education and experience to discharge their duties properly.

(e)—Education.

24. Referring to the reply sent by the Hindu University Society to Sir Harcourt Butler's letter, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 3rd November 1912 expresses the hope that Government will reconsider its decision and will permit the proposed university to be called the "Hindu" university and will grant it the power of affiliation.

25. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 4th November), deplores the publication at the last session of the All-India Shiah Conference at Patna of a Shiah pamphlet in which it is stated that the Shiah students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, do not enjoy religious liberty like the Sunni students and that the same arrangements are not made for the former as for the latter.

AL KHALIL, 1st November 1912.

A Shiah pamphlet.

The editor expresses regret that the successors of Sir Saiyid are accused of going back on the promises made by him to the Shiahs, and says that the suggestions made in the pamphlet regarding the Shiah boarding house, if adopted in their entirety, would make the Aligarh College a nursery of discord and religious strife. He considers that this pamphlet is simply a device to alienate Shiah sympathy from the Aligarh College and to turn it towards the Lucknow Shiah boarding house.

26. The editor of the Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 5th November), does not believe in the efficacy of plague inoculation and the sanitary measures adopted to prevent epidemics, and states that the untimely outbreak of cholera, plague and other epidemics is due to the use of adulterated milk, ghi and unseasonable vegetables and to the lack of discrimination in selecting wholesome flour and dal.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 1st November 1912.

Epidemics and their causes.

27. A correspondent who signs himself "KARAN DAS FROM BIJNOR" contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 4th November 1912, in which he expresses satisfaction at the new rules regarding begar, but complains that tahsildars do not observe these rules. He suggests that tahsildars should be instructed to send receipts of cart hire paid to cart drivers to the nazir of the Collector's office who should report irregularities to the Collector. In case of begar supplied to the military department, he thinks that military officers should send copies of the receipts to the Collector's office. Regarding the banias employed in camp under the begar system, he suggests that all provisions should be supplied by Government according to the scheduled rates to the bania, and that whatever remains unsold should be returned to the merchant from whom it was originally bought.

takes exception to the Waqf Validation Bill introduced by the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah in the Imperial Council, and holds that the principle of the waqf alal-au-lad is against Islamic teachings.

He suggests that a meeting of the Ulamas should be convened on the occasion of the All-India Muslim League conference to discuss the bill, and that if they decide that waqf alal-au-lad is invalid the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah should be asked to withdraw his bill.

AL KHALIL, 1st November 1912.

The grievances of third class passengers.

29. A correspondent who signs himself "Abdul Jabbar Khan (physician) from Dhampur, district, Bijnor," contributes an article to Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 1st November 1912 (received on the 4th November), in which he complains of the treatment accorded to third class passengers by railway officials, and takes exception to the over-crowding of passengers in railway carriages on the occasion of fairs. He also complains that booking clerks issue tickets to third class passengers just at train time, and that much inconvenience is caused to female passengers in carriages reserved for women. He suggests that carriages for women should be painted black or blue so that they might be easily distinguishable even at night.

1. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 4th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), in commenting on the troubles and difficulties with which Muhammadans all over the world are confronted at the present day, remarks:— TAJIR, 4th November 1912.

The situation in Islamic countries.

" . . . In India, in spite of the just rule of the British Government, our compatriots (Hindus) are persecuting us. Russia is oppressing the Persians, France is harassing Morocco. Turkey, which was at first worried by Italy, is now suffering at the hands of the small (Balkan) principalities . . .

This is the time for Indian Muhammadans to rise up and sacrifice their lives and property in the cause of religion. They should pray to God in a righteous spirit and should ask Him for what they want . . .

If they (Indian Muhammadans) possess sufficient courage, they should follow Mr. Shaukat Ali and should be prepared to sacrifice their lives in the name of God. They should proceed as volunteers to the field of battle . . .

In short, every Muhammadan should help the fighters for Islam according to his means, and as liberally as possible."

2. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), protests against what it calls the Christian conspiracy to annihilate Islam, and deplores the situation in Turkey, Persia, Tripoli and Morocco. The editor admires the bravery of the Turks and Arabs who fell fighting for their country, and he appeals to Indian Muhammadans to help their afflicted brethren in Turkey. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Islamic countries.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), accuses the European Powers of being secretly inimical to the interests of Turkey, and says that they will not interfere as long as the Balkan Allies are victorious. The editor thinks that even if they now interfere, the terms of peace will be such as to deprive Turkey of almost all of her European possessions, and will thus lower her prestige in the eyes of the Muslim world. He thinks that Turkey will never accept peace on ignominious terms, and he expresses apprehension that the present struggle will result in a European conflagration. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

4. Khwaja Abdul Majid, Barrister-at-law of Aligarh, contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), in which he characterizes the Balkan war as a struggle between Christianity and Islam. He expresses regret that the European Powers are permitting the Balkan confederacy to perpetrate atrocities on the Turks merely because they are Muhammadans, and he invites the attention of his co-religionists to the enthusiasm shown by Christian missionaries and people in Europe in helping the Balkan Allies, and he urges them to subscribe liberally towards the Turkish Relief Fund. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

5. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), expresses approval of Mr. Muhammad Ali's scheme for raising a Turkish loan in India, and thanks Lord Hardinge for informing Mr. Muhammad Ali that the raising of a loan by Indian Muhammadans for Turkey would not be against the policy or interests of the British Government. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

The editor expresses the hope that his co-religionists in India will raise an amount sufficient to relieve Turkey of her present embarrassments.

The situation in Turkey.

6. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 12th November), refuses to believe the reports sent out by Reuter that the Turks have been defeated all along the line, and remarks that false reports of Turkish defeats are circulated in order to incite the Christian subjects of Turkey to rebellion. The editor invites the attention of his co-religionists to the efforts made in the Christian countries of Europe to raise subscriptions for the Balkan Allies, and says that it is the duty of the Muhammadans to sacrifice their lives and property to help the Turks who are the guardians of their holy places. KAISER-I-HIND, 7th November 1912.

He says that Muhammadans throughout the world are bound to show their sympathy towards their spiritual leader, the Sultan of Turkey, and he states that Palestine will come under the subjugation of the Cross only when every Turk and Muhammadan has been exterminated throughout the world.

He expresses approval of the zeal shown by the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, in collecting funds for the Turkish sufferers, and he admires their self-denial, inasmuch as they have given up meat and other dishes and subsist on rice only.

In conclusion he appeals to the Muhammadans to give the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University to Turkey as a loan.

KAISER-I-HIND, 7th November 1912.

7. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 12th November), says that the diplomacy of the European Powers is responsible for the present troubles of Turkey.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor remarks that since Turkey renounced an aggressive policy and adopted a defensive one, the European Powers have begun to snatch one province after another from her.

He deplores the dethronement of Sultan Abdul Hamid, and expresses regret that the young Turks failed to circumvent the Powers.

He ridicules the morality of the European Powers who, in spite of undertaking to maintain the integrity of the Turkish Empire according to the treaty of Berlin, neither objected to the Italian invasion of Tripoli nor to Balkan aggression in Turkey.

He asks the Turks to adopt the motto "Death or victory," and says that if they do so they will come out victorious in the present war.

ADVOCATE, 10th November 1912.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 10th November 1912 expresses apprehension as to the future of the Ottoman Empire, and remarks that its annihilation will give rise to feelings of sorrow and despair among Indian Muhammadans.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor, however, takes exception to the attitude assumed by Indian Muhammadans towards the British Government for not having intervened on behalf of Turkey, and he points out that how much so ever England may sympathise with the feelings of her Muhammadan subjects, her hands are tied by international treaties and she must act in concert with the other Powers.

AL BASHIR, 12th November 1912.

9. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 12th November 1912 characterizes the Balkan war as a struggle between Christianity and Islam, and makes Austria and Russia responsible for the outbreak of the war.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor expresses surprise that even before the termination of the war the Christian Powers are planning the partition of the Turkish Empire in Europe amongst themselves.

He takes exception to Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech in which he is reported to have said that the Balkan Allies should not be deprived of the fruits of their victories, and says that he will be unable in future to pursuade his co-religionists to believe in British honesty and put their faith in British promises.

He also objects to Sir Edward Grey's admiration for the courage of the Bulgarians and to his admission of the rights of the Bulgarians to the country they have conquered, and he remarks that it was unstatesman-like for a responsible minister like Sir Edward Grey to commit himself to such utterances in the House of Commons.

He expresses regret that the policy of Sir Edward Grey is responsible for weakening the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans towards Government, and he says that the interest of England demands an early change in the ministry.

He deplores the condition of the wounded Turkish prisoners in Philolopolis, and expresses surprise that the Bulgarians, who boast of their civilization, do nothing to relieve the distress of the wounded.

He refers to the donations made by Their Excellencies the Viceroy and the Governors of Bengal and Bombay to the Turkish Relief Fund, and says that he is not prepared to thank them unless it is first ascertained that England will not acquiesce in the partition of European Turkey.

10. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 12th November 1912 says that it is the duty of England, as the greatest Muhammadan Power, to sympathise with her Muhammadan subjects, and he appeals to her to use her influence in maintaining the integrity of the Turkish Empire.

The situation in Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 12th November 1912.

11. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 13th November 1912 deplores the unsympathetic attitude of the British Government towards Turkey.

The situation in Turkey.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 13th November 1912.

The editor refers to Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech in which he is reported to have said that the Balkan Allies would not be deprived of the fruits of their victories, and he remarks that the speech has deeply wounded the feeling of Indian Muhammadans. He remarks that though the victorious Turks were not allowed by the European Powers to retain the country they conquered in the Greeco-Turkish war, the statesmen of Europe are planning the partition of European Turkey even before the termination of the present war.

He says that Muhammadans have noted with great pain that England was the first amongst the European Powers to recognize the Italian soveriegnty over Tripoli, and he inquires whether the Muhammadan subjects of the British Government have any right to expect that due regard will be paid to their sentiments by their rulers.

He says that England will not benefit herself by helping the Balkan States beyond gaining the temporary goodwill of Russia, and he states that had England actively helped Turkey she would have won a permanent place in the grateful hearts of the entire Muhammadan world. In conclusion he asks the British Government to change its policy with regard to Turkey.

12. The editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette in the issue of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), expresses warm approval of the action of His Excellency Lord Hardinge in contributing to the Turkish Relief Fund, and observes that the action of His Excellency will cement the loyalty of the Indian Muhammadans to the British throne.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

He suggests that the money collected in India for the Turkish Relief Fund should be remitted to Constantinople through His Excellency the Viceroy, and he urges his co-religionists to contribute to the fund liberally.

13. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 12th November 1912 does not approve of the proposal to transfer the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University to the Turkish Relief Fund. The editor says that the sum is too small to be of any real use to Turkey, and he protests against its use otherwise than on the university.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

AL BASHIR, 12th November 1912.

14. The Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 13th November 1912, in which he condemns the proposal to transfer the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University to the Turkish Relief Fund, and suggests that an association should be organized in every district to collect money for Turkey.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 13th November 1912.

He urges that a committee should be formed in the United Provinces consisting of the manager of the Madrassa-i-Deoband, the Secretary, Nadwat-ul-ulma, Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk, the Raja Sahib of Mahmudabad, the Raja Sahib of Jahangirabad, the Honorary Secretary of the Muhammadan College, the Secretary of the Muslim League and the Honorary Secretary of the All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference, and that they should be asked to meet as soon as possible in order to devise means for raising subscriptions for the Turkish fund.

He also appeals to Muhammadans to curtail unnecessary expenditure and to give the money thus saved to the fund.

15. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th November 1912 makes a stirring appeal to Indian Muhammadans to contribute liberally for the relief of their distressed and wounded Turkish brethren. The editor says that as Muhammadans and as guardians of the holy places of Islam, the Turks deserve the sympathy of the entire Muslim world. He invites attention to the Fatwa of the Ulamas of Deoband making it incumbent upon every Musalman to subscribe towards the Turkish Relief Fund, and he expresses the hope that Muhammadans will curtail their Bakr-Id expenses and will send the money thus saved to Turkey.

AL MUSHIR, 11th November 1912.

Help for Turkey.

16. Discussing Mr. Shaukat Ali's appeal for volunteers for Turkey Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th November 1912 opines that Turkey just now stands more in need of money than of men. The editor considers that the money that would otherwise be spent in equipping and sending volunteers to the front should be utilized in helping the distressed and wounded and in relieving Turkey of her present financial difficulties.

TAJIR, 11th November 1912.

Help for Turkey.

17. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 11th November 1912 discountenances the idea that the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University should be transferred to the Turkish Relief Fund. The editor suggests instead that the middle classes should be induced to curtail all unnecessary expenditure and to give the money thus saved for the relief of the distressed and wounded in Turkey. He also urges that systematic efforts should be made to enlist the sympathy of the Muhammadan raises and masses.

In another article in the same issue the editor says that there would be no harm in advancing the money that has been collected for the proposed Muslim University as a loan to Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 12th November 1912.

Help for Turkey.

18. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 12th November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer ridicules the idea of sending volunteers to Turkey from India. He asserts that Indian Muhammadans are totally ignorant of the art of modern warfare and cannot compare with the Turks in bravery. He considers that Indian volunteers would simply be a drag on the Turkish Army, and he urges his co-religionists to give Turkey the much more needed help of money.

AL KHALIL, 8th November 1912.

Turkey and Asiatic nations.

19. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 8th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), condemns European diplomacy which makes territorial acquisitions under the guise of political reform. The editor accuses Western civilization of being blood-thirsty, and says that Balkan aggression in Turkey has made the country an object of sympathy to all Asiatic nations. This, he says, is clear from the fact that Hindus have contributed to the Turkish Relief Fund and that Hindu politicians have expressed sympathy with Turkey in her troubles.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th November 1912.

The Balkan war.

20. Discussing the situation in the Balkan States the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 14th November 1912 observes that the division of the conquered country is not unlikely to lead to serious differences between the Powers and result in a European conflagration. The editor says that although the European Powers declared before the outbreak of war that the integrity of European Turkey would not be interfered with, they now emphasise the impossibility of returning to the statu quo. He remarks that it is nothing uncommon for the European Powers to break their faith especially when they have an opportunity of delivering Europe from a non-Christian Asiatic Power.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

Islam and Europe.

21. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes a translation of the article entitled "Islam and Europe: who is responsible," contributed by Mr. H. S. Cowper to the Near East (London) in which the writer urges the British Government to change its foreign policy with regard to Muhammadan States.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th November 1912.

Mongolia and Russia.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 14th November 1912 considers that the recent convention between Mongolia and Russia will cost the Mongolians their independence and will lead to war between Russia and China. The editor expresses regret that China and Japan are not on friendly terms at present, and he emphasises the urgent need for unity and co-operation between all the Buddhist communities of Asia as an effective safeguard against the aggressions of selfish Christian Powers.

(b)—Home.

23. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), compares the constitution of the Legislative Councils of the three new provinces with that of the councils of the Punjab and the United Provinces, and remarks that the latter provinces have been treated very ungenerously in the matter owing to the unsympathetic attitude of Sir Louis Dane and Sir John Hewett. The editor expresses the hope that under the régime of the new Lieutenant Governor of these provinces the number of the elected members of the Provincial Legislative Council will be increased.

ABHYUDAYA, 7th November 1912.

The constitution of the United Provinces Legislative Council.

24. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 9th November 1912 protests against the privilege given to the Muhammadan landholders of the United Provinces to send one representative to the Imperial Council. The editor points out that the Muhammadan landholders are already voters in the general Muhammadan electorate and in the general landholders' electorate, and that their community already enjoys excessive representation, and he considers that Government has been unwise in creating a special electorate consisting of only one hundred and forty-nine voters for the sake of the Muhammadan community and the landholder class.

LEADER, 9th November 1912.

The council regulations for the United Provinces.

He also notes that in the electoral roll of the Muhammadan landholders of the United Provinces the Bara Banki district has nearly as many voters as all the divisions of Kumaun, Jhansi, Benares, Gorakhpur, Allahabad, Rohilkhand and Agra put together.

25. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 9th November 1912 protests against the excessive representation of the European commercial community on the Bengal Legislative Council. The editor asserts that the European members do not take part in the public life around them and do not identify themselves with the Indian non-official members, and that they thus detract from the effective strength of the elective majority.

LEADER, 9th November 1912.

The council regulations for Bengal and Behar.

He also protests against the excessive representation of the Muhammadan community on both the Bengal and the Behar Councils.

He points out that the anomalies existing in the other provinces have been perpetuated in the council regulations for Bengal and Behar, and he remarks that "there is a certain lack of simplicity in the arrangement of the divisional electorates of the Bengal Council."

He criticises the arrangement for the election of the two representatives of the Calcutta Corporation, and suggests that all rate-payers qualified to be members of the Corporation should have a vote in the election of the two representatives.

In conclusion he takes exception to the excessive representation of the landholders on the Behar Council, and suggests that all graduates of ten years' standing should be allowed to return one member to the Council.

26. The Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut) for October 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes a poem entitled "The welfare of India" contributed by Kashi Nath Fida in which the following lines occur :—

VAISHYA HITKARI, October 1912.

The present condition of India.

"O young men of India ! take care of your country,
Just look for a moment at the condition of your mother (country),
Her heart is rent with grief and troubles."

* * * * * *

"Destruction and ruin are enveloping her (India) just now; Gird up your loins for (her) protection."

* * * * * *

"If any one asks anything from you in the name of patriotism,
Offer your life, body, heart and soul;
Never injure even your ill-wishers."

* * * * * *

"Impress the public with your self-sacrifice."

* * * * * *

"Sacrifice your body, soul and wealth with a light heart, O friend, I adjure you, leave no stone unturned."

TAJIR, 4th November 1912.

Mr. Gandhi and Indian Muhammadans in South Africa.

27. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 4th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer remarks:—

". . . He (Mr. Gandhi) instead of using for the public good the sum of a lakh and a quarter of rupees received from India, has spent it in clearing off his own debts and in buying an estate in the Transvaal . . . When the news of Mr. Gokhale's visit (to South Africa) reached Mr. Gandhi, he declared the property at Phœnix (Natal) to be a waqf for the community and published the trust deed in his paper, the Indian Opinion.

We hope that this trust deed will not be cancelled like the previous one.

False accounts, which will be shown to Mr. Gokhale, are being prepared with the utmost speed and cleverness . . . High hopes are being held out to simple-minded Muhammadans and they are being robbed right and left. . . . It is a pity that there is no Muslim organ in South Africa to represent the views of Muhammadans to Government . . . "

ABHYUDAYA, 7th November 1912.

The release of Mr. Tilak.

28. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), joins with the Leader (Allahabad) in supporting Mr. Tilak's memorial to the Government of India for his release, and expresses the hope that the Viceroy will consider the memorial in a generous spirit.

AL MUSHIR, 11th November 1912.

The moral and spiritual aspect of European civilization.

29. A correspondent who signs himself "NUR-UD-DIN FROM GUJRANWALA" contributes an article to Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th November 1912, in which he accuses European civilization of being materialistic, irreligious and immoral.

He characterizes the aggressions of France, Italy and Russia in Morocco, Tripoli and Persia respectively as brigandage, and he attributes these degradations to the lack of spiritual and moral feelings among the European nations. He invites attention to the chronic state of dissatisfaction in European society, as evidenced by the growth of nihilism, anarchism, socialism and trade unionism, and he asserts that the Christian nations are defying all the commandments of God and do not seem to have any fear of the Day of Retribution.

He says that sexual morality has sunk to such depths in Europe that a very considerable number of illegitimate births are registered every year. He states that gambling and drink always follow in the wake of European civilization, and that "from the moral and spiritual point of view there is little difference between them (Europeans) and brutes."

AL MUSHIR, 11th November 1912.

Muslim loyalty and the Hindu and Anglo-Indian press.

30. Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th November 1912 deplores the attacks made on Muslim loyalty by the Hindu and Anglo-Indian press. The editor takes special exception to the tone of the Pioneer (Allahabad), and expresses regret that Government has not taken steps to put a stop to writings which are calculated to embitter the relations between Englishmen and Muhammadans. He assures Government that Muhammadans are the only race that will prove eternally loyal and faithful to the British.

ANAND, 14th November 1912.

The Indian National Congress.

31. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 14th November 1912 says that the sittings of the Indian National Congress once a year can have litte effect on the public life of the country. The editor therefore urges that the Congress should devise measures to carry on its work continuously throughout the year, and that Congress committees should be formed at every important centre to spread political education among the masses and to co-operate with the local authorities in the work of every-day administration. He expresses the hope that this question will receive due consideration at the forthcoming session of the Congress at Bankipore.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

32. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes the second instalment of Nawab Mushtaq Husain's article on the proposed Muslim University in which the writer reproduces extracts from Mr. Mahmud's Muslim University scheme prepared in 1883 to prove that the founder of the Aligarh College never meant the Muslim University to be purely local. He says that Government, in giving its final decision on the matter, has safeguarded its own interests but has shown no sympathy for the aims and aspirations of the Muhammadans. He, however, advises his co-religionists to be reasonable in their demands regarding the university, and suggests that the by-laws of the university should be placed before Government when the foundation committee has fully reconsidered them.

He does not object to Government's having reasonable control over the Muslim University if it does not interfere with its internal affairs, and he notes that this was the view taken by the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 13th November 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

33. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes the third instalment of his article entitled "The proposed Muslim University and affiliation" to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 13th November 1912, in which he discusses the question of utilizing the funds that have been collected for the proposed Muslim University in case Government refuses to grant the Muhammadans a charter of their own making. He suggests that the Muslim University fund should be placed under the control of an All-India Muhammadan Educational Association which should supervise the work of the Lahore Islamia College and the Aligarh College and should also organize at Aligarh a central institution for the training of the Muhammadan youths who do not wish to enter government service. He urges the establishment of classes for the teaching of unani medicine, religion, commerce, agriculture, technology, &c. He insists that Urdu should be made the medium of instruction in this institution, and he lays stress on moral and physical education. He says that the All-India Muhammadan Educational Association should also take up the work of female education, and he also advocates the establishment of local schools at important centres throughout India, and he urges the convening of a conference to discuss these questions. He points out that a sum of rupees twenty-five lakhs would not suffice for such a comprehensive scheme, and he appeals to his co-religionists for further subscriptions.

ABHYUDAYA, 7th November 1912.

The proposed Hindu University and affiliation.

34. Discussing the reply of the Hindu University Society to Sir Harcourt Butler's letter regarding the proposed Hindu University scheme the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), reiterates the opinion that the Hindu people will be greatly gratified if their University is designated "the Hindu University" instead of "the University of Benares," and says that the request of the society for the grant of the power of affiliation is by no means unreasonable. The editor urges that Government should also accede to the request of the Society that the King-Emperor and the Viceroy should become Protector and Patron respectively of the proposed university.

He expresses the hope that Government will generously consider the reply in all its details and will rescind its previous decision on the matter.

ADVOCATE, 10th November 1912.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 10th November 1912 states that the Taluqdars of Oudh abolished the law classes of the Lucknow Canning College under pressure from Sir John Hewett. The editor urges that as it is essential that landowners should have some knowledge of law, these classes should be revived. He points out that middle class people are put to great expense in sending their sons to Allahabad, Agra or Aligarh, and he also notes that the Allahabad University Law College is unable to cope with the large number of students attending the law classes. He therefore urges the revival of the law classes at Lucknow, and suggests that they should be placed under the Syndicate of the Allahabad University.

36. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 4th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), deplores the moribund condition of the All-India Urdu Conference. Discussing the opposition of the Hindus to the propagation of Urdu the editor remarks :—

The Urdu-Hindi controversy.

"The community that was jealous of the rise of Europe and raised the cry of swadeshi is now stamping out Urdu . . . Though the treatment meted out to Urdu is opposed to the principles of honesty, still I must point out that dishonesty is a part of their (Hindus') nature, and I must invite the attention of my co-religionists to the fact that our compatriots (Hindus) never fail to attain the end they have in view . . . The Hindus have for the last few years been trying to make Devanagri (Hindi) the common language of India and to extend its use. They have been so far successful in their efforts that a large number of persons did not give Urdu as their mother-tongue at the last census."

MASHRIQ, 12th November 1912.

37. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 12th November 1912 takes exception to the Rev. Mr. Knowles' suggestion for the appointment of a Royal Commission to consider the question of a common script for India, and denounces the adoption of the Roman character for Indian languages. The editor expresses regret that the time has passed when Englishmen enthusiastically supported and encouraged the study of oriental languages, and that now Indians are asked to adopt the Roman character. He urges the Hindus and Muhammadans to make up their differences regarding the Hindi-Urdu question, and to maintain the integrity of the languages of India.

A common script for India.

ZUL QARNAIN, 7th November 1912.

38. The editor of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) in the issue of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 12th November), deplores the publication of a Shiah pamphlet in which the authorities of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, are blamed for not according the religious freedom to the Shiah students of the college that the Sunni students enjoy.

A Shiah pamphlet.

He asks the members of the Shiah conference to publish a disclaimer that the pamphlet has not been published with their permission.

SARASWATI, November 1912.

39. The Saraswati (Allahabad) for November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Shrikanth Pathak, discusses the Indian currency question. He observes that the fiscal changes introduced in India in 1893 have deprived Indians of the right enjoyed by all civilized peoples of getting private bullion coined. He urges that the silver coinage reserve fund should be transferred to India where it can be more profitably employed than in England.

Indian currency.

He suggests that, in view of the enormous international trade of India, a gold mint should be opened in this country, and he considers that such a measure would save Indians the cost of importing sovereigns from England and of sending gold to foreign countries.

ADVOCATE, 10th November 1912.

40. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 10th November 1912 joins with Lord Curzon in protesting against the sale of Hasting's House, Calcutta, and urges that a house that has played such an important part in the history of India should be retained as an imperial possession.

Sale of Hasting's House.

V.—Legislation.

41. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 12th November 1912 takes exception to the intention of Government in introducing the Copyright Act of England into India according to which in future no translation of any European publication can be made in India without the author's permission. He considers that the Act is devised to stop the publication of the thoughts and ideas of European philosophers and politicians in Indian vernaculars, and says that it is futile for Government to make any attempt to suppress the spread of Western ideas of liberty amongst Indians. He asks the members of the Legislative Council and the press to protest against the passing of the Act.

MASHRIQ, 12th November 1912.

VI.—Railway.

42. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), refers to the question of a roadway being built on the Izat bridge, and expresses regret that Sir John Hewett paid no attention to the public demand in this connection. The editor, however, expresses the hope that Sir James Meston will earn the gratitude of the Allahabad public by having a roadway constructed on the bridge.

43. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 4th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), has the following:—

"Dewali is in our midst and the picture, which represents the cow with eighty-four gods on her body and which last year inflamed the feelings of the Hindus in the Meerut district and led to disturbances at various places, is being again displayed. We hope that the Collector will take early steps to put a stop to this device to create a disturbance."

The cow-protection movement.

TAJIR. 4th November 1912.

44. The editor of the Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) in the issue of the 8th November 1912 (received on the 14th November), says that the Hindus are responsible for cow-killing in India as they dispose of their cows to Muhammadans. He urges the Hindus to open gaushalas in every district in order to improve the breed of cattle, and he asks the Muhammadans to give up cow-killing on the occasion of the Bakr Id.

Cow killing.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 8th November 1912.

45. A correspondent who signs himself "Ábir" of Akbarabad contributes the following poem entitled "An Arya's prayer" to the Musáfir (Agra) of the 8th November 1912 (received on the 11th November):—

The propagation of the Vedic faith.

MUSAFIR, 8th November 1912.

"O God, may my body and soul be for the (good of the) world.
May my life be only for the good (of others).
If (I) possess (a) head upon (my) shoulders it should be for the sword.
(If I possess) a dagger, it should not be in (my) hands to hurt (anybody).
May I do service to others like a servant.
May I not be looked upon as a dangerous thorn even by an enemy.
May I shed the lustre (light) of sincerity (truth) all over the world.
May I show the road to annihilation to the worship of falsehood.
May I bring Christianity and Islam to the path of truth.
May I make every human being a sincere Arya.
May I purge the world of all its heresies.
May I annihilate falsehood from the earth.
May my tongue remain within my month, only on this condition
That my voice may reach Persia, Arabia and Yemen.
(May) the Vedic teachings reach every home in this country.
May the banner of the Vedas wave over China and Khotan.
May the Vedas be recited in the shrines of Mecca
And may my voice resound in Jerusalem.
I then inquire of you, O Shaikh, how good would it be
If the house of God were to exist in the heart of every human being,
If the sound of Om were to rise from the whole world
And every head were to bend in reverence to the Vedas,

May every one be relieved from the troubles of temples and mosques
And may they be released from the clutches of the Brahman and the Shaikh.
May every one bless that pilot who brought us who were drowning safe to the shore.
The man who carried us ashore safely through the storm of the Sea of life.
May the (world) resound with his plaudits.
May all unite to bow their heads at the feet of that Rishi
And may all become Arya and may they banish all ideas of duplicity from their hearts."

ARYA MITRA, 8th November 1912.

Swami Dayanand.

46. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 8th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes an article entitled "Swamiji Parivrajakachrya" in which the editor discusses the claims of Swami Dayanand to being one of the greatest revivalists that the world has ever produced. The following are some extracts from the article:—

* * * * * * * * *

"Ancient and modern revivalists never sought for truth. Nor did they lead their disciples towards it. On the other hand they tried to ensnare their simple brethren in the nets of their own making. They declared that at times they went into the presence of God or that He himself came to them or that He sent some messenger to ask them to work on behalf of religion. How can that be true? No learned man of the present day can have any faith in such nonesense."

"Muhammad stated that he went to God who was several hundred thousands of miles away and that he came back again in a single night. Is not this an absolute falsehood? Did Dayanand ever say such a thing? Why then is he not the best of reformers?"

"Moses stated that God used to visit him on the mount and tell him what he should do. Jehovah used to send bread, vegetables, curry, rice and other edibles into the camp of the Israelites. Can this have been anything else than trickery? Where has that Jehovah gone to-day? How is it that He does not send a single loaf from heaven for the millions of starving people and why does He not reveal Himself to us now? Swamiji never talked of such miraculous deeds."

* * * * * * * * *

"All the miracles attributed to Christ are false. European savants are not prepared to accept them. Can a man be made to live again when dead? Could the trees and the sea understand Christ's words? Could a child be born of a virgin? The European savants themselves in their writings upon the Bible hold that the new and the old testaments are false. If Jesus Christ himself said that He was God and the Son of God, then He was not on the side of truth. We consider that such a Christ was never born."

TAJIR, 11th November 1912.

Swami Dayanand and the Vedas.

47. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 11th November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer ridicules the attempts made by Swami Dayanand to prove that the Vedas were inspired books and existed from all eternity. He reproduces passages from the Vedas to show that they describe human actions, and he argues that they were therefore compiled by human agency. He also ridicules Swami Dayanand's attempt to prove that all the other religious books of the world were of human origin.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th November 1912.

The backward condition of Muhammadans.

48. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 6th November 1912 (received on the 11th November), publishes an article contributed by Maulvi Saiyid Abdul Haq, Assistant Professor of Arabic in the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

The writer dwells on the backward condition of Muhammadans throughout the world, and attributes it to their actions being contrary to the commandments of God. He therefore urges his co-religionists to reform and to become orthodox Muhammadans.

I.—Politics.

1. A correspondent who signs himself "Qamar Ahmad (Alig.)" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912, in which he gives expression to the utter feeling of despair produced among Indian Muhammadans by recent events in Morocco, Persia and Turkey. He suggests that the British Government should select some uninhabited islands where Indian Muhammadans, who wish to efface themselves, should be allowed to settle, entirely cut off from the world, where they can no longer live without disgrace.

The situation in Islamic countries.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

2. The editor of the Jadu (Jaunpur) in the issue of the 13th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), says that the European Powers have conspired to destroy the independence of Turkey, and he assures them that if Turkey loses her independence a world-wide conflagration will ensue.

The situation in Turkey.

JADU, 13th November 1912.

3. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 14th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), says that the conspiracy of the European Powers to partition European Turkey will lead to their own undoing by bringing about a world-wide conflagration.

The situation in Turkey.

KAISER-I-HIND, 14th November 1912.

The editor accuses the European Powers of secretly helping the Balkan Allies, and he states that they have received a considerable supply of arms and ammunition from England. He admits that these war materials are nominally despatched to Austria or Russia, but he asserts that they eventually find their way to Sofia, Belgrade or Cettinje. He points out that Turkey has been disgracefully betrayed by her Christian soldiers, but he says that there is no occasion for surprise at the treacherous conduct of these soldiers, as they were seduced from their allegiance to Turkey by the preaching of Christian priests. He assures the Christian Powers that they will never be successful in effecting a peaceful partition of Turkey, and he says that the followers of the Cross will enter the holy places of Islam only through a sea of blood.

He is glad to note the practical sympathy shown by Indian Muhammadans for their wounded and distressed co-religionists in Turkey, and he ridicules the cowardice of those who refuse to contribute towards the Turkish Relief Fund for fear of the displeasure of Government.

4. Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 16th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), deplores the religious colour given to the Balkan war by Christian priests, and resents the insinuation that Indian Muhammadans were responsible for the Indian Mutiny of 1857.

The situation in Turkey.

AL KHALIL, 16th November 1912.

The editor also takes exception to the manifesto of the Balkan Committee, and he deprecates the attempt to excite religious feeling. He deplores the change in British foreign policy as evidenced by Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech, and he reminds Europe of the admirable fighting qualities of the Turk, and he points out that Turkey will not submit to partition without a supreme effort.

He regrets that the news supplied to India regarding the Balkan war is mostly of a doubtful nature.

5. The editor of Al Mushir (Moradabad) in the issue of the 18th November 1912 takes exception to Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech and expresses regret that the Prime Minister should have given vent to his pro-Balkan feelings in such a public manner. He says that Mr. Asquith's speech has deeply hurt the feeling of Indian Muhammadans, and he remarks that a statesman of the position of Mr. Asquith should not have so wantonly wounded the feelings of the millions of Indian Muhammadan subjects of His Britannic Majesty.

The situation in Turkey.

AL MUSHIR, 18th November 1912.

6. A correspondent who sings himself "Muhammad Sulaiman Alwi" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912, in which he reproaches

The situation in Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

the Turks for retiring before the Balkan Allies, and in which he makes an appeal to Muhammadans all over the world in the following terms :—

"O my brave brethren, do not lose heart,
The weak use weapons, the cowardly learn drill.
Islam is your sword and the doctrine of monotheism is your conscience.
O brave followers of the Qoran and servants of God,
Islam is being butchered by infidels, look sharp and save it.
Behold ! the knife has been placed on the throat of Islam and it is wailing piteously.
O Muhammadans of India, China, Afghanistan, Persia, of the East and of the West, help its followers,
The enemies of God (Christians) are killing (Islam),
Do you (Muhammadans) not love Islam ?"

He then dwells on the excellencies of Islam, and expresses regret that its followers are disregarding its precepts. He expresses the hope that God will give success to the Turkish arms, and that neither Austria nor Russia nor any of the other Powers will be able to harm Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

7. Criticising Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912 says that such an anti-Muhammadan speech was not quite unexpected from a follower of Mr. Gladstone's.

The editor asserts that the previous declaration of the Powers in favour of the maintenance of the status quo in the Balkan Peninsula was simply due to fear of Turkish victories, and he points out that now that the Turks are sustaining reverses, the Powers have no hesitation in going back upon their solemn affirmations. He, however, expresses the opinion that if the Turks now conquer the territories of the Balkan Allies, the Powers will not be able to revive the question of status quo.

He urges Indian Muhammadans to make a direct appeal to their King-Emperor to restrain his ministers from wounding the feelings of his Muhammadan subjects by their public utterances.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 20th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

8. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 20th November 1912 takes exception to Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech in which he is reported to have welcomed the fall of Salonica and to have said that "Salonica was the gateway through which Christianity entered Europe" and that "the European Powers would not deprive the Balkan Allies of the fruits of their victories." The editor also objects to the statement reported to have been made in the House of Commons by Sir Edward Grey to the effect that the country conquered by the Balkan Allies would not be given back to Turkey, and he reminds his readers that in the beginning of the war the Powers declared that, notwithstanding the result of the war, the status quo would be maintained in Eastern Europe.

He says that the declaration about the maintenance of the status quo in the Balkans was made when the Powers believed that the Turks would be victorious, and he says that now that they find the Turks losing ground in the present struggle, the statesmen of Europe are planning the partition of European Turkey and have forgotten the solemn affirmations they have already made.

He says that responsible ministers like Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith should not have openly expressed sympathy with the Balkan Allies and that they should not have given an unnecessary cause of annoyance and dissatisfaction to the Indian Muhammadan subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

9. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912 publishes a letter from a young student in which he deplores the situation in Islamic countries and describes how enthusiastically students are giving up luxuries in order to help the Turks.

The editor invites the attention of Government to the intensity of feeling of Indian Muhammadans in regard to the situation in Turkey, and says that it would not be statesmanlike on the part of British politicians to damp their enthusiasm in any way.

10. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 20th November 1912 regrets to note that the majority of British newspapers incite their readers against the Turks and go even so far as to question the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans and to characterize it as a negligible factor in Imperial politics. The editor considers that such newspaper comments, coupled with Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech, may create an undesirable impression among Muhammadans, and he appeals to Government to stop the publication of such attacks on its Muhammadan subjects.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 20th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

11. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 16th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to Dr. Abdul Hakim's suggestion that Muhammadans of India should not go to Turkey as volunteers but that they should only send money to relieve the distress of the widows and orphans of the Turkish soldiers killed and wounded in the Balkan war.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 16th November 1912.

Indian Muhammadan volunteers for Turkey.

He considers that Indian Muhammadans should proceed to Turkey as volunteers and fight against the Balkan Allies who, he says, are fighting in the name of their religion to destroy Islam in Europe.

Another correspondent who signs himself "KOWKAB (STAR) of ROHILKHAND" contributes an article to the same issue, in which he urges Mr. Shaukat Ali to organize a volunteer corps and to collect funds for its maintenance. He dwells on the necessity for helping the Turks who are guardians of the holy places of Islam, and he expresses the hope that the Muhammadans who realize that the expulsion of the Turks from Europe will mean the cessation of the Muhammadan guardianship of their holy places, will contribute liberally towards the fund for the maintenance of volunteers.

12. The editor of the Khatun (Aligarh) in the issue for October 1912 (received on the 19th November), refers to the peculiar position of the Sultan as the spiritual leader of Islam, and appeals to Indian Muhammadans to contribute liberally towards the Turkish Relief Fund.

KHATUN, October 1912.

Help for Turkey.

13. A correspondent who signs himself "PANDIT PARAM SUKH AVASTHI FROM GORAKHPUR" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912, in which he enunciates the theory that the Turks belong to a pure Surajbansi Rajput stock.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

Help for Turkey.

He says that the original Hindu Turks migrated from India to Kasghar where they successively embraced Buddhism and Islam and finally went to Turkey. He appeals to Hindus on the ground of this racial affinity to subscribe towards the Turkish Relief Fund.

14. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th October 1912 (received on the 19th November), considers that the organization of a volunteer corps for Turkey by Indian Muhammadans is a distinct breach of the neutrality declared by the British Government, and advises Hindus not to help Turkey with funds.

RAHBAR, 28th October 1912.

Help for Turkey.

The editor also says that Indian Muhammadans are in no way grateful to the Hindus for their contributions to the relief fund for Turkey.

15. The editor of Al Mushir (Moradabad) in the issue of the 18th November 1912 condemns the proposal to transfer the money that has been collected for the Muslim University to the Turkish Relief Fund, but urges his co-religionists to subscribe liberally to the fund.

AL MUSHIR, 18th November 1912.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

16. Discussing the question of Egyption aid to Turkey, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 19th November 1912 says that England would earn the gratitude of the whole Muslim world if she allowed Egypt to send troops and pecuniary aid to Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 19th November 1912.

Egyptian aid for Turkey.

17. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 19th November 1912 supports the proposal for raising a loan in India for Turkey, and suggests that the money that has been collected for the Muslim University should be given as a loan to Turkey to be repaid in six months' time.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th November 1912.

A Turkish loan.

He says that it would be better to help the Turks by giving them the Muslim University fund as a loan than to deposit the money in a Christian bank and thus benefit the Christians.

He also suggests that a deputation should tour throughout the country in order to appeal to the Muhammadan public to contribute to the Turkish loan fund.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 20th November 1912.

A Turkish loan.

18. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 20th November 1912 expresses approval of the proposal of the Zamindar (Lahore) to raise a loan in India for Turkey, and states that the editor of the Zamindar has arranged with the Orient Bank of India, Limited, Lahore, to issue five rupee debenture shares towards the loan.

He says that as Lord Hardinge has declared that the raising of a loan in India for Turkey will not be against the interests of the Government of India, Indian Muhammadans of all ranks should not hesitate in buying these shares.

He suggests that a deputation should tour throughout the country to induce people to interest themselves in the loan.

UNION GAZETTE, 8th November 1912.

The European Powers and the status quo in European Turkey.

19. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 8th November 1912 (received on the 14th November), accuses the European Powers of going back upon their promises to maintain the status quo in Turkey, and says that no Asiatic nation will in future be deceived by European diplomacy. The editor expresses the hope that England will, out of consideration for the feeling of her Muhammadan subjects, allow no pressure to be brought to bear on Turkey.

UNION GAZETTE, 10th November 1912.

British foreign policy and Muslim feeling.

20. In the course of an article on Muslim feeling in regard to the Balkan war, the Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 10th November 1912 (received on the 14th November), takes exception to the foreign policy of Sir Edward Grey, and says that it has deeply pained the feelings of Muhammadans.

UNION GAZETTE, 20th November 1912.

The ill-treatment of prisoners in the Balkans.

21. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 20th November 1912 reproaches the Bulgarians for maltreating the Turkish prisoners in Salonica, and remarks that the Turks, though they have always been called cruel and barbarous, have never been guilty of ill-treating their prisoners of war.

(b)—Home.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

Muhammadan loyalty.

22. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), says that, in spite of the protestations of loyalty by Indian Muhammadans, recent events go to prove that, owing to the altered outlook in Turkey and Persia, their loyalty has waned and they feel greater love and reverence for the rulers of Turkey and Persia than for any of the crowned heads of Europe. In support of this contention the editor states that the Zamindar (Lahore) severed its connection with one of its correspondents on learning that he was a British spy in Turkey.

In conclusion he advises Indian Muhammadans to abandon their double-faced policy of feigning loyalty to the British Government while execrating its spies in Islamic countries. He also deprecates the exhibition of undue political sympathy with Turkey, Tripoli and Persia.

AGRA AKHBAR, 14th November 1912.

The degeneration of Muhammadans.

23. Nawab Haji Ismail Khan contributes an article to the Agra Akhbar of the 14th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), in which he discusses the causes of the degeneration of Muhammadans throughout the world.

He deprecates the insinuations made by some of the Muhammadan papers that Christianity is responsible for the overthrow of the Muhammadan kingdoms, and he holds that the downfall of the Muhammadans in different parts of the world is due to their appalling ignorance of modern sciences and arts.

He says that Christians of Europe, by virtue of their high attainments in science and arts, are in every way fitted to rule over the world. He asks his co-religionists to realize the fact that it was their own weakness and incapability to rule India that made the English the rulers of the country. He points out that though the English are Christians, they have given absolute freedom to their subjects to profess and practice whatever faith they like, and he remarks that it is a wrong policy to excite the fanaticism of the Muhammadans by falsely attributing the degeneration of the Muhammadans and the downfall of their kingdoms to the prejudice and bigotry of the Christians.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

Christianity and politics.

24. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer discountenances the idea that the Arya Samaj is a political body, and asserts that Christian missionaries are responsible for the prevalence of this idea.

He says that the Christian missionary movement in India is itself political, and he points out that Indian Christians adopt European names, manners and dress, use roman characters, learn European music, in short become thoroughly European and begin to despise everything Indian. He states that these changes have nothing to do with religion and have an important political significance. In support of his contention he invites attention to the statement of Sir Valentine Chirol that the sixty millions of the depressed classes of India, if converted to Christianity, would form a very valuable political asset for the British Government.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

The working of the Press Act.

25. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), protests against the security of fifteen hundred rupees taken from the Saddharm Prachárak which was recently transferred from the Gurukul, Kangri, to Delhi.

The editor points out that this paper has never adversely criticised Government, and he remarks that the security now demanded from the editor is not in accordance with the dignity and prestige of Government. He enquires why Government promissory notes were not accepted as security, and he invites attention to the fact that a Muhammadan paper was recently started without any deposit being required of the publisher.

He deprecates such invidious distinctions between Hindu and Muhammadan papers.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

The release of Mr. Tilak.

26. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), urges the release of Mr. Tilak. The editor suggests that meetings should be held all over India to ask for the release of Mr. Tilak, and he expresses the hope that Government will not disregard Indian public opinion on the matter.

LEADER, 19th November 1912.

The appointment of Indians in the higher branches of the public service.

27. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that, while the cost of living has increased, Indian graduates can only obtain appointments on initial salaries of rupees forty or fifty a month and are thus unable to afford nourishing food for themselves and their children. He attributes the decreasing vitality of the Indian educated classes to low salaries. He takes exception to the arrangement by which a European or even an Anglo-Indian gets twice as much remuneration as an Indian for doing practically the same work, and he also objects to the unfair treatment accorded to Indians and Europeans in the matter of promotion.

He deplores the fact that all the higher offices open to Indians are monopolized by persons who are either in affluent circumstances or can trace their descent from some family of nawabs or rajas.

He urges the holding of simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in England and in India, and he appeals to Government to consider the question impartially, so as to protect European and Anglo-Indian interests and also to do justice to Indians and thus give enduring strength to the foundations of British rule in India.

HINDUSTANI, 18th November 1912.

The Benares State.

28. A correspondent who signs himself "Bhagwati Prasad Singh from Ramnagar, Benares," contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 18th November 1912, in which he expresses appreciation of the efficient administration of the Benares State, and suggests that an English high school should be opened at Ramnagar.

IV.—Administration.

MUSAFIR, 15th November 1912.

Mrs. Besant's case.

29. Commenting on the defence put forward by Mrs. Besant in the suit filed against her by Mr. Narainyah for the recovery of his two sons, the editor of the Musáfir (Agra), in the issue of the 15th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), remarks:—

"As the case is still sub judice it would be premature to offer any opinion regarding the true facts. But it must be admitted that, by introducing into the purely personal quarrel the name of an Indian political party, simply in order to prejudice the (English) presiding officer of the court against the plaintiff, Mrs. Besant has been guilty of a mean trick, to which only degraded persons, who hesitate at nothing to humiliate and vex their enemies, are addicted."

ADVOCATE, 17th November 1912.

Attacks on Mr. Justice Fletcher.

30. Referring to the two questions regarding compensation to Mr. Weston recently put in the House of Commons by Sir J. D. Rees, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 17th November 1912, resents the attacks made therein on the impartiality and ability of Mr. Justice Fletcher. The editor points out that the delay in the trial of Mr. Weston was occasioned, not through any fault of Mr. Justice Fletcher's, but by the prolonged examination of witnesses by Mr. Norton, the defendant's counsel. He asserts that Mr. Justice Fletcher enjoys the fullest confidence of the Indian public and is opposed only by a few Anglo-Indian bodies, and he considers that Mr. Weston deserves no compensation.

He points out that in a previous reply to a similar question it was remarked that only the Local Government concerned could raise the question of compensation, and he expresses regret that Mr. Baker said that the matter was under the consideration of the Secretary of State. He also regrets that the Under Secretary of State did not resent the attacks made on Mr. Justice Fletcher in these questions, and he expresses the hope that Mr. Baker will disabuse the Indian public of the grave misapprehensions which his reply has given rise to.

TAJIR, 18th November 1912.

The Meerut Municipality.

31. The Tajir (Meerut) of the 18th November 1912 (received on the 22nd November), invites the attention of the Secretary, Municipal Board, Meerut, to the inconvenience caused to Muhammadans in crossing the drain near the Juma masjid, and urges that a culvert should be constructed over it.

LEADER, 22nd November 1912.

The Agra Municipality.

32. Referring to the memorial submitted to Government by the citizens of Agra against the imposition of a house tax, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 22nd November 1912 agrees with the memorialists that the incidence of taxation at Agra is not comparatively low.

The editor expresses dissatisfaction at the municipal management, and considers that under improved management the income of the municipality could be considerably increased.

He points out that the expenditure on the collection of taxes and on the water works is very high, and he suggests that the Secretary-Engineer, the Assistant Secretary, the Urdu-knowing peshkar and the peshkar's translator should be replaced by a qualified Secretary-Engineer on Rs. 300 per mensem and an English-knowing peshkar.

In case it is ultimately found necessary to impose a fresh tax, he commends the suggestion of the memorialists regarding a passenger and cattle tax, and urges that the question of imposing a terminal tax should be reconsidered.

(e)—Education.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

33. The Khatun (Aligarh) for the month of October 1912 (received on the 19th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer reproaches the Muhammadans for abandoning the idea of establishing a University simply because Government has refused to grant the University the power of affiliation. KHATUN, October 1912.

The writer also considers that the change in the designation of the proposed University ought not to be resented by Muhammadans, and advises them to accept the Charter outlined by Government but to keep on agitating for the grant of the power of affiliation.

Sanitation and primary education.

34. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th November 1912 says that the sanitary improvements which Government proposes to carry out throughout the country cannot be successful unless the masses are taught the elementary rules of hygiene and sanitation through the medium of primary education. The editor notes that although the need for sanitation and primary education proceeding side by side was recognized by Sir Harcourt Butler in his recent speech at the All-India Sanitary Conference, the fate of Mr. Gokhale's Elementary Education Bill makes one doubtful whether Government will now become more liberal in its educational policy. ABHYUDAYA, 17th November 1912.

He considers that a definite pronouncement on the subject should be made by Government at an early date.

The Convocation address.

35. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th November 1912 eulogizes the sincere, simple and excellent character of His Honour's Convocation address. The editor is glad to note that His Honour proposes to give the public an opportunity to express its views on his comprehensive educational scheme before it is given its final shape. He urges the spread of better education, but says that the peculiar circumstances of India require the practice of the most rigid form of economy. LEADER, 19th November 1912.

He expresses appreciation of Sir James Meston's eloquent exhortation to the new graduates, and commends His Honour's advice regarding the importance of a well-balanced judgment, a spirit of co-ordination and sincerity. He characterizes as "wise opportune" the remarks of His Honour on the Hindu-Muhammadan question.

Conversion of district forests into Imperial forests in Kumaun.

36. Referring to the recent Government notification whereby the district reserve forests in Kumaun have been converted into Imperial forests, the Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal), for October 1912 (received on the 21st November), expresses the hope that, as the welfare of the inhabitants of Kumaun depends upon the forest administration, the change will not involve any hardship to them. GARHWAL SAMACHAR, October 1912.

Forest settlement in Kumaun.

37. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) for October 1912 (received on the 21st November), says that the present system of recruiting coolies daily for fixing boundary posts in connection with the work of forest settlement in Kumaun causes much inconvenience to villagers and is by no means economical to Government. The editor suggests that permanent coolies should be entertained. GARHWAL SAMACHAR, October 1912.

(g)—General.

Garhwal under British rule.

38. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) for October 1912 (received on the 21st November), complains that British rule has not conferred its usual blessings upon GARHWAL SAMACHAR, October 1912.

Garhwal beyond ensuring the safety of life and property, as the inhabitants of Garhwal are still very backward in education and have been given practically no high posts in the public service. The editor suggests that a deputation of Garhwalis should wait upon the Lieutenant Governor to lay their grievances before him.

GARHWAL SAMACHAR, October 1912.

The claims of Garhwal.

39. The Garhwal Samáchár (Dugadda, Garhwal) for October 1912 (received on the 21st November), says that the last vaccination report shows that vaccination has been exceedingly popular in the Garhwal district, and that this proves that the Garhwalis are the most law-abiding and loyal people in these provinces. The editor urges that in recognition of their loyalty, Government should accord special treatment to them, and he advises them to keep firm in their loyalty but represent their claims to preferential treatment to Government.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

Outrages upon Indian women.

40. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), states on the authority of the Punjabee (Lahore) that one Bawa Narain Das Bahl was arrested at Batala (Gurdaspur) by a Muhammadan Inspector on a charge of attempting to murder his son, and that while he was in custody and his son was in hospital, the latter's wife named Vidyavati was outraged by four officers.

The editor says that in spite of a complaint made by Harnam Das, Vidyavati's brother, the Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate did not take any action against the offending officers. He deprecates, what he calls, this new policy of Government of condoning even the illegal acts of its officers, and in this connection he invites attention to the action of the Burma Government in the Burma Critic defamation case. He concludes his article with the following remarks: "Even admitting that the policy of the Punjab Government has up till now been to encourage and support our Muhammadan brethren, yet we must point out that if such cases are not properly enquired into, feelings which Government will not welcome will be roused in the hearts of its Hindu subjects. We therefore hope that our kind Government will perform its duty, if the local officials fail to pay proper attention to the matter."

ADVOCATE, 17th November 1912.

Hastings House.

41. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 17th November 1912 is glad to note that the Secretary of State for India has declared that it is not the intention of Government to sell Hastings House.

VEDA PRAKASH, November 1912.

The dedication of children to the Ganges.

42. A correspondent who signs himself "Chuttan Lal Swami" contributes an article to the Veda Prakash (Meerut) for November 1912, in which he draws the attention of the District Magistrate, Meerut, to the undesirable practice obtaining among the Hindus of dedicating their children to the Ganges on the occasion of the Garhmukteshar fair. He says that children are thrown five times into the river by their parents and are rescued by the priest, and he adds that sometimes children are drowned or become seriously ill. He asks the District Magistrate to stop this practice in case there is no religious sanction for it in the Hindu Shastras or to take adequate steps to guard against accidents.

He suggests that the practice, if not stopped, should be localized to one ghat of the river which should be enclosed by wire.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

Objectionable attacks on the Hindu religion.

43. A correspondent who signs himself "Umrao Singh" contributes an article to the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), in which he states that, according to Thomson's History of India, pages 13 and 14, cow-killing was prevalent in ancient India, and the Vedas condoned immorality.

He urges the Hindu members of the Punjab Text-Book Committee to have this book expunged from the school curriculum.

RAHBAR, 7th November 1912.

Mrs. Besant and reincarnations.

44. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November 1912 (received on the 19th November), says that Mrs. Besant wants to thrust the Hindus back into the abyss of superstition from which they are emerging by the revival of the reincarnation theory. The editor rejoices at the exposure made by the suit filed against Mrs. Besant at Madras, and he asks the over-credulous Theosophists to explain why Mrs. Besant gives the credit for a book compiled by herself to a boy whom she wants to pass off as a reincarnation.

Referring to the proposal to file libel suits against the traducers of the Theosophical society, he says that these cases and counter cases will bring to light the secret methods employed by the Theosophist leaders to ensnare Hindus.

TRISHUL, 14th November 1912.

Religious dakaitis in Benares.

45. The Trishul (Benares) of the 14th November 1912 (received on the 18th November), in a leading article entitled "Religious dakaitis in Benares," invites attention to the demoralizing influence and evil actions of sadhus and cheats in Benares, and says that they forge wills and deprive helpless widows of their possessions. The editor asks the Commissioner and the Superintendent of Police, Benares, to take action against these sadhus when their conduct comes under the provisions of the Penal Code in case they are unwilling to interfere with them in matters relating to their religion.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th November 1912.

A protest against gambling.

46. A correspondent who signs himself "KUNWAR MAHADEVA PRASAD AGARWAL DIGAMBAR, JAIN," contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th November 1912, in which he refers to a report that a number of persons have applied to the District Magistrate of Allahabad for permission to gamble on the 23rd November, and urges that, as that day is observed as a religious festival under the name "Sharangi Chowdas" by all Jains, they should oppose the application being granted.

He also expresses the hope that the District Magistrate will reject the application, especially in view of the fact that gambling is strictly prohibited by the Jain religion.

TAJIR, 18th November 1912.

Cow-killing.

47. A correspondent who signs himself "ANWAR HUSAIN RUSWA" contributes an article to the Tajir (Meerut) of the 18th November 1912, in which he complains that the Hindus make no effort to reform while they expect the Muhammadans to give up cow-killing.

He contends that it is not so cruel to kill cows as to ruin poor families by charging exorbitant rates of interest.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAK, 20th November 1912.

The Ghazipur Arya Samaj.

48. The Bharat Sudasha Pravartak (Fatehgarh) of the 20th November 1912 protests against a recent order of the District Magistrate of Ghazipur which prohibited the Arya Samaj from holding a procession in the town on the occasion of its last anniversary. The editor expresses the hope that the Commissioner will favourably consider the appeal submitted to him against this order.

1. The Bharat Dharma Neta (Benares) of the 19th November 1912 (received on the 25th November), accuses the European Powers of going back on their solemn affirmations to maintain the status quo in Turkey, and says that they have gone even so far as to give secret help to the Balkan Allies. The editor refers to the tension between Austria and Russia, and he expresses regret that in the event of a European war, England will be compelled to side with Russia.

BHARAT DHARMA NETA, 19th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He regrets to note that while tales of Turkish atrocities are freely circulated, no mention is made of the sufferings of the poor Turks who are fleeing to Constantinople to escape the vengeance of the Allies.

2. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 19th November 1912 (received on the 28th November), is gratified at the sympathy shown by some of the Hindu papers for the Turks, but he regrets to note that some of the Arya papers of the Punjab rejoice at the Turkish reverses. He considers that the European Powers are trying to become the supreme masters of Asia, and says that if the Arya papers of the Punjab are not anxious to see the overthrow of every Asiatic Power, they should not exult over Turkish defeats.

AL BASHIR, 19th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

Commenting on the Turkish situation in the same issue the editor deplores the weakness of the present ministry in England.

He expresses regret that England, which took the lead in the past in establishing peace in different countries and in preventing bloodshed, now helplessly looks on at the atrocities committed in the Balkans, in Tripoli, and in Persia, and does not stir herself in the cause of the oppressed.

He remarks that England's friendship with Russia is destroying her honour and fair fame.

Continuing he takes exception to the Englishman's remarks that the British fleet has been despatched to the Mediterranian in order to prevent the Turks from conquering the territories of the Balkan Allies in case the latter are defeated.

He says that such remarks are calculated to create hatred amongst Indian Muhammadans against the British Government, and he urges Government to demand security under the Press Act from the Englishman. He remarks that the Anglo-Indian papers should not be exempted from the operation of the Press Act, and says that the Indian public will be convinced of the impartiality of Government towards the Indian and Anglo-Indian press only when security is demanded from the paper.

3. The Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun) of the 24th November 1912 says that now that Turkey has admitted defeat and is suing for peace, educated Indian Muhammadans and "their self-seeking leaders" have become more moderate. The editor accuses Muhammadan leaders of creating racial ill-feeling by representing the Arabs, Turks and Persians as nearer to Indian Muhammadans than their own Hindu fellows-ubjects, and he expresses gratification at the fact that Muhammadans are now seeking the help of Hindus in raising funds for the Red Crescent Society.

COSMOPOLITAN, 24th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He reminds Indian Muhammadans that the Muhammadans of Arabia, Turkey, and Persia, have never helped them in any of their misfortunes, and he expresses the hope that they "will recognize that when they are in need, they can fall back for help only upon their Hindu fellow-subjects."

4. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 26th November 1912, accuses Russia of secretly helping the Balkan Allies, and asserts that the European Powers have decided to expel the Turks from Europe. He, however, assures the European Powers that the Turks will not leave Europe without a struggle, and he feels confident that God will not forsake them.

MASHRIQ, 26th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

ABHYUDAYA, 28th November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 28th November 1912 refers to the opinion of the Cosmopolitan (Dehra Dun) that the Turkish war has had the effect of improving relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans in India, and observes that it will be a matter for gratification to every well-wisher of India if its contemporary's opinion proves true. The editor, however, expresses doubt as to whether the present professions of friendship on the part of the Muhammadans are not with a view to gaining Hindu help for the Turkish Relief Fund, and also as to whether the Muhammadans will not revert to their former policy of aloofness after their present purpose has been attained.

(b)—Home.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st November 1912.

Sir James Meston's recent speeches.

6. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 21st November 1912 (received on the 25th November), commends Sir James Meston's recent speeches at Allahabad, and says that the new Lieutenant Governor has proved himself a sympathetic administrator, and that there is no likelihood that the high hopes raised in the public mind at the time of his appointment will be falsified. The editor is glad to note that His Honour favours the appointment of a larger number of non-official chairmen in municipalities, and he expresses gratitude to His Honour for the words in which he referred to the Congress ideal of attaining self-government in India on colonial lines, and he assures him that Indians will only use constitutional means for the attainment of their object.

In conclusion he expresses the hope that Sir James Meston will give practical effect to the sympathy that he feels for the people, and that he will make liberal grants for the improvement of sanitation and the extension of education.

ANAND, 21st November 1912.

Sir James Meston's recent speeches.

7. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 21st November 1912 (received on the 25th November), briefly reviews the Lieutenant Governor's recent speeches, and observes that they all indicate that His Honour is an administrator of broad views and that he expresses his opinions in straightforward language, and does not have recourse to diplomatic quibbles in discussing complicated and delicate questions.

The editor considers that under such a ruler these provinces will make considerable progress and the people will be contented and happy.

NAWA JIWAN, October 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

8. The Nawa Jiwan (Benares) for October 1912 (received on the 25th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer dwells on the importance of promoting better relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and appeals to the latter to give up cow-killing and to consider India as their motherland instead of keeping their eyes constantly turned towards Turkey and Arabia.

He advises Hindus to give up their agitation for the general use of jhatka meat, and urges them to give up the idea that to be touched by a person of another religion spells pollution, as it offends Muhammadans. He condemns the objectionable writings of the vernacular press which stir up racial hatred between the two communities, and says that the Urdu-Hindi controversy should not be turned into a racial question. He urges the two communities to co-operate in all matters of common interest, and he appeals to them not to oppose each other on questions of trivial importance. He suggests that societies should be formed for the purpose of improving the relations between the two communities, and that Hindu-Muslim social clubs should be started. He also expresses approval of the proposal to send representatives of the Muslim League to attend the sittings of the Indian National Congress.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd November 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

9. A correspondent who signs himself "SHAIKH ZAHID HUSAIN QIDWAI FROM JUGAUR" contributes an article to the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 22nd November 1912 (received on the 25th November), in which he contrasts the infidelity of the Turkish Christians with the loyalty displayed during the Moghal period by the Hindus towards their Muhammadan rulers. He asserts that cordial relations still exist between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and he urges both communities not to permit these relations to be embittered.

10. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 26th November 1912 resents the aspersions cast on the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans by certain British papers, and says that those who are ungrateful enough to forget the help given by Muhammadans to Government during the unrest of 1907 and 1908 are themselves disloyal. The editor asserts that Turkey has given more rights to its Christian subjects than non-Christian people enjoy in European countries, and he says that Indian Muhammadans will never submit to be bullied into withholding their sympathy from their Turkish brethren. He admits that the liberty of Muhammadans in the press and on the platform may be curtailed, but he points out that no one can control their feelings by injuring their religion.

Muslim loyalty.

AL BASHIR, 26th November 1912.

He concludes by appealing to British statesmen not to prejudice the British public against Muhammadans by ill-considered speeches.

11. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 26th November 1912 refers to Mr. Akbar Husain's poem in which the young Turks and young Persians are blamed for having established constitutional governments in their respective countries, and remarks that the European Powers, who were anxious to see the overthrow of the Islamic kingdoms, infused such wrong notions of independence into the heads of the young Turks that they dethroned one of the keenest diplomats of Europe, Sultan Abdul Hamid, and thus brought about the downfall of their Empire.

Western ideas and oriental countries.

MASHRIQ, 26th November 1912.

He notes with apprehension that the young Muhammadans and Hindus of India also have misunderstood the meaning of freedom and liberty, and he expresses regret that they characterize as flatterers and sycophants all who uphold the existing form of government in India. He urges his young co-religionists to promote unity and amity amongst themselves, and not to be led away by the passions of the moment.

12. A correspondent who signs himself "JALPA SAHAI" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 28th November 1912, in which he refers to the visit of Mr. Gokhale to South Africa, and points out that Indians can have no better teacher than Mr. Gokhale to infuse among them a spirit of nationalism. He says that it was owing to the lack of a spirit of nationalism that the Muhammadans oppressed the Hindus during their rule in India, and he notes that for the same reason, Indians have to suffer various indignities in the colonies at the present day. He urges that if Indians are desirous of rising into the scale of nations, they should wake up and cultivate a spirit of nationalism among themselves by the diffusion of education and by healthy co-operation.

The spirit of nationalism.

ABHYUDAYA, 28th November 1912.

13. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for October 1912 (received on the 29th November), says that in view of the special requirements of Kumaun, it should be allowed to send a representative to the local Council. The editor complains of the injustice of allowing the Muhammadans of Kumaun to vote in their special electorate, while the Hindus of the division are denied a similar privilege.

14. Discussing the recent conviction of a tout at Lucknow for cheating, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 28th November 1912, says that touts are a curse to poor litigants. The editor deplores the increase in the number of forgery and cheating cases at Lucknow, and he urges the authorities to take energetic steps to suppress this form of crime.

15. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 21st November 1912 (received on the 25th November), publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses appreciation of the work of the Criminal Investigation department in connection with the Lucknow forgery and cheating case which is still pending.

He complains that a gang of dishonest brokers exists in Lucknow, and he suggests that the local police should prepare a list of these brokers and carefully scrutinize their actions.

The Mirzapur Municipality.

16. The Bharat Dharma Neta (Benares) of the 19th November 1912 (received on the 25th November), complains that the Purani Anjahi and certain other roads have not been included in the water works scheme of Mirzapur city, and says that the inhabitants of the localities through which these roads pass are put to great inconvenience thereby. The editor also notes that some of the Kitson lamps in Mirzapur city are practically useless.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th November 1912.

The Kosi Municipality.

17. A correspondent who signs himself "BAIJ NATH" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 24th November 1912, in which he protests against the proposal to replace octroi in the Kosi Municipality in the Muttra district by a tax of two and a half per cent. per annum on the value of house and other property. He objects that the proposed tax is to be levied on the apparent and not on the real value of property, and he considers that it will therefore prove highly oppressive.

The editor invites the attention of the Collector of Muttra to the matter, and urges that he should not allow the Kosi Municipality to levy such an unpopular tax.

(e)—Education.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 13th November 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

18. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 13th November 1912 (received on the 25th November), says that the Muhammadan public have not sufficient time to decide on their representatives at the Muslim University foundation committee meeting to be held at Lucknow in December.

He expresses apprehension lest the members of the committee may come to a decision on the matter that will not be acceptable to the Muhammadan public, and he therefore suggests that the meeting should be postponed to some future date in order that Muhammadan delegates may be able to attend from all parts of the country.

AL BASHIR, 26th November 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

19. Discussing Nawab Mushtaq Husain's scheme for an independent unofficial Urdu University in place of the proposed Muslim University (Selections no. 46, paragraph 33) Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 26th November 1912 considers that the Nawab should have withheld the publication of his scheme until such time as the meetings of the Muslim University Foundation Committee are held. The editor says that at a time when their co-religionists in Turkey are in such dire straits, Indian Muhammadans cannot discuss the University question, and he suggests that the proposed meeting of the Muslim University Foundation Committee should be postponed.

He takes exception to the Nawab's idea that Urdu should be the only medium of instruction, and he remarks that an unofficial Muhammadan University has no chance of success.

MASHRIQ, 26th November 1912.

The proposed Muslim University fund.

20. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 26th November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer denounces the suggestion that the funds that have been collected for the proposed Muslim University should be transferred to the Red Crescent Society.

In supporting the views of the writer the editor insists that the University funds should not be diverted to any other purpose, but he suggests that strenuous efforts should be made to induce wealthy Indians to subscribe to the Red Crescent Society.

LEADER, 26th November 1912.

The Intermediate and Entrance examination results.

21. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 26th November 1912 complains of the low percentage of passes in the Intermediate and Entrance examinations of the Allahabad University, and urges that a searching inquiry should be made into the causes of the large number of failures. The editor points out that these failures have been variously attributed to defective teaching, to the capriciousness of examiners and to an insufficient knowledge of English on the part of the students, and he says that a suitable remedy should be discovered and should be applied without undue delay.

GARHWALI, October 1912.

The comforts of pilgrims.

22. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for October 1912 (received on the 29th November), thanks Government for appointing a committee to devise means to improve the sanitary conditions of places of pilgrimage and to ensure the comforts of pilgrims, and invites special attention to the sufferings of pilgrims going to Kedarnath, Badrinath, Gangotri and Jamnotri.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th November 1912.

Cattle pounds.

23. A correspondent who signs himself "INDRA NARAYAN DWIVEDI" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 24th November 1912, in which he complains that cattle pound muharrirs do not properly feed cattle committed to their charge. He suggests that panchayets should be appointed to supervise the work of cattle pound muharrirs, and that district boards should supply fodder for cattle in pounds.

With regard to the Allahabad district board he recommends that the pay of cattle pound muharrirs should be raised from Rs. 5 to Rs. 10 and that their permanent advance should be increased from Rs. 5 to Rs. 25.

He takes exception to the reprehensible practice obtaining among cattle pound muharrirs of paying commission at the rate of half an anna or one anna per head on cattle received, and he urges that persons impounding cattle that have done no real injury to crops should be severely punished.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 24th November 1912.

The begar system.

24. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of the 24th November 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer complains that a Muhammadan chowdhri appointed by the Tahsildar of Agra to supply carts to government officers tyrannizes over the cartmen and levies toll from them. He also says that the chowdhri sometimes utilizes the carts for his own private work, while giving out to the cartmen that the carts have been impressed by the orders of the officials. He invites the attention of the Collector of Agra to the matter, and suggests that an honest man should be appointed chowdhri.

MASHRIQ, 26th November 1912.

The All-India Sanitary Conference at Madras.

25. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 26th November 1912, expresses regret that no hakim or vaid was invited to attend the recent sessions of the All-India Sanitary Conference held at Madras.

He suggests that the deliberations of the conference should be published in Urdu and Hindi and distributed broadcast throughout the country.

He also suggests that the conference should be turned into a semi-official institution, and that sub-committees should be opened in every division.

He urges that the people should be prohibited from cultivating land within municipal limits, and that every city should be provided with an up-to-date drainage system.

He notes with pleasure that the Hon'ble Mr. Ganga Prasad Varma was deputed by the Government of the United Provinces to attend the conference.

GARHWALI, October 1912.

Bill for the protection of minor girls.

26. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for October 1912 (received on the 29th November), lends its support to the Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy's bill for the protection of minor girls, and the Hon'ble Mr. Madge's bill for the suppression of the white slave traffic, and invites the attention of Government to the trade in minor girls carried on in Garhwal.

ABHYUDAYA, 28th November 1912.

The safety of female passengers on railways.

27. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 28th November 1912 supports the suggestion of the Punjabee (Lahore) regarding the introduction of corridor trains on all railways as a means of ensuring more protection to female passengers. In case this suggestion is not adopted the editor urges that a female conductor should be employed on every train. He also suggests that memorials should be submitted to Government emphasizing the need for greater precautions being taken to ensure the safety of female passengers.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st November 1912.

The protection of cows.

28. A correspondent who signs himself "Krishna Vansh Varma" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 21st November 1912 (received on the 25th November), in which he dwells on the utility of the cow to Indians and on the necessity for protecting her on economic if not on religious grounds.

He expresses regret that although the British Government has done much in other directions to improve the condition of India, it has altogether neglected the important question of the protection of cattle.

He makes a strong appeal to the public to liberally support Mr. K. S. Jassawalla of Jubbulpore who has proceeded to England to forward the cause of the cow-protection movement.

ANAND, 21st November 1912.

Cow sacrifice and Bakr-Id.

29. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 21st November 1912 (received on the 25th November), is glad to note that Muhammadans, in recognition of the sympathy shown to them by Hindus in connection with the Balkan war, have decided not to sacrifice cows on the occasion of the Bakr-Id. The editor considers this generous and praiseworthy attitude of the Muhammadans will gain the good will of the Hindus and will lead to better relations between the two communities.

TAFRIH, 28th November 1912.

The Bakr-Id disturbances.

30. Discussing the recent Bakr-Id disturbances at Rangoon, Uluberria, and Ajodhya, the Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 28th November 1912 considers that the authorities should not permit the sacrifice of cows unless they are able to make satisfactory arrangements to prevent disturbances, and that, in any case, cow sacrifices should not be allowed at places where they are likely to give offence.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) for November 1912 (received on the 3rd December), publishes extracts from the article entitled "The betrayal of Islam by England" that appear in the November issue of the Egypt (London) in which England is held responsible for the outbreak of the Balkan war and the Italian raid on Tripoli.

URDU-I-MUALLA, November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

2. A correspondent who signs himself "Muhammad Sulaiman Alwi Kusmandwi" contributes an article to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 3rd December 1912, in which he deplores the small contribution made by the Nizam of Hyderabad towards the Turkish Relief Fund, and expresses regret that the premier Muhammadan State in India has become niggardly.

MASHRIQ, 3rd December 1912.

Help for Turkey.

He considers that the Nizam should have sent a medical mission to Turkey and should have contributed at least a lakh of rupees towards the Relief Fund.

He urges the Muhammadan rulers of Native States in India to send their soldiers to help the Turks, and he expresses the hope that the British Government will raise no objection to their doing so.

3. The editor of Al Mashir (Moradabad) in the issue of the 4th December 1912 expresses disapproval of the proposal to send a medical mission to Turkey, and urges his co-religionists to render pecuniary assistance only to the Turks.

AL MASHIR, 4th December 1912.

The proposed medical mission to Turkey.

4. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 5th December 1912, attributes the Turkish reverses to the disloyalty of the Christian soldiers in the Turkish Army and condemns their perfidious conduct.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th December 1912.

Christian deserters in the Turkish Army.

5. A correspondent who signs himself "Allámá Azád Subhani" contributes an article to the Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 28th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), in which he deplores the present condition of Islamic countries, and attributes it to the folly of Muhammadans in placing their trust in Christians and not following the principle of retaliation.

KAISER-I-HIND, 28th November 1912.

The danger to Islam.

He accuses the Christian Powers of conspiring to annihilate Islam, and he appeals to Muhammadans to open their eyes and to be up and doing.

He says that the downfall of Turkey will lead to the extinction of Islam, and he appeals to the European Powers not to permit the overthrow of the Islamic kingdoms.

6. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 29th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), expresses disapproval of the objection taken by the Aligarh Institute Gazette to the visit of His Highness the Agha Khan to Russia, and says that there appears no harm in his being a guest of the Russian Government in spite of its hostility towards Muhammadans. The editor points out that Russia rules over a large number of Muhammadans, and that it is but reasonable that the leader of the Indian Muhammadans should go to Russia and identify himself with the welfare of the Muhammadans in that country.

DAILY UNION GAZETTE, 29th November 1912.

The visit of His Highness the Agha Khan to Russia.

7. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 4th December 1912 deplores the atrocities committed by the Bulgarians in Macedonia, and expresses regret that Europe tolerates such a barbarous war instead of having recourse to arbitration. The editor points out that the Balkan war is actuated by a lust for territory, and he says that unrighteous claims cannot be settled by arbitration.

LEADER, 4th December 1912.

The situation in Macedonia.

(b)—Home.

8. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 discusses Lord Curzon's recent speech in Glasgow on the woman suffrage question and remarks that, whatever may be the consequences of woman suffrage for England, Indians stand to gain rather than to lose by the grant of the concession, for they need sympathy in their government and women are naturally more loving and sympathetic than men.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

India and women suffrage in England.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

The Council elections.

9. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 refers to a statement of the Punjabee (Lahore) to the effect that a Muhammadan sub-registrar attempted to influence a Sikh voter to give his vote to a Muhammadan candidate for the Punjab Council. and urges upon Government the necessity to stop such official interference with council elections.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

The United Provinces Legislative Council.

10. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 says that the nominations made to the United Provinces Council by Sir John Hewett three years ago produced a feeling of deep disappointment in the public mind. The editor expresses the hope that Sir James Meston, endowed as he is with liberal sympathies, will make such nominations as will commend themselves to the educated community of these provinces.

ADVOCATE, 5th December 1912.

The United Provinces Legislative Council.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th December 1912 appeals to Sir James Meston to nominate for his Council men of independent public spirit, of culture, and of non-sectarian views who are likely to attend the meetings of the Council and represent the views of their constituents.

With regard to the elections for the Imperial Council, the editor appeals to the Muhammadans to allow two Hindus to be elected. He expresses satisfaction at the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya's work in the Imperial Council and expresses the hope that he will be re-elected. He asserts that none of the three candidates from the Agra landholders' electorate will voice the grievances of the middle classes of these provinces, and he urges that a man who will not sacrifice general to class interests should be elected.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 27th November 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

12. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 27th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), takes exception to the suggestion that there should be no session of the All-India Muslim League this year. The editor considers that in view of the troubled outlook in Turkey it is necessary that the Muslim leaders should meet to give expression to the feelings of their community. He admits that Mr. Ameer Ali cannot give up his work in connection with the Red Crescent Society to preside at the coming session of the League, and he suggests that the Hon'ble Mr. Mazhar-ul-Haq be elected in his place.

AL BASHIR, 3rd December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

13. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 3rd December 1912 expresses disapproval of the postponement of the next session of the All-India Muslim League. He considers that His Highness the Agha Khan, fearing that Muhammadans would make violent speeches at the meetings of the League owing to the Balkan war, has urged the members to postpone the session.

He appeals to the members of the League to liberate it from the control of the Agha Khan and to remodel its constitution on a more liberal basis.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

14. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th December 1912 expresses surprise at the insistence of some people that a session of the Muslim League should be held this year. The editor asserts that the League hardly does any work nowadays beyond passing resolutions, and he expresses regret that the League gave no help in the work of collecting funds for the Red Crescent Society.

TAJIR, 25th November 1912.

The working of the Press Act.

15. The editor of the Tajir (Meerut) in the issue of the 25th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), regrets to learn that security was demanded from the Afghan (Peshawar), which he considers one of the most loyal newspapers in the North-West Frontier Province. He expresses regret that Hindu papers like the Hindustan (Lahore), which publish objectionable articles, are not brought under the operation of the Press Act, and that only Muhammadan papers are asked to deposit security.

He appeals to Government to take notice of the objectionable articles that appear in Hindu papers and to do justice in the case of the Afghan.

16. The Bharat Sudasha Pravartak (Fatehgarh) of the 4th December 1912 expresses regret that Government should have required a loyal newspaper like the Saddharm Prachárak to deposit security under the Press Act at Delhi. The editor considers that such a suspicious attitude on the part of Government is likely to produce grave consequences.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAK, 4th December 1912.

The working of the Press Act.

17. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 advises the ruling chiefs to abandon their idea of imitating the colonies by presenting Dreadnoughts to Great Britain.

LEADER, 1st December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

The editor points out that though India already pays more than her fair share of the cost of imperial defence, yet she does not enjoy the fullest advantage of imperial citizenship and partnership.

He concludes by expressing the opinion that the native states which are already maintaining imperial service troops and are too poor to afford funds for schemes of national development, should not waste their money on Dreadnoughts.

18. Referring to the suggestion that India should present a Dreadnought for the purposes of imperial defence, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st December 1912 says that India would have no objection to take her part in the scheme of imperial defence if her political status were raised to that of the colonies.

ADVOCATE, 1st December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th December 1912 takes exception to the suggestion that the leading Indian Princes should contribute towards a Dreadnought for England. The editor points out that India already pays more than her fair share of the cost of imperial defence and is too poor to bear any further financial burdens. He invites attention to the lack of funds in native states for purposes of sanitation and education, and expresses the hope that the proposal regarding a Dreadnought will be dropped.

ADVOCATE, 5th December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

20. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 condemns the proposal that the Indian Chiefs should present Dreadnoughts to England as impracticable, and remarks that they already maintain Imperial Service Troops at considerable cost and cannot therefore contribute to the Imperial Naval Defence scheme without detriment to the finances and progress of their own states.

ABHYUDAYA, 5th December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

21. The Stri Darpan (Allahabad) for December 1912 publishes an article in which the contributor, Shrimati Subhadra Devi, finds fault with Mahendrapal Singh for the sentiments expressed by him in a poem entitled "The Fort of Agra," which he contributed to the July number of the magazine.

STRI DARPAN, December 1912.

A denunciation of the Moghal rule.

She says that the Moghal Emperors did nothing to deserve veneration at the hands of the Hindus, and that their downfall was a fit punishment for their oppressive attitude towards their Hindu subjects.

Discussing Mahendrapal Singh's eulogy of the Moghal Emperors, she asserts that they plundered Hindus, violated the chastity of their women, desecrated their sacred places, encouraged the slaughter of cows and converted Hindus to Islam at the point of the sword.

She holds that even Akbar was guilty of attempting to corrupt Rajput ladies, and she denounces Raja Man Singh for accepting the sovereignty of Akbar and for giving his sister to him in marriage.

She quotes the following couplet from the poem :—

"The throne which kings considered themselves fortunate to bow to,
Is now ascended by ordinary men who indulge their fancies," and expresses the opinion that "ordinary men" has reference to the Englishmen. She challenges the writer to show in what respect he considers the Muhammadan rulers superior to the English.

22. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 refers to a letter published in the Shri Venkateshwar Samáchár (Bombay) in which the writer, an Indian labourer resident in British Guinea, complains that indentured Indian labourers in British Guinea get very low wages and are subjected to harsh and rigorous treatment by their employers.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

Indians in British Guinea.

The editor urges the Government of India to take steps to ensure the improvement of wages in the British possessions and to introduce reforms in the indentured system of labour.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd December 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

23. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 3rd December 1912 notes with satisfaction the help rendered by Hindus to Turkey and the harmonious relations prevailing between the Hindus and Muhammadans throughout India, but deplores the recent Bakr-Id riots at Fyzabad, Ajodhya and other places.

The editor points out that it is not binding on Muhammadans to sacrifice cows, and he says that they can avoid wounding the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus by sacrificing goats and sheep instead.

He invites attention to the fact that cows are not sacrificed at Mecca, and says that Muhammadans who insist on sacrificing cows are influenced by passion, prejudice and obstinacy.

MASHRIQ, 3rd December 1912.

Pan-Islamism.

24. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 3rd December 1912 expresses regret that the efforts of the Muhammadans all over the world to reform their moral and social condition are being misconstrued into dangerous Pan-Islamic propaganda, and he notes with regret that political capital is being made out of a purely religious movement.

He invites attention to the disgraceful manner in which the coloured races have been treated by the white races, and observes that if there had been any real political sympathy between the Muhammadan States of the world, Tripoli would not have fallen such an easy prey to Italy, and Northern Persia would not have been so easily occupied by Russia.

He concludes by urging the need for greater sympathy among the Muhammadans all over the world.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAK, 4th December 1912.

Sir James Meston.

25. The Bharat Sudasha Pravartak (Fatehgarh) of the 4th December 1912 expresses the hope that the United Provinces will make great progress under the rule of the present Lieutenant Governor. The editor suggests that His Honour should pay special attention to the encouragement of the study of Hindi, and that adequate measures should be taken to improve the breed of cattle for purposes of trade, agriculture and dairy-farming.

ADVOCATE, 5th December 1912.

The Civil Service examination.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th December 1912 complains of the invidious distinction made between Europeans and Indians as regards the nature of the evidence of age required from candidates appearing for the Indian Civil Service examination. The editor points out that while the declaration of a parent is sufficient in the case of a European, an Indian candidate is "required to produce a certificate of age and nationality from the Secretary to the Government of the province or the Commissioner of the division within which his family resides."

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th December 1912.

The Hon'ble Mr. Montagu and the Zamindar (Lahore).

27. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th December 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer notes with regret that while staying at Lahore the Hon'ble Mr. Montagu refused to grant an interview to the editor of the Zamindar (Lahore). The editor considers that by refusing to see the editor of an important vernacular newspaper Mr. Montagu has lost a good opportunity of acquainting himself with Indian affairs.

28. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 takes exception to the Muslim League's request that Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim's locum tenens in the Madras High Court should be a Muhammadan. The editor points out that Madras has no large Muhammadan population, and he urges that the best available Indian should be appointed irrespective of creed.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 deplores the recent occurrences of thefts and outrages upon females on running trains near the Mokamah and Dehri-on-Sone stations of the East Indian Railway, and notes with regret that the Police have so far been unable to trace the offenders. The editor asks Government to realize the seriousness of these crimes, and he suggests that the Criminal Investigation department and the Railway Police should co-operate with the Railway authorities in investigating these cases and in preventing their recurrence.

30. A correspondent who signs himself "IBRAHIM HASSAN KHAN" contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 3rd December 1912, in which he approves of Nawab Mushtaq Husain's suggestion regarding the establishment of an independent Muhammadan University in case the charter of the proposed Muslim University is not sanctioned by Government. He suggests that copies of Nawab Mushtaq Husain's article should be reprinted as a separate pamphlet and distributed broadcast throughout the country.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

31. A correspondent who signs himself "SAIYID MUHAMMAD" contributes an article to Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 3rd December 1912, in which he takes exception to the views expressed by the Vakil (Amritsar) that the Hindus are waiting for the Muhammadan agitation regarding the Muslim University to bear fruit before they take up the question of their own University. He considers that the Muhammadans are not conducting their agitation on proper lines, and he predicts that the Hindu University will be established long before the Muslim University.

AL BASHIR, 3rd December 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

32. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 5th December 1912 deplores the decision of the Secretary of State for India regarding the proposed Muslim University, and expresses regret that the Secretary of State who was so much influenced by the agitation of the Bengalis as to annul the partition of Bengal, should have refused to grant the Muhammadans a charter of their own making. He, however, advises his co-religionists to accept the University if the right of affiliation of schools is granted and if Government does not insist upon vesting the powers of Chancellor in the Governor General in Council.

He exhorts his co-religionists not to show any undesirable enthusiasm regarding the University and to be more careful in giving expression to their feelings, and he asks them to place implicit confidence in the good intentions of the British Government.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th December 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

33. The editor of the Tajir (Meerut) in the issue of the 25th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), deplores the growing irreligiousness of present-day Muhammadans, and expresses regret that Indian Muhammadans, who have received a European education, fail to master their own vernaculars.

He states that Muhammadans, who have received a European education, are generally conceited, especially those who were once poor but have now been able to adopt some lucrative profession with the help of their so-called high education.

He accuses the present generation of educated Muhammadans of ungratefulness, and says that they envy the prosperity of their benefactors.

TAJIR, 25th November 1912.

Muhammadans and European education.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

The present system of education.

34. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 expresses agreement with the opinion expressed by Dr. A. K. Coomarswamy that the text-books taught in Indian schools containing as they do accounts of the manners and customs of Europeans only, encourage cramming among Indian students and do not develop their mental faculties. The editor considers that unless this defect is removed Indians cannot benefit much from their education.

LEADER, 1st December 1912.

Elementary education in the United Provinces.

35. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 is glad to note that the Director of Public Instruction has issued a letter to Inspectors of schools calling for proposals for the extension of primary education and has taken up the subject in right earnest. The editor expresses the hope that the Hon'ble Mr. de la Fosse's proposals will meet with the approval of Government, and that civilians will not persist in the unfriendly attitude towards primary education that they exhibited when the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's Bill was being considered. He appeals to civilians to faithfully carry out the policy of Government and to co-operate whole-heartedly with the educational authorities.

He urges the educated to take a deeper interest in the subject and to support a comprehensive scheme of primary education.

In conclusion he asks Government to provide the money that is needed for the Director's scheme.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st December 1912.

The treatment of Indian students in England.

36. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st December 1912 on the authority of Reynold's Newspaper says that an invidious distinction is made by the Inns of Court authorities in case of natives of India who wish to qualify for the Bar. The editor inquires if the ill-treatment to which Indian students are subjected in England will not open the eyes of Indians to how matters really stand.

ABHYUDAYA, 5th December 1912.

The Lyallpur Agricultural school.

37. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 deplores the lack of practical training in the Lyallpur Agricultural school, and says that a purely theoretical course can do no good to the agricultural classes. The editor appeals to the Punjab Government to effect reforms in the curriculum of the school.

DAILY UNION GAZETTE, 29th November 1912.

Poor-houses and schools for the needy.

38. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 29th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), suggests that the large sums spent on fire works and other displays in honour of government officials should be utilized in opening poor-houses and art schools for the benefit of orphans and poor people.

ADVOCATE, 1st December 1912.

Village sanitation in Bengal.

39. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st December 1912 deplores the high rate of mortality prevailing in the rural areas of Bengal, and attributes it to a defective water supply, insufficient drainage and excessive jungle vegetation.

The editor suggests that the constitution of the All-India Sanitary Conference should be improved, and that it should be converted into a conference representing the inhabitants of towns and villages alike. He complains that the road cess which was originally imposed in order to supply wholesome drinking water to villages was diverted by Government to Imperial purposes, and he insists that it should be devoted to its legitimate object.

He also urges the need for an extensive system of drainage, and suggests that villagers should be induced to cut down trees that obstruct the air and light and render their houses unhealthy.

ABHYUDAYA, 5th December 1912.

The All-India Sanitary Conference.

40. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 briefly reviews the deliberations of the All-India Sanitary Conference, and urges that any general scheme of sanitation should provide for a pure water supply in towns and villages, the opening up of congested areas in cities, a proper drainage system and the supply of unadulterated food stuffs.

The editor expresses the hope that the conference will not be allowed to end in mere discussion but that Government will carry out its recommendations.

He expresses gratification that the Hon'ble Munshi Ganga Prasad and Babu Moti Lal Ghosh were invited by Government to take part in the deliberations of the conference, but suggests that a larger number of Indians representing both rural and urban populations should be invited to attend the future sessions of the conference.

41. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 complains that much inconvenience is caused to ignorant passengers at the Allahabad railway station owing to the fact that the ticket collectors posted there are retired soldiers who do not understand Hindi. The editor urges that before the Magh mela traffic commences Hindu ticket collectors should be posted at Prayag and at Allahabad junction.

He asks the Director General of Post Offices either to arrange for the supply of proper bags to postal peons, or to issue orders that peons are only to sell post cards and envelopes.

VIII.—Native societies and religious and social matters.

43. A correspondent who signs himself "Ram Taran Bhattachariya" writing in the Trishul (Benares) of the 28th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), complains of the editor's silence on the subject of cow sacrifice during the Bakr-Id at Benares, and suggests that as in Brindaban and Muttra, where the sacrifice of animals is forbidden, cow-killing should be discontinued at Benares also. He appeals to Muhammadans to sacrifice cows outside Benares, and he asks the editor to bring the matter before the public.

The Bakr-Id in Benares.

TRISHUL, 28th November 1912.

44. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 28th November 1912 (received on the 2nd December), asserts that the Muhammadans of Ajodhya always enjoyed the right of sacrificing cows, and says that considerable ill-feeling was produced among Hindus and Muhammadans by the open manner in which an inquiry into the cow-killing question was conducted by Mr. D. Dewar, late Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya and Fyzabad.

KAISER-I-HIND, 28th November 1912.

The editor complains that the Hindu rioters of Ajodhya, among whom Bairagis were prominent, robbed and wounded the Muhammadans and desecrated their mosques on the 20th November.

He blames Munshi Ram Lal, Sub-Inspector of Police, Ajodhya, for not taking proper steps to prevent the disturbance, and he holds some high officials, whom he does not care to name, responsible for these riots. He criticises the negligence of the police in not taking down the names of the rioters, and says that this would have very much facilitated their arrest. He notes that the Hindus have closed their shops in order to inconvenience the public, and he urges Government to insist on all shops being immediately reopened. He also complains about the ill-treatment of injured Muhammadans by the hospital authorities, and concludes by expressing the hope that the rioters will be speedily arrested and severely punished.

RAHBAR, 28th November 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

45. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th November 1912 (received on the 4th December), deplores the recent Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya, and accuses the authorities of being guilty of an unjustifiable innovation in permitting the sacrifice of cows at a place which is held so sacred by the Hindus. The editor points out that the Muhammadans can very well sacrifice other animals besides the cow, and he says that they sacrifice cows simply to wound the religious feelings of the Hindus. He invites attention to an article contributed by a Christian named Rahmat Massih to the Hindustan (Lahore) in which the hope is expressed that the Bulgarians will, on entering Constantinople, revenge themselves on the Moslem Turks for their desecration of the Church of St. Sophia in 1453, and says that if Muhammadans do not want the Hindus also to entertain similar feelings towards them they should give up their fanatical ways.

He asserts that the Id-uz-Zoha is called the Id-ul-Bakr simply out of religious prejudice, and he urges Muhammadans not to use the latter name.

ARYA MITRA, 1st December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

46. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 1st December 1912 deplores the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya, and says that the slaughter of such a useful animal as the cow either for purposes of food or on the occasion of religious festivals is opposed to the dictates of humanity as well to commonsense. The editor observes that the Muhammadans should refrain from cow-slaughter if not on economic grounds, at any rate out of regard for the religious susceptibilities of their Hindu neighbours.

ABHYUDAYA, 5th December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

47. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 5th December 1912 deplores the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya and in Burma, and considers that the local authorities could have prevented them if they had acted more tactfully. The editor asks Government to call for an explanation from the officials concerned as to why they permitted cows to be sacrificed when the Hindus are bitterly opposed to the slaughter of cattle. He observes that in view of the fact that cow-sacrifice was never before permitted at Ajodhya the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad should not have allowed any departure from the established practice this year, and that at any rate cows should not have been slaughtered in the vicinity of the Hindu quarters. He concludes by urging that an independent committee consisting of Hindu and European members should be appointed to hold an inquiry into the whole affair.

BHARAT JIWAN, 2nd December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

48. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 2nd December 1912 says that the Hindus have fully displayed their sympathy with the Indian Muhammadans by subscribing liberally to the Turkish Relief Fund, but expresses regret that the latter do not appreciate their good-will and injure their religious feelings by slaughtering cows.

Referring to the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya the editor asks the Lieutenant Governor to have a general inquiry made into the origin of cow-sacrifice there.

MASHRIQ, 3rd December 1912.

The Bakr-Id sacrifices.

49. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 3rd December 1912 says that Islam does not insist on cow-sacrifice, and he advises Muhammadans to abandon it in deference to the religious feelings of the Hindus. He points out that Muhammadans who sacrifice cows simply to spite the Hindus are violating a very sacred precept of their religion which enjoins a due regard for the feelings of others.

Discussing the attitude of the Hindus, he expresses regret that while they make no objection to the slaughter of hundreds of cows for food for Europeans they intentionally cause trouble on the occasion of the Bakr-Id. He says that they cannot by means of riots, legal action and undue influence, coerce the Muhammadans into giving up cow-sacrifice, and he invites attention to the fact that cow-killing has been largely on the increase during the last twenty-five years.

In conclusion he appeals to both Hindus and Muhammadans to take a sane view of the situation, and he urges the protection of the cow on economic grounds.

ARYA SAMACHAR, October 1912.

The decline of the Hindu race.

50. The Arya Samáchár (Cawnpore) for October 1912 (received on the 5th December), deplores the conversion of Hindus to other religions, and urges the Hindus to reform their social customs and to uplift their depressed classes.

51. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 3rd December 1912 deplores the conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity by a missionary lady doctor at Benares, and expresses regret that the High Court of Allahabad did not order the restoration of the girl to the custody of her parents.

MASHRIQ, 3rd December 1912.

The conversion of a Muhammadan girl to Christianity at Benares.

He asks the editor of the Comrade (Delhi) to take up the subject, and he appeals to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to order an inquiry into the matter and to restore the girl to her lawful guardians.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 5th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), asserts that Turkey has regained her military prestige, but expresses apprehension that the Turks will be despoiled of what it calls "the fruits of their victories by the tricks of European diplomacy." KAISER-I-HIND, 5th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor appeals to the Porte not to submit to any injurious proposals by the Peace Conference, and he advises the Turks to drench European Turkey in blood before permitting the partition of their country.

2. The editor of Al Khalil (Bijnor) in the issue of the 8th December 1912 takes exception to the speech of Mr. Churchill in which he is reported to have justified the declaration of war by the Balkan Allies against Turkey and to have appealed to the Christian European Powers in the name of Christianity not to fight amongst themselves. He states that the open partiality shown by Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith for the Balkan Allies had already wounded the feelings of the Muhammadans and that now Mr. Churchill's speech has caused them still greater pain and annoyance. AL KHALIL, 8th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He regrets to note that while the German Chancellor sympathized with the Turks, the ministers of the British Government, which is the greatest Muhammadan Power in the world, should have expressed their sympathy with the Balkan Allies.

He, however, expresses gratification at the practical sympathy shown by the Viceroy, Sir James Meston and other high Anglo-Indian officials by subscribing liberally to the Turkish Relief Fund.

3. The Daily Union Gezette (Bareilly) of the 10th December 1912 has the following:— DAILY UNION GAZETTE, 10th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

"Turkey says to Europe: 'You proved ungrateful to your benefactor and faithless to your master, you never praised my valour, but always treated me badly. You were always unjust and cruel to me.

You gave away my territories to the conquered and made men of noble birth to yield to those of low origin.'

Europe replies: 'I admit that you are courageous and full of valour and that you guard Palestine, but you should never expect mercy at my hands because you are a cruel despot and a Muhammadan.'"

4. A correspondent who signs himself "Saiyid Shamim from Aligarh" writes to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 10th December 1912 to the effect that the Aligarh students celebrated the news of the Bulgarian losses by marching in a procession to the Minto circle amid shouts of "Allah-o-Akbar," the sounding of bugles and the recitation of Dr. Ikbal's song. MASHRIQ, 10th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He further states that the students then proceeded to the mosque, where they took a vow to boycott European goods. He then reproduces a poem that was recited on the occasion by a student. The poem urges all pious Muhammadans to proceed to the Balkans and to sacrifice their lives for Islam. It denounces moderation, and advocates practical sympathy for Turkey in the shape of active participation in her battles.

In conclusion, it urges Muhammadans to sacrifice their lives unhesitatingly for the honour and prestige of Islam.

5. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 10th December 1912 reproduces Mr. Blunt's article on England's foreign policy with regard to Turkey that appeared in the Egypt (London), and expresses regret that England's fear of Germany led her to follow a policy so injurious to Turkey. The editor considers that English diplomatists should have tried to win over Turkey to their side instead of allowing Italy and the Balkan Allies to conquer various portions of her territories. He regrets to note that Sir Edward Grey has become a tool in the hands of Russian diplomatists, and he warns British statesmen that Russia is trying to alienate the MASHRIQ, 10th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

sympathies of Muhammadans all over the world from England in order to accomplish her sinister designs in India, Central Asia and the Near East.

In conclusion, he says that as long as Mr. Asquith and Sir Edward Grey remain in office Russia and Germany will be the gainers, and England will gradually lose her prestige.

AL MUSHIR, 11th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

6. A correspondent who signs himself "ABDUSSALAM OF MUBARAKPUR" contributes an article to Al Mushir (Moradabad) of the 11th December 1912, in which he says that all the Christian Powers of Europe have determined to destroy the independence of the Muhammadan kingdoms and to divide the Muhammadan countries up amongst themselves.

He goes on to say that if Muhammadans do not realize their position and continue to fight amongst themselves, the day is not far off when Christians will take possession of the holy places of the Muhammadans and defile them by their unholy presence.

He deplores the growing irreligiousness of the present generation of Indian Muhammadans and of the Young Turks, and he attributes the Turkish reverses to the want of faith on the part of the Turkish military commanders.

He blames the Young Turks for enlisting Christians in the Turkish army, and observes that it will only be a misfortune for Turkey if she allows Christians to enter parliament or the army in future.

He exhorts his co-religionists in India to rouse themselves from their lethargy, to open their eyes to see what is happening in the world, to subscribe liberally to the Turkish Relief Fund and to proceed to Turkey as volunteers.

DAILY UNION GAZETTE, 12th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

7. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 12th December 1912 reproduces an article from Al Helal (Calcutta) in which the editor deplores the weakness of the present Prime Minister of Turkey in moulding his policy according to the dictates of England. He praises the ministry of Said Pasha, which at first rejected the peace proposals of Italy and her supporters in the Italian-Turkish war, and he urges the present Turkish ministry not to yield to pressure and make a dishonourable peace with the Allies, but to prefer an honourable death to a life of disgrace.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 11th December 1912.

Indian Muhammadans and the Turks.

8. Haji Musa Khan contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 11th December 1912, in which he explains the causes why Indian Muhammadans are sympathetic towards the Turks. He says that the Muhammadans of India, being enjoined by their religion to love their co-religionists, are grieved to hear of the sufferings of their Turkish brethren, and that their sympathy with the Turks is because the latter are the guardians of the holy places of Islam.

He goes on to say that Muhammadans view the defeat of the Turks with great apprehension, as they believe that the day Mecca and Medina pass away from the Muhammadans will be the Day of Judgment.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th December 1912.

The foreign policy of Turkey.

9. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th December 1912 considers that it would not be advisable for Turkey to make any European alliances, as she would never be able to profit by them. The editor, however, advises Turkey to make alliances with Afghanistan, China and Japan, and he suggests that there should be an interchange of newspapers between India and Turkey.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 4th December 1912.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

10. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 4th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), publishes a contributed article in which the writer exhorts the Muhammadans of India to render pecuniary help to the Turks.

He expresses regret that Indian Muhammadans consider official favours and council elections more engrossing than the collection of funds for Turkey, and he points out that what is of vital importance to them is the safeguarding of Islam.

He appeals to his co-religionists to collect two crores of rupees for the Turkish Relief Fund.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th December 1912.

The Turkish Relief Fund.

11. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 11th December 1912 supports the idea of the Zamindar (Lahore) to start a permanent Turkish Relief Society in India, as has been contemplated in Egypt, in order to help Turkey both in time of peace and war.

He suggests that branches of the society should be formed in every Muhammadan country.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th December 1912.

Turkish Relief and the Muslim University Funds.

12. A correspondent who signs himself "MUHAMMAD NUR KHAN" contributes an article to the Agra Akhbar of the 7th December 1912, in which he supports the proposal to transfer the money that has been collected for the Muslim University to the Turkish Relief Fund.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 11th December 1912.

Turkish Relief and the Muslim University Funds.

13. Nawab Mushtaq Husain contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 11th December 1912, in which he says that it is not advisable to give the sum that has been collected for the Muslim University to the Turkish Relief Fund either as a gift or as a loan. He says that the Muslim University Fund is too small to be of any real benefit to Turkey, and he expresses the hope that if the Muhammadan public are made to realize the gravity of the situation in Turkey, they will contribute to the Turkish Relief Fund much more liberally than they have done up to the present.

He urges his co-religionists to collect money for the relief fund more enthusiastically and he emphazizes the fact that the defeat of the Turks means that their holy places will pass out of their hands for ever.

RAHBAR, 7th December 1912.

Help for Turkey.

14. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad) in the issue of the 7th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), notes with regret that Mullahs are exciting the Muhammadans against the Hindus in the villages of Bengal, and that Muhammadans have sacrificed cows at such a holy place as Ajodhya. He expresses surprise that these incidents have not opened the eyes of the Hindu leaders who are collecting money for the Turkish Relief Fund, and he advises the Hindus not to waste their sympathy on Indian Muhammadans, but to utilize their hard-earned money for works of national regeneration.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th December 1912.

The Balkan war.

15. Maulana Shibli Nomani contributes a poem to the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 8th December 1912 (received on the 10th December), in which he deplores the downfall of Muhammadan kingdoms and complains against Christian aggression.

The following are some extracts from the poem :—

" * * * * * * * *

Morocco is gone, Persia is lost, now (we) have to see
How long the obstinate sick man of Turkey is going to survive.

* * * * * * * *

I admit, you (Christians) have a complaint against the Heavens for the dry year,
But how long are we (Muslims) to irrigate your fields with our blood ?

* * * * * * * *

The binding of the pages of Islam is being loosened,
How long will the storms of the tornado of non-Muhammadanism (Christianity) last ?
When these killers of game (Christians) are turning their (covetous) glances even towards the holy places of Islam,
How long then are the birds of these holy places to stay in their abode ?
O Shibli ! where are we (Muslims) to go even if we leave our countries,
For now how long will (peace and) security last in Syria, Nejd and Qirwan ?"

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th December 1912.

The Balkan war.

16. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th December 1912 is glad to note that the tide of war has now turned in favour of the Turks. The editor considers that the Balkan war has greatly benefited Indian Muhammadans by inspiring them with a new zeal for the cause of Islam, which augurs well for the future. He invites attention to the sacrifices made by poor Muhammadans in India in order to help their suffering Turkish brethren, and says that there is a glorious future for such a self-sacrificing community.

TAJIR, 4th December 1912.

Muhammadans and the Balkan war.

17. The editor of the Tajir (Meerut) in the issue of the 4th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), expresses regret that Muhammadans do not protest against the attacks made on Islam by a section of the Hindu press.

He says that influential Muhammadans are sacrificing their religious principles for temporary advancement and are becoming sycophants and flatterers.

He characterizes the donations of the Hindus at Calcutta and Bombay to the Turkish Relief Fund as commercial dealings, and he asks his co-religionists not to be influenced by the apparent generosity of the Hindu community.

He takes exception to the mischievous writings of the Hindustan (Lahore) on the Balkan war, which, he says, are calculated to wound the feelings of the Muhammadans, and he invites the attention of Government to the matter and suggests that security should be demanded from the paper under the Press Act.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 4th December 1912.

Russian Muhammadans and the Balkan war.

18. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 4th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), refers to the excitement caused among the Muhammadans of Russia owing to the Balkan war and the suppression of Muhammadan papers by the Russian Government, and he remarks that the repressive measures adopted by Russia can never curb the spirit of Muhammadans. He asks the Russian Government to avoid repressive measures which, he says, are invariably attended with dire consequences.

ABHYUDAYA, 12th December 1912.

Russian expansion in Asia.

19. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th December 1912 expresses alarm at the gradual expansion of Russia's Asiatic Empire towards the south. The editor invites attention to the fact that Russia shows no signs of evacuating northern Persia, and says that recent events go to prove that she has designs on Mongolia.

ANAND, 5th December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

20. Referring to the proposal that India should emulate the colonies by presenting Dreadnoughts to Great Britain, the editor of the Anand (Lucknow) in the issue of the 5th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), complains that while India is asked to incur similar liabilities, she is not granted a form of self-government similar to that enjoyed by the colonies. He invites attention to the fact that India is already paying more than her fair share of military expenditure, and says that her straitened finances do not permit of the imposition of any additional financial burdens.

He, however, admits England's claim to a naval contribution in return for the peace and security which she has given to India, and he says that the money for Dreadnoughts could be found by effecting economies under different heads of Indian State expenditure. He suggests that retrenchment should be effected by charging the expenses of the Council of the Secretary of State for India to British revenues and by admitting Indians on cheaper salaries to the Indian Civil Service. He also urges a reduction in the salaries of high-paid officers and in the expenses of law courts. He goes on to say that the system of allowances paid to government servants should be abolished, and he considers that considerable economy could be effected in Indian military expenditure by appointing Indians as officers and by permitting them to enlist as volunteers.

In conclusion, he remarks that it would not be fair to ask Indians to contribute towards Imperial Naval defence unless they are fully trusted and fairly treated by their British rulers.

In this connection he points out that the martial spirit of the warlike races of India has been destroyed by the British policy of distrust, and he says that the British Empire is thus losing a most valuable military asset. He also expresses the hope that if Dreadnoughts are presented to England by India, they will be manned by Indians.

RAHBAR, 7th December 1912.

India and Imperial Naval defence.

21. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), denounces the suggestion that India should present Dreadnoughts to Great Britain. The editor says that though the Secretary of State may compel the Government of India to make a contribution towards the navy, and though papers like the Englishman (Calcutta) may claim to voice Indian feeling in favour of this contribution, such a contribution would never be voluntary on the part of the poverty-stricken and starving millions of India.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 11th December 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

22. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of the 11th December 1912 expresses regret that the Indian papers have not yet begun to discuss the lines on which the Public Service Commission should work. Referring to the Muslim League, the editor says that the League should hold a special meeting to discuss the grievances of the Muhammadan community to be represented to the Commission.

He appeals to the members of the League to co-operate with the Hindus in pressing for the holding of simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service in India and in England and in demanding the more general employment of Indians in the administrative work of the country.

ADVOCATE, 12th December 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

23. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 12th December 1912 urges non-official Indians to prepare themselves to give evidence before the Public Service Commission. The editor suggests that a committee of the Bankipur Congress should fully discuss the public service question so that the Indian aspect of the case may be ably presented before the Commission.

He urges Indian officials who may be selected as witnesses to give non-officials the benefit of their experience and to let them see any notes they prepare. He invites attention to the fact that most of the judicial and revenue work is done by Indians, and he urges that District Judges should be mostly recruited in India and that deputy collectors should be placed in charge of small and unimportant districts. He inquires if arrangements cannot be made that the number of English candidates admitted to the different services should not exceed a fixed number every year.

In conclusion, he urges the more general admission of Indians to the higher grades of the Police, Medical, Education and other departments for which a large number of officers are annually recruited from England.

ABHYUDAYA, 12th December 1912.

The Public Service Commission.

24. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th December 1912 invites attention to the fact that out of 1,293 civilians at present serving in various capacities in India only fifty-four are Indians. The editor regrets to note that, in spite of the Public Service Commission of 1886 and notwithstanding the resolutions of the House of Commons and the efforts of successive Secretaries of State for India, no change for the better as far as Indians are concerned has taken place during the last fifty years. He considers that the only solution of the difficulty lies in the holding of simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in England and in India. He also deplores the position of Indians in the higher branches of the public service generally, and he appeals to Indian leaders and representative associations to bring the grievances of Indians in this respect to the notice of the Public Service Commission.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 4th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

25. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 4th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), takes exception to the postponement of the next session of the All-India Muslim League, and remarks that it is ridiculous to postpone the session as a protest against the indifference shown by the British Government to the feelings of the Indian Muhammadans with regard to the Balkan war. He blames the Muhammadan leaders for being too much under the influence of His Highness the Agha Khan, and asks them to liberate the League from his influence. He appeals to the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad to make arrangements for the next session of the League in the last week of December, and he expresses the hope that Muhammadans of independent views from all parts of India will attend the session.

ZUL QARNAIN, 7th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

26. The editor of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) in the issue of the 7th December 1912 (received on the 10th December), takes exception to the postponement of the next session of the All-India Muslim League, and says that if the Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali is unable to come out to India, some other person should be elected president in his place. He urges the members of the League to liberate it from the influence of

His Highness the Agha Khan who is said to have suggested the postponement of the next session owing to the fear that Muhammadans will make violent speeches because of the Balkan war.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

27. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 11th December 1912 takes exception to the postponement of the next session of the All-India Muslim League, and remarks that it was His Highness the Agha Khan who suggested the postponement as he feared that violent speeches would be made at the meetings because of the Balkan war.

He ridicules the idea of postponing the session as a mark of sympathy for the Turkish reverses, and inquires why the All-India Educational Conference also has not been postponed for a similar reason.

He says that no good can be expected from the Muslim League as long as it is financed by the Agha Khan and remains under his control.

ANAND, 12th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

28. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 12th December 1912 expresses regret at the postponement of the session of the All-India Muslim League, and urges that it should be held especially in view of the appointment of the Public Service Commission.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th December 1912.

Relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th December 1912 invites attention to the memorial published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) in which the Hindus of Ullapara in the Sirajganj sub-division in Bengal complain that for some time past a number of Maulvis have been inciting Muhammadans against the Hindus and have been insisting on all Hindu shops being boycotted. The editor expresses the hope that the Bengal Government will inquire into the matter and punish the offenders for creating racial hatred. He asks the Muhammadan leaders to take steps to put a stop to such mischievous practices on the part of their co-religionists if they are desirous of promoting better relations between the two communities.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 11th December 1912.

England and her subject races.

30. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 11th December 1912 refers to the attacks made by the English papers and leaders on the coloured races, and remarks that if ideas of racial superiority continue to influence the English public, the Indian peoples, who have all along hoped to be treated with justice and equality, will no longer tolerate the insult.

The editor points out that only a few years back the Hindus showed that they would not put up with such insults, and he says that the Muhammadans also may be compelled to express their indignation against the undesirable attacks of British ministers and leaders on their race. He remarks that every right-minded Englishman recognizes that it is against public policy to wound the religious and national feelings of subject races, and he says that misguided action is sure to lead to disastrous consequences.

BRAHMAN SARVASWA, September, October, November and December 1912.

Patriotism and Indian youths.

31. A correspondent who signs himself "SUNDER LAL TRIPATHI FROM KANAUJ" contributes an article to the combined issue of the Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah) for September, October, November and December 1912 (received on the 11th December), in which he dwells upon the claims that India has upon her youths, and appeals to them to spread education throughout the country. He admires the patriotism of the Japanese and American youths, and urges Indian youths to emulate them.

He asks Indian youths to ponder over the condition of their country and to devise means for its regeneration.

In conclusion, he deplores the lack of practical and righteous men in India, and urges the necessity of infusing patriotic sentiments into the hearts of young Indians.

LEADER, 8th December 1912.

Want of ideals among Indians.

32. A correspondent who signs himself "RAM DAS" contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th December 1912, in which he deplores the slow progress made by Indians, and notes with regret that they are not progressing on right lines. He urges the need for an "ideal" to keep pace with "reform," and he invites attention to the weakness of the Indian national character, and considers that it can be improved only by better associations and by the reformation of the Hindu social system. He holds that Government is not so much to blame as the people themselves for their own backwardness, and he appeals to Indian leaders to rouse their countrymen by precept and practice.

In conclusion, he urges Indians to learn certain habits of life from Europeans, and he says that they must effect radical social reforms before they can hope for political progress.

33. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 5th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), is glad to note that, as a result of the King-Emperor's visit to India, there is an undercurrent of sympathy perceptible in the speeches of Lord Hardinge and of the rulers of Madras, Bengal, Bihar and the United Provinces. The editor, however, says that, in order to be capable of any real and lasting good, the sentiments expressed in these speechss have to be translated into action, and he appeals to Government to give practical proofs of its professions of sympathy. ANAND, 5th December 1912.

British policy.

34. Babu Govinda Das of Benares contributes an article to the Leader (Allahabad) of the 8th December 1912, in which he says that in view of the fact that the various sectional organizations in the country are removing their head quarters and organs to Delhi, the Congress and the Servants of India Society should also have their offices there. LEADER, 8th December 1912.

A Congress scheme for Delhi.

He advocates the construction of a Hume Memorial Hall and an All-India Club for the location of councillors and congressmen, and suggests that a reading room and library should be attached to these buildings.

He also urges the establishment of three daily papers in English, Hindi and Urdu, and he proposes to raise six lakhs of rupees for his scheme, partly through shares and debentures, and partly through subscriptions with the help of an All-India Central Committee.

35. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th December 1912 says that it is useless to grant Indians self-government until they are able to defend themselves, and suggests that in order to transform Indians into a military nation, the Arms Act should be repealed. The editor further says that in order to make self-government possible the Hindus and Muhammadans should come to some understanding among themselves as to their respective shares in the future government of the country. NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th December 1912.

Self-government for India.

36. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 12th December 1912 commends Sir James Meston's speech at the Aligarh College, and expresses the hope that the trustees of the college will profit by it and will not allow the studies of the students to suffer owing to their excitement in connection with the Balkan war. (b)—Police.

38. Reviewing the last annual report of the administration of the Police department of the Bombay Presidency the Leader (Allahabad) of the 14th December 1912 regrets to LEADER, 14th December 1912.

Bombay Presidency Police.

note that, in spite of the reorganization scheme and the increased expenditure on the police, there has been no abatement in crime.

The editor denounces the insinuations of the Inspector General that the increase in crime was due to the want of "social condemnation of crime and criminals" and to "wholesale and barefaced intimidation of and tampering with witnesses," and he remarks that the Inspector General need not have indulged in such libels.

He goes on to say that it is now becoming very common for Inspectors General to attribute the increase in crime to "the leniency of magistrates, the increased efficiency of their department in registering complaints and the general bad character of the unfortunate people of this country."

He deplores the growth in the percentage of illiterate men in the police force, and notes with regret that more officers and men of the police force now receive punishment departmentally and judicially.

In conclusion, he suggests that the pay should be increased in the Police department so that a better and more literate class of men may be attracted to the force.

39. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th December 1912 regrets to note that, in spite of the absence of unrest in the country and notwithstanding the security afforded by the conventions with Russia and Japan, Indian military expenditure and the number of the British soldiers in India have been constantly on the increase during the last fifty years. The editor deplores the small amount of money hitherto spent on education, but is glad to note that a more liberal policy has now been adopted. He expresses the hope that the Nicholson Committee will effect retrenchments in military expenditure, and will thus enable the Government of India to spare more money for education and sanitation.

MARYADA, November 1912.

The Indian educational system.

40. A correspondent who signs himself "PANDIT BANARSI DAS CHAUBE" contributes an article to the Maryada (Allahabad) for November 1912 (received on the 6th December), in which he denounces the present system of education in India, and says that it produces among the students a contempt for their race, religion and language. He points out that foreign teachers cannot sympathize with Indian traditions, and he asserts that the Anglo-Indian Educational system "instead of harmonizing with and supplementing national culture, is completely antagonistic to and destructive of it." He expresses great admiration for the ancient Hindu Universities which did not neglect the character and physique of the student while developing his intellect. He deplores the expensiveness of modern education and the want of technical schools in the country, and he attributes the lack of inventive genius in India to the fact that education is in a foreign language, and is imparted in a foreign manner by foreign teachers.

In conclusion, he urges that the vernaculars should be made the medium of instruction and that a national system of education should be inaugurated.

ARYA MITRA, 8th December 1912.

The Indian educational system.

41. The editor of the Arya Mitra (Agra) in the issue of the 8th December 1912 attributes the want of self-sacrifice and the lack of inventive genius among Indians to the Anglo-Indian system of education. He invites attention to the fact that English-educated Indians do not treat the depressed classes properly and are very slow in reforming their social evils.

He says that the appeal for unity made by Sir James Meston in his Convocation address will fall on barren soil as he considers the University graduates the greatest enemies of unity.

42. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 8th December 1912 expresses gratification at the letter addressed by the Director of Public Instruction to Inspectors of schools on the expansion and general improvement of elementary education in these provinces, and hopes that his proposals will be well received by the Local Government. The editor expresses apprehension that the district officers, in view of their unfavourable opinions on Mr. Gokhale's Elementary Education Bill, may not support the Director's proposals, but he trusts that as the educational policy of the Government of India has now changed for the better in accordance with the wishes of the King-Emperor and the Viceroy, they will co-operate with the educational authorities in the extension of education.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th December 1912.

Elementary education in the United Provinces.

He expresses the opinion that the representatives of the people should also be consulted before the proposals are carried into effect, and he urges that there should be a primary school in every village, or at any rate within a mile of every village, in the provinces. He asks the Local Government to provide money for the scheme, and in case if it cannot find the full amount, he suggests that the balance should be supplied by the Government of India.

43. A correspondent who signs himself "GANGA RAM TAHAL RAM, ZAMINDAR, DERA ISMAIL KHAN" contributes an article to the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of 11th December 1912, in which he says that India cannot regain her former civilization, wealth and splendour unless primary education is made free and compulsory.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 11th December 1912.

Free and compulsory education in India.

He goes on to say that if government officials who are foreigners cannot see their way to make primary education free and compulsory in India, it is the duty of the people themselves and of their leaders to make it so.

He suggests the opening of libraries and reading rooms in dharamsalas, temples and mosques, and he urges that night schools should be started in every town and village for the benefit of the labouring classes.

He also suggests that pamphlets and tracts dealing with social and political economy should be distributed amongst the sadhus, who should be asked to utilize their immense influence over the masses to effect reforms in the country. He appeals to young Indians to volunteer their services for the education of their countrymen.

44. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) in the issue of the 8th December 1912 complains of the harsh treatment meted out to the students of the Government High School, Bijnor, by the head master, and invites the attention of the educational authorities to the matter, especially with regard to the expulsion of two students named Abdul Hakim and Abdul Hai, and he asks for a departmental inquiry into the cause of their expulsion.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th December 1912.

Complaint against the head master of the Government High School, Bijnor.

He also makes insinuation about the character of the head master.

45. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 9th December 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer takes exception to the rustication for life of eight students of St. Andrew's Collegiate School, Gorakhpur, who were alleged to be of immoral character and to be accomplices of Hamid Hassan, against whom a case was brought by one Adya Prasad. He says that these students were rusticated without any proof of their guilt being adduced, and he urges some member of the local Council to put a question in the Council regarding the affair in order to get the students re-admitted to the school.

The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 12th December 1912 refers to the meeting held by Indian students in London to protest against the working of the Central Bureau of Information situated in Cromwell Road, and notes that the institution at Cromwell Road is working in conjunction with the Secret Service department. The editor admits that the institution was established at a time of political unrest when a Bengali student had been guilty of an act of violence, but he inquires whether the whole student community is to be regarded with suspicion for the misbehaviour of a single individual. He asserts that the Bureau has proved to be vexatious, expensive and wasteful, and he questions the justice of its being made a charge on Indian revenues. He further complains that the Bureau has placed difficulties in the way of Indian students intending to join an English college or to qualify for the Bar, and he urges that the same facilities should be given to Indian students as to English and Scotch students to enable them to prosecute their studies.

In conclusion, he points out that only grown-up young Indians aged twenty or so go to England, and he considers that such men do not stand in need of guardianship.

The editor of the Educational Magazine (Ghazipur) in the combined issue for October and November 1912 (received on the 9th December), says that the Convocation address shows Sir James Meston's deep attachment to the people of the United Provinces. AN NAJM, November 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

52. The editor of An Najm (Lucknow) in the issue for November 1912 (received on the 9th December), deplores the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya, and says that if exemplary punishment is not meted out to the offenders, no hope of a permanent settlement of the question can be entertained.

53. Referring to the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya, the editor of the Anand (Lucknow) in the issue of the 5th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), urges a sifting inquiry into the matter, and expresses apprehension that there may be trouble again next year if a full inquiry is not made. He says that if cow-sacrifice is to be always attended by riots involving loss of life, it should be put a stop to, especially in the vicinity of the sacred places of the Hindus.

ANAND, 5th December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

In the same issue a Fyzabad correspondent asserts that cows had never before been sacrificed at Ajodhya. He traces the history of the cow-killing question at Ajodhya, and points out that, though permission for the slaughter of cows was first asked by butchers and then by the general body of Muhammadans, it was never granted until this year.

54. The Kaiser-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 5th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), deplores the attempts of certain Hindu papers to justify the Hindu rioters at Ajodhya by asserting that cows had never before been sacrified at that place. The editor asserts that cows had always been secretly sacrificed out of regard for the feelings of the Hindus, and he expresses regret that the solicitude of the Muhammadans for the susceptibilities of their Hindu neighbours is now being taken advantage of to prove that cow-sacrifice had never before taken place at Ajodhya. He attributes the riots to a preconceived plot and insinuates that some highly placed individuals were responsible for them. He denounces the suggestion that a public inquiry should be made into the cow-killing question, and says that such an inquiry could serve no useful purpose but would only inflame the passions of the masses. He points out that Mr. Dewar, by prohibiting cow-killing, led the Hindus to hope that cow-sacrifice could be permanently stopped, and thus brought about the recent riots.

KAISER-I-HIND, 5th December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

He says that the Hindus are at present guilty of disobeying a government order, and he observes that by stopping cow-sacrifice Government will not only be interfering with the religious freedom of the Muhammadans but will be lowering its own prestige also.

55. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 7th December 1912 (received on the 9th December), suggests that a committee consisting of two Hindus, two Muhammadans and two officials should be appointed to ascertain whether cows had been previously sacrificed at Ajodhya and to determine whether it is desirable to permit the sacrifice of cows at such a holy place in future.

TAFRIH, 7th December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

The editor also asks for an inquiry into the part played by the civil and military authorities in quelling the riots.

In another article in the same issue the editor complains that the Muhammadans always make a point of opposing the Hindus, and that if the Hindus had acted as the Muhammadans are acting at present in regard to the Balkan war, they would have been branded as disloyal and rebellious by their detractors.

He is glad to note that, in spite of this undesirable attitude of the Muhammadans, the Hindus have generously contributed towards the Turkish Relief Fund, and that a rich Hindu gentleman of Bombay has even volunteered to bear the cost of a medical mission to Turkey. He, however, expresses regret that this generosity has had no effect on the Muhammadans, and that in spite of the decree of the Sheikh-ul-Islam of Constantinople, they sacrified cows at Ajodhya.

He invites the attention of Government to the dearness of milk and ghi, and urges that the slaughter of milch cows should at any rate be stopped.

56. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 9th December 1912 publishes two contributed articles in which the writers, who are Muhammadans, state that the sacrifice of cows is not particularly enjoined by the Muhammadan religion, and that it should be given up in order to avoid wounding the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus. They express gratification at the tolerance of the Hindus who show great respect to Muhammadan places of worship and to the tombs and mausoleums of Muhammadan saints, and they appeal to the Muhammadans to reward them for their toleration by abstaining from cow-killing.

HINDUSTANI, 9th December 1912.

Cow-killing.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, October and November 1912.

The pandas of Bhubaneshwar and Jagannath Puri.

57. In the course of an article describing his travels, the editor of the Educational Magazine (Ghazipur) in the combined issue for October and November 1912 (received on the 9th December), complains of the rapacity of the pandas of Bhubaneshwar and Puri, and asserts that at the former place the pandas put the pilgrims to great trouble and go even so far as to abuse them if they do not agree to their demands.

ABHYUDAYA, 12th December 1912.

The Kalighat temple at Calcutta.

58. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 12th December 1912 regrets to note that the Calcutta City Improvement Trust intends to demolish the smaller temples adjoining the Kali temple at Kalighat, and that it also proposes to have the Kali Kund pond filled up.

The editor expresses the hope that the Trust will rescind its decision on the matter out of regard for the religious feelings of Hindus all over India.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

1. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 10th December 1912 (received on the 17th December), takes exception to the fact that peace negotiations between the Balkan Allies and Turkey will be conducted in London, and expresses regret that Turkey should have agreed to this when she knows that the British Ministers are hostile to her interests.

AL BASHIR, 10th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He says that the result of the peace negotiations will be that Turkey will lose the provinces of Albania and Macedonia and other provinces that are at present in the occupation of the Balkan Allies, and that in ten years' time the Turks will be expelled from Europe.

He says that in these circumstances no Muhammadan will approve of a dishonourable peace, and that it would be far better for every Turk to die defending his honour and his country than to yield to the pressure of the European Powers and conclude a dishonourable peace.

2. A correspondent who signs himself "Siraj-ud-din Ahmad Khan from Muhammadabad in the Ghazipur district" contributes an article to the Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 12th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), in which he deplores the machinations of the European Powers and of the Christian subjects of Turkey against the Ottoman Empire.

KAISAR-I-HIND, 12th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

He points out that while no European Power protests against the atrocities committed by Russia on Jews and Persians, Turkey is always blamed for oppressing her Christian subjects. He asserts that the Turks are very pious and just rulers, and he considers that the Christian Powers have entered into a conspiracy against Islam. He notes with regret that Europeans have not yet realized the beauty of the teaching of Islam.

In conclusion, he appeals to Indian Muhammadans to help the Turks with funds and to pray for their success.

3. A correspondent who signs himself "Ahmad Hassan Alchisti from Sambhal, Moradabad," contributes an article to the Medina (Bijnor) of the 15th December 1912, in which he urges the Muhammadans to pray for the success of the Turkish arms, and to recite certain verses of the Qoran which, he says, have the power to overthrow the infidels and strengthen the true believers.

MEDINA, 15th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

4. Discussing the speech delivered by Sir James Meston at the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, Al Khalil (Bijnor) of the 16th December 1912 remarks that His Honour was mistaken in attributing the present Muslim unrest to the decline of Islam. The editor holds that Muslim feeling is chiefly exercised over the prospect of the holy places of Islam passing out of the hands of Turkey. He says that the mischievous writings of the European Press have deeply agitated the feelings of Indian Muhammadans, and he advises his co-religionists not to give way to foolish enthusiasm but to listen to Sir James Meston's counsels of moderation and patience. He urges Muhammadans to use their enthusiasm only in collecting funds for the Red Crescent Society.

AL KHALIL, 16th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

5. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 18th December 1912 publishes extracts from the article entitled "The betrayal of Islam by England," that appeared in the November issue of the Egypt (London), in which the writer accused England of having conspired with Russia in bringing about the downfall of the Turkish Empire and of having instigated the Balkan Allies to declare war against Turkey.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

The editor refuses to believe that England has in any way brought about the present troubles of the Turks, but at the same time he asks the British Government to officially deny the charges that have been made against it in this respect.

DAILY UNION GAZETTE, 17th December 1912.

The situation in Islamic countries and the Moharram procession.

6. The Daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 17th December 1912 deplores the atrocities committed by the Russians and Italians in Persia and Tripoli respectively and admires the bravery of the Muhammadans who are fighting for their hearths and homes. The editor suggests that different banners representing the sorrows of Persia, Turkey, Tripoli and Morocco should form a feature of the Moharram processions, and that Muhammadans should appear beating their breasts and singing warlike songs as a lament for the downfall of the Muhammadan kingdoms.

TAFRIH, 14th December 1912.

Help for Turkey.

7. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), states on the authority of the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) that at a meeting held on the 4th December at Kushtea (Bengal) to collect subscriptions for the Turkish Relief Fund and to which Hindus also were invited, the Chairman, Munshi Abdul Quddus Sahib, made an objectionable attack on government officials who did not take part in the sacrifice of cows on the Bakr-Id day, and called them "dogs" and "faithless." The editor states that the Hindus think that they were invited to attend the meeting simply to be insulted.

He urges Government to ascertain the truth of the matter and to ask Munshi Abdul Quddus to explain why he used such objectionable language regarding government servants.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th December 1912.

The Turkish Relief and the Muslim University Funds.

8. The editor of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) in the issue of the 18th December 1912 expresses regret that Nawab Mushtaq Husain is also opposed to lending the money that has been collected for the Muslim University to Turkey.

He considers that the lending of the university funds to Turkey would have been very well received by the Muhammadans in general, and would have resulted in their placing greater confidence in their leaders. He complains that sufficient time has not been given to the Muhammadans to elect their representatives for the University Committee meeting, and he says that the decision of the committee will be that of a few selfish persons who seek official favour at the sacrifice of the national cause and act according to the directions of His Highness the Agha Khan.

AL BASHIR, 10th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

9. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) in the issue of the 10th December 1912 (received on the 17th December), ridicules the postponement of the next session of the All-India Muslim League because the Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali will not be able to attend the session.

He says that the real reason for postponing the next session is the fear that Muhammadans will indulge in violent speeches because of the Balkan War and the Persian situation.

He asks the members of the League to declare openly that the League does not voice the sentiments of the community, and that it is composed of men who are mostly sycophants seeking self-aggrandisement.

He states that the weakness shown by the Muslim League has done a great injury to the political importance and to the prestige of the Muhammadans, and he remarks that it would have been far better for the Muhammadans if they had utilized their energies in improving their educational condition rather than in organizing a league which has ultimately proved itself to be the cause of their humiliation.

KAISAR-I-HIND, 12th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

10. The Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 12th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), says that the absence of Mr. Amir Ali and the mandate of the Agha Khan do not justify the postponement of the coming session of the Muslim League. The editor asserts that the fear that some of the speakers might use violent language in connection with the situation in Turkey was the reason why the session was postponed, and he predicts that the action of the leaders will sound the death-knell of the League. He approves of the suggestion of the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) that an independent political conference should be held in the Christmas week under the leadership of the Raja of Mahmudabad to voice the true feelings of the community.

He appeals to his readers who sympathize with the proposal to inform the Muslim Gazette and the Raja of Mahmudabad of their opinions by wire.

The All-India Muslim League.

MUSLIM GAZETTE, 18th December 1912.

11. The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) of the 18th December 1912 reproduces an article from Al-Helal (Calcutta) in which the Muhammadans were urged to subscribe to the ideal of attaining self-government under British suzerainty. The editor invites the attention of the young Muhammadans to the article, and expresses the hope that they will give proof of their liberal ideas by attending the coming political conference in large numbers. He advises them to declare that the conference has nothing to do with the Muslim League in case any members of the League endeavour to prevent them from giving free vent to their feelings.

Sir Charles Bayley and the Behar Congress Committee.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th December 1912.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 expresses regret that, unlike Sir James Meston, the Lieutenant Governor of Behar did not express sympathy with the ideals of the Congress in replying to the address presented to him by the Behar Congress Committee.

The coming Congress.

LEADER, 18th December 1912.

13. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 18th December 1912 states that the United Provinces Congress Committee has recommended that the condition and treatment of Indians in South Africa, Legislative Council regulations, the establishment of Executive Councils in the United Provinces and the Punjab, the powers and resources of local bodies, the reduction of military expenditure, education with special reference to teaching universities and the extension of primary education, measures of economic improvement, the appointment of vakils and attorneys to the offices of Law Members and Chief Justices, indentured labour and better accommodation for third class passengers in railway trains should be included among the subjects to be discussed at the coming session of the Congress at Bankipur.

Discussing the public service question, which has been given the foremost place by the United Provinces Congress Committee, the editor urges the more general employment of Indians in the higher branches of the public service, and says that this can only be secured by holding simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in England and in India and by generally holding the examinations for the other services in India alone. He insists that the system of recruitment by open competition should be introduced instead of that by nomination. He suggests that the distinction between imperial and provincial services should be abolished and that the judicial service should be recruited from among members of the legal profession.

He observes that the Council regulations are full of anomalies, inequalities and absurdities, and he appeals to every Congressman and Hindu to try and bring about their reform.

He insists that Indians should be given a military education, should be appointed as military officers, and should be allowed to become volunteers and should be released from the restraints imposed on them by the Arms Act.

In conclusion, he expresses the hope that the Bankipur Congress will pass a resolution asking Government to release all political prisoners.

An appeal on behalf of a political prisoner.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th December 1912.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 lends its support to the memorial submitted to the Viceroy on behalf of Ulaskar Dutt by his father praying for the temporary release of his son, and expresses the hope that the modest request of the petitioner will be favourably considered by His Excellency, especially as the prisoner is reported to have become insane.

The Public Service Commission.

ADVOCATE, 19th December 1912.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 19th December 1912 characterizes the division of the public service into Imperial and Provincial as a great injustice to Indians, and expresses the hope that the Public Service Commission will do away with this distinction. The editor urges the holding of simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in England and in India, and he insists that the present organization of the public service should not be allowed to continue.

He expresses his inability to understand why the questions published in connection with the Public Service Commission should have been confined only to the recruitment of the Indian Civil Service.

He notes that the present Commission is apparently not empowered to go into the question of the other services, and enquires if it is intended to appoint another Commission to deal with these services.

LEADER, 19th December 1912.

Indians in South Africa and Mr. Gokhale.

16. Referring to the criticisms of Mr. Gokhale for his change of policy regarding British Indians in South Africa, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 19th December 1912 points out that Mr. Gandhi, Mr. Polak and other Indians in South Africa never insisted on the right of unrestricted Indian immigration into South Africa, and that Mr. Gokhale has not failed in his duty to his countrymen by joining hands with them. The editor invites attention to the fact that the invidious distinction in law made between Indians and Europeans in South Africa will now be abolished, and he says that the immigration of Indians will be restricted by administrative and not by legal measures. He argues that as it is at present impossible to gain the right of unrestricted immigration for Indians, Mr. Gokhale has done well in securing good treatment for his countrymen already living in South Africa.

LEADER, 15th December 1912.

The Allahabad High Court.

17. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 considers that the temporary vacancy that will be caused in the Allahabad High Court by the departure on long leave of one of the barrister judges should be filled by an Indian vakil. The editor points out that as compared with other High Courts the number of Indian Judges is very small in the Allahabad High Court, and he invites attention to the fact that, with the exception of Mr. Karamat Hussain, no member of the Indian section of the bar has ever been appointed as a Judge in these provinces.

He states that there is no statutory difficulty in appointing an Indian vakil or advocate to an officiating judgeship, and he expresses the hope that Sir James Meston will not disappoint the Indian community by failing to make a selection from among the able Indian lawyers of Allahabad.

LEADER, 17th December 1912.

The Madras High Court.

18. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 17th December 1912 regrets to note that the temporary vacancy in the bench of the Madras High Court has been filled up by Mr. Tyabji, a barrister from Bombay. The editor expresses surprise that a member of the Madras Bar was not selected to fill the vacancy, but he is glad to note that the appointment has not gone to a European. He expresses regret that during recent years certain Muhammadans have been appointed members of the India Council and of the Executive Councils in India and as Judges of High Courts with little regard for their attainments.

MUSAFIR, 13th December 1912.

A defamation suit against the Leader.

19. The Musáfir (Agra) of the 13th December 1912 states that Mr. High, inventor of the High Patent Prize Chula, has sued the Leader (Allahabad) for defamation and has claimed Rs. 5,000 as damages.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th December 1912.

The Jagatsi Ashram case.

20. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 says that the appeal to the High Court preferred by the accused in the Jagatsi Ashram case against their conviction contained serious allegations against the local authorities, and that the High Court should therefore have gone thoroughly into the case. The editor notes with regret that the High Court dismissed the appeal without even hearing the counsel for the accused, and he considers that the Chief Commissioner of Assam should have ordered a fresh investigation into the whole affair, especially in view of the allegation made by the accused in the High Court that they were not shown the search warrant by the police.

Sale of cocaine at Allahabad.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 notes that the sale of cocaine still continues at Allahabad and that, although the police have been partially successful in checking the sale of the drug, the evil cannot be stopped until the actual dealers are arrested and punished. The editor asserts that a woman of evil repute traffics in cocaine in Ahiyapur chaklakhana, and collects bad characters in her house to the serious inconvenience of the respectable residents of the ward. He asks the local authorities to make a thorough enquiry into the matter and to get the evil-doers punished.

22. The Independent (Allahabad) of the 16th December 1912 deplores the questionable methods used for securing votes at municipal elections, and says that it is impossible for honest and patriotic workers to get elected under present circumstances.

The editor invites attention to the fact that the names of about seventy or eighty prostitutes have been placed on the voters' list of the Allahabad Municipality, and he urges that as no self-respecting candidate cares to canvass the votes of these unfortunate women, their names should be expunged from the list.

AGRA AKHBAR, 14th December 1912.

Muhammadans and education.

23. Nawab Haji Muhammad Ismail of Datawali in the Aligarh district, contributes an article to the Agra Akhbar of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), in which he says that it is a mistake on the part of the Muhammadans to hold the European Powers responsible for the downfall of the Muhammadan kingdoms. He says that, though the British Government may take no notice of attacks on Christians and Europeans, yet these denunciations go to show that Muhammadans are totally ignorant of the real cause of their degradation. He attributes the downfall of his co-religionists to their neglect of modern scientific education, and he contends that no nation can survive in the present struggle for existence without devoting sufficient attention to education on scientific lines.

ZUL QARNAIN, 14th December 1912.

The cold season tour of district officers.

24. The editor of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) in the issue of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 18th December), says that the cold season tour of a district officer instead of doing any good to the peasants and zamindars, causes them great inconvenience and trouble.

He complains that poor banyas and villagers are compelled to supply the camps of touring officers with articles of food and other necessaries at a price much below the market rate.

He invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to the matter.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th December 1912.

25. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 emphasizes the importance of the Hindi Literary Conference as a useful factor in the development of the process of nation-building in India, and appeals to the lovers of Hindi and to the well-wishers of the country to attend the third session of the conference which is to be held at Calcutta on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd December.

The Hindi Literary Conference.

LEADER, 15th December 1912.

26. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 regrets to note that, in spite of the new rules for the supply of government stores, which were promulgated in 1909 in order to encourage indigenous industries, the Government of India have not placed any large orders with Indian engineering firms.

Government stores and Indian industries.

The editor attributes this to the tendency of the Government of India "to run to English manufacturers," and he says that a remedy could be found by permitting the local Government to make arrangements for their own requirements.

He points out that the plea that the quality of iron and steel products cannot be properly tested in India has been now met by the appointment of testing experts in some of the iron and steel firms at Calcutta and Bombay.

He suggests that a member of the Viceroy's Council should call for a statement showing the value of the stores imported and locally purchased by Government during the last six years.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th December 1912.

27. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 15th December 1912 deplores the decline in the number of factories in the United Provinces during the last year, and urges the local Government to inquire into the causes of this decline and to take steps to arrest it.

He proposes to advise Hindus to avoid riots, and he states that, with the permission of the local authorities, he will deliver speeches at places where there is any apprehension of disturbances over cow sacrifice.

Cow-killing and riots.

MEDINA, 15th December 1912.

30. A correspondent who signs himself "Saiyid Ahmad Hassan Alchisti from Sambhal, district Moradabad," contributes an article to the Medina (Bijnor) of the 15th December 1912, in which he expresses regret at the action of the Muhammadans of Bombay in giving up the sacrifice of cows on the occasion of the Bakr-Id in order to please the Hindus because they contributed to the Turkish Relief Fund.

Cow-killing.

He says that Muhammadans should not give up the sacrifice of cows unless the Ulmas of Deoband ask them to do so, and he urges them not to barter their religion for worldly gain.

31. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), states that Messrs. Arif and Nur-ud-din went to Telnipara, represented themselves as the delegates of a committee held by the Hon'ble Mr. Shams-ul Huda and the Hon'ble Mr. Duke, and asked some Muhammadans of Telnipara to quietly sacrifice cows in a graveyard. The editor states that the Hindus and many respectable Muhammadans objected to the sacrifice, and he urges Government to make a searching enquiry into the matter and to ascertain if the actions of Messrs. Arif and Nur-ud-din were duly authorized.

Cow sacrifice at Telnipara (Bengal).

TAFRIH, 14th December 1912.

In conclusion, he appeals to the Hon'ble Mr. Duke to hold a meeting of the leading Hindus, Muhammadans and government officials of Telnipara to settle the vexed question of cow sacrifice.

32. The Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 12th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), reiterates its insinuations that some highly placed persons were responsible for the Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhia and Fyzabad, and urges that a searching enquiry should be made into the cause of the riots. The editor deplores the predominance of Hindu officials at Fyzabad, and he condemns the attitude of the Hindu municipal members who canvass for the votes of Muhammadans at municipal elections, but hesitate to sympathize with the Muhammadans in matters affecting their religion.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhia and Fyzabad.

KAISAR-I-HIND, 12th December 1912.

He urges the transfer of Sub-Inspector Pandit Ram Lal from Fyzabad as he was unable to discover the culprits in two important cases that recently occurred in the district.

He says that Hindu influence has always been at work against the Muhammadans, and as an instance he mentions that an unsuccessful application was made in the time of Mr. Bennett to have the Tarawih (night) prayers in the month of Ramzan stopped at Ajodhia.

In conclusion, he enumerates the various executive posts held by Hindus in Fyzabad, and suggests that Hindu influence should be counteracted by strengthening the Muhammadan official element in the district.

33. Discussing the recent Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhia and Fyzabad, the Independent (Allahabad) of the 16th December 1912 enquires as to why permission for cow sacrifice was given this year at Ajodhia when no such permission had been given in previous years and when even the sale of beef had been strictly prohibited at Ajodhia. The editor appeals to the Hindu and Muhammadan leaders in Fyzabad to bring about a reconcilement between the two communities. He considers that neither community can prosper without the co-operation of the other, and he urges the Muhammadans of Ajodhia to give up cow-killing. He also appeals to the Hindus of Ajodhia to treat their Muhammadan neighbours in a friendly spirit. He expresses regret that Mr. Way did not avert disaster by calling a conference of the leaders of both communities before the Bakr-Id.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhia and Fyzabad.

INDEPENDENT, 16th December 1912.

34. A correspondent who signs himself "Ábir Akbarábádi" contributes a series of articles to the Musáfir (Agra) of the 13th December 1912 (received on the 16th December), in which he criticizes the word "Bismillah" with which the Qoran begins. He contends that the word "Allah" is a derivative word and a common noun and as such cannot be used for a Being like "God." He points out that, though the word "Bismillah" was received from God by Muhammad a long time after he had begun writing the Qoran, it has been wrongly placed in the very beginning of the book. He further invites attention to the fact that many learned Arabic writers hold that the word "Bismillah" is not a part of the Qoran and should not be placed in the beginning of that book.

35. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 18th December), regrets to note that the District Magistrate of Ghazipur has forbidden the Arya Samaj Kirtan processions on the public roads. The editor expresses surprise at the action taken against a loyal body like the Arya Samaj, and he hopes that Restraint of sacred bulls.

36. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur) of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 19th December), complains that for some time past the sacred bulls of the town have been captured and either kept in the local Gobardhan Gaushala or sent to the southern tracts of the district. The editor urges that, in view of the feeling of the Hindus on the subject, these bulls should be released and allowed to roam at will as heretofore.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR, 14th December 1912.

Demolition of a temple at Mirzapur.

37. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur) of the 14th December 1912 (received on the 19th December), says that the demolition of the Khushial Giri Babu temple at Mirzapur has produced considerable feeling among the Hindus, and asks the local Government to have the temple rebuilt.

I.—Politics.

1. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd December 1912 considers that, in view of the unsettled conditions in China since the revolution last year, the British Government should not insist on a strict enforcement of the terms of the Opium Agreement. The editor expresses the hope that the Government of India will however make some arrangement to relieve the Bombay merchants who have a large stock of opium chests in hand.

The Opium Agreement with China.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd December 1912.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th December 1912 takes exception to the suggestion of Sir J. Rees that "China should be literally forced to buy up the accumulated stores of Indian opium."

The Opium question and China.

ADVOCATE, 26th December 1912.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st December 1912 (received on the 27th December) deplores the situation in Mongolia and Tibet and notes with regret that the Government of India is constructing railways to the Abor and Mishmi countries.

The editor advises China to submit to the demands of the European Powers at present, but to take back her provinces when she has regained sufficient strength.

The situation in China.

RAHBAR, 21st December 1912.

4. Referring to the French Premier's advice to Turkey to give the Balkans to the Balkan people as "a mere matter of equity" the Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th December 1912 enquires whether the European Powers are prepared to act up to this maxim with regard to their African and Asiatic possessions.

The situation in Islamic countries.

LEADER, 24th December 1912.

5. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore) in the issue for October 1912 (received in December) says that the occupation of northern Persia by Russian troops is the outcome of a persistent policy which Russia has followed for the last one hundred years. He points out that this policy of territorial expansion was initiated by Peter the Great, and he invites attention to the fact that this is the only instance on record in which a country has not deviated from the policy fixed by its ruler a century back. He asserts that Russia is carrying on intrigues in Tibet and uses every artifice of deceit and oppression to extend her boundaries. He regrets to note that Sir Edward Grey is making England a party to the undoing of Persia, either by actually helping the Russians or by overlooking their unjustifiable actions. He condemns the hypocritical attitude of Sir Edward Grey, and says that the world will hold the Liberal Ministry responsible for the downfall of Persia.

The situation in Persia.

ZAMANA, October 1912.

6. The Fitnah (Gorakhpur) of the 1st December 1912 (received on the 19th December) publishes a contributed article in which the writer deplores the aggressions of the European Powers on the Muhammadan kingdoms. He notes with pain the immense sacrifice of life that is taking place in Turkey at present, and he appeals to the Balkan Allies to listen to the dictates of humanity and civilization and to abandon this unholy war.

In conclusion, he advises Indian Muhammadans to enlist as volunteers and to die fighting by the side of their Turkish brethren.

The situation in Turkey.

FITNAH, 1st December 1912.

7. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 17th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) expresses surprise that Turkey should have agreed to the peace negotiations between the Balkan Allies and Turkey being conducted in London, as she is aware of the open hostility of the British Ministers to her interests. He notes that Muhammadans are unable to believe that the liberal statesmen of England can be of any assistance to Turkey, and he regrets to note that all the European Powers are acting in concert against Turkey.

The situation in Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 17th December 1912.

8. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 17th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) publishes a letter from a student of the Collegiate school, Aligarh, named Muhammad

The situation in Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 17th December 1912.

Abdul Ghaffar to his father, Maulvi Muhammad Nasir, resident of Ghosi, district Azamgarh.

The student condemns the Italian aggression on Tripoli and the declaration of war by the Balkan Allies, and he describes the miseries of the Turkish soldiers and the penury of the widows and orphans of those killed in the war.

He says that about two hundred students of the Aligarh college have resolved to proceed to Turkey as volunteers, and that they have wired their intention to the Turkish Consul at Bombay.

He says that the students of the college have resolved to stint themselves and to send the money thus saved to the Turkish relief fund.

He urges his father to convene a public meeting in his village to ask people to subscribe to the Turkish relief fund, and to read his letter to the audience and to every member of his family.

A correspondent writes to the Mashriq that a meeting was held in Ghosi under the presidentship of Maulvi Muhammad Yusuf of Karim-ud-dinpur to collect funds for the Turkish sufferers and that a considerable sum was collected on the spot.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

9. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 19th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) welcomes the religious fervour that has been created by the Balkan War. He expresses regret that some people should have felt alarmed at the zeal displayed by the Muhammadans, and he says that the spirit they have shown is a sign of vigorous life in the community and is a good augury for the future. He goes on to say that as long as this spirit is not opposed to Government, no fear need be entertained that Muhammadans will become disloyal, and he asks his co-religionists not to make any efforts to check the spirit, but to direct it in the right direction. He expresses gratification at the departure of an Indian medical mission to Turkey, and remarks that it carries a message of love, fraternity and humanity from Indian Muhammadans to their Turkish brethren.

He urges his co-religionists to contribute to the Turkish relief fund more liberally and to send more medical missions to Turkey.

AZAD, 19th December 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

10. The editor of the Azad (Cawnpore) in the issue of the 19th December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) deplores the undue excitement produced among Indian Muhammadan students by the Balkan War. He notes with regret that Sir James Meston was compelled to refer to this subject in his speech before the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. He takes exception to students forming mourning processions or joining the medical mission to Turkey at the sacrifice of their studies, and he appeals to Muslim leaders to curb the impetuosity of the youths of their community. He also invites attention to the mourning procession at Bankipur and to the disrespect shown by the students of the Islamia College, Lahore, towards the order of their principal, and he expresses the hope that the advice of Sir James Meston will not fall on deaf ears and that the unrest among the Muhammadan students of Allahabad and Aligarh will soon die out.

FITNAH, November 1912.

The situation in Turkey.

11. The Fitnah (Gorakhpur) of the 24th November 1912 (received on the 17th December) publishes a contributed article in which the writer expresses regret that the Balkan Allies attacked Turkey immediately after the Italian raid on Tripoli. He ridicules the democratic principles and civilisation of the Christian nations, who, he says, have not hesitated to slaughter innocent Turks. In conclusion, he prays that the final day of retribution may come soon and that the oppressors may be punished for their sins.

ZIA-UL-ISLAM, November 1912.

Help for Turkey.

12. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad) in the issue for November 1912 (received on the 18th December) takes exception to the despatch of medical missions to Turkey, and advises Indian Muhammadans to confine themselves to subscribing to the Turkish relief fund.

13. A correspondent who signs himself "Saiyid Ahmad Dehlwi" contributes an article to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 18th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) in which he appeals to the Hindus to contribute liberally towards the Turkish relief fund. He says that the Hindus are by nature merciful and generous, and he expresses the hope that out of consideration for the justness of the Turkish cause and for the sake of their Muhammadan brethren in India the Hindus will respond nobly to his appeal. He also points out that the Turks are of the same race as the Hindus, and that for this reason they have a claim on the sympathy of the Hindus.

Help for Turkey and Hindus.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 18th December 1912.

14. In concluding an article on the rise and fall of the Turkish Empire the Saraswati (Allahabad) for December 1912 ascribes the Balkan War to the desire of the European nations to expel the Turks from Europe as they are the only Asiatic people who rule over Christians.

The troubles of Turkey.

SARASWATI, December 1912.

The editor considers that if the Turks do not wake up and strengthen their power, they will even be ousted from Asia.

15. A correspondent who signs himself "ABDUL FARASAT MAULVI ALLAMA HAZRAT SAHIB HAZIQ" contributes a poem to the daily Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 22nd December 1912, in which he denounces the partiality shown by the European Powers towards the Balkan Allies. He notes with regret that even England did not help Turkey. He points out that none of the Powers interfered as long as the Balkan Allies were victorious but now that the Turks seem to be holding their own, all the Powers are trying to bring about peace. He appeals to Muhammadans to help their co-religionists in Turkey with men and money and he urges them to sacrifice their lives for the honour of Islam.

The Balkan War.

UNION GAZETTE, 22nd December 1912.

In conclusion he makes a stirring appeal to the Turks to make a brave stand and to annihilate the Balkan Allies. He urges Turkey not to lose this opportunity of avenging herself on her Christian enemies.

16. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th December 1912 says that with the establishment of a republic in China the disruption of the Chinese Empire seems imminent, partly owing to the selfish policy of some of the European Powers and partly owing to the refractoriness of the Tibetans and Mongolians. The editor asserts that the policy that Russia in particular has adopted in this connection bodes ill for the future of the Buddhist race, and he points out that Mongolia has taken a fatal step in inviting a selfish power like Russia to cross her borders. He considers that the treaty which has recently been concluded between Russia and Mongolia will ultimately lead to the establishment of Russian suzerainty over Mongolia. He says that no Power can check the progress of Russia in Mongolia, and that if England were to interfere, Russia would divert her attention towards Tibet.

Russia and Mongolia.

ABHYUDAYA, 26th December 1912.

He observes that no faith can be placed in the assurances of M. Sazonoff as to the philanthropic intentions of Russia in Mongolia, and that Russia will sooner or later occupy Mongolia permanently.

17. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th December 1912 strongly condemns the bomb outrage at Delhi. The editor expresses the hope that the Viceroy will recover soon, and that the criminal or criminals responsible for the outrage will be speedily arrested.

The Delhi bomb outrage.

LEADER, 24th December 1912.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th December 1912 deplores the outrage at Delhi, and expresses the hope that Englishmen will not be alarmed at the fanatical actions of an individual or body of individuals. The editor appeals to the public to cooperate with the police in tracing those responsible for the crime, and he prays for the speedy recovery of the Viceroy.

The Delhi bomb outrage.

19. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th December 1912 expresses profound regret at the cowardly attempt on the Viceroy's life, and says that His Excellency has completely won the hearts of the Indian people by his liberal-mindedness and regard for their welfare, and that it was madness to have thrown a bomb at such a noble ruler. The editor considers that as peace has been reigning throughout the country as a result of His Excellency's policy of pacification, the attempted outrage cannot be the outcome of a political conspiracy but is the individual act of some demented person. He joins with the Westminister Gazette (London) in expressing the hope that this deplorable incident will not be allowed to affect the present policy of the British Government towards India.

AZAD, 12th December 1912.

The All-India Muslim League.

20. The editor of the Azad (Cawnpore) in the issue of the 12th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) expresses his inability to understand why the grave situation in Turkey should make the postponement of the next session of the All India Muslim League necessary. He considers that the absence of Mr. Amir Ali or the mandate of the Agha Khan does not constitute a sufficient justification for postponing the meeting, and he urges the League not to be influenced by the whims of one or two individuals.

MASHRIQ, 17th December 1912.

The All India Muslim League.

21. The editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) in the issue of the 17th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) takes exception to the postponement of the next session of the Muslim League.

He expresses dissatisfaction at the work of the secretary and the president of the League, and suggests that Nawab Mushtaq Husain should be asked to accept the presidentship. He asks the Muhammadan press to be less violent in denouncing the League, and urges the educated young Muhammadans to devote their lives to the cause of their religion and to reforming the League.

He expressed regret that the Law Member has ceased to take any interest in national movements, and he deplores the vacillating policy of the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th December 1912.

The All India Muslim League.

22. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) in the issue of the 19th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) takes exception to the postponement of the next session of the League because the Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali cannot be present. He ridicules the idea of postponing the next session of the League because of the troubles of Turkey, and expresses regret that His Highness the Agha Khan and other prominent members of the League should have proposed the postponement as they apprehend that violent speeches will be made during the meetings.

LEADER, 24th December 1912.

The Indian National Congress.

23. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th December 1912 urges the appointment of a permanent paid assistant secretary for the All India Congress Committee. The editor suggests that the president for the Karachi session of the Congress should be elected at Bankipur.

The Indian National Congress.

24. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 26th December 1912 publishes a contributed article in which the writer appeals for the infusion of greater life into Congress work. He urges the need for a larger number of serious-minded politicians, taking part in it, and says that the provincial and district Congress committees should be turned into more active working bodies.

He suggests that vernacular libraries containing political books should be opened and that political lectures should be organized throughout the country. He urges that the Congress committees should nominate candidates for the councils elections and should run the elections.

LEADER, 27th December 1912.

The Bankipur Congress.

25. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 27th December 1912 eulogizes Mr. Haque's speech as President of the Reception Committee of the Bankipur Congress and expresses the hope that Muhammadans will in future join the Congress in larger numbers. The editor endorses Mr. Haque's suggestion for another Hindu-Muhammadan Conference, and suggests that the Hon'ble Sir Phirozeshah Mehta should be appointed as its president.

Discussing Mr. Mudholkar's presidential speech he says that it fully reflected the sober and sensible character of the speaker. He thanks Mr. Mudholkar for urging the holding of simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in India and in England and for his advocacy of social reform.

26. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore) in the issue for October 1912 (received in December) deplores the position of Indians in the higher branches of the public service, and expresses the hope that the Public Services Commission will redress the grievances of Indians in this respect. He regrets to note that there are only three Indians on the Commission, and he suggests the appointment of two more. He further urges that one of the co-opted members from each province should be an Indian. In conclusion, he expresses the hope that as a result of this Commission simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service will be held both in India and in England.

ZAMANA, October 1912.

The Public Services Commission.

27. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th December 1912 urges that the Indian leaders should make the best of the opportunity afforded them by the Public Services Commission to insist on the extended employment of Indians in the higher branches of the public service, and expresses the hope that the Commission will lend a sympathetic hearing to their representations and will recommend the removal of the disabilities under which Indians suffer in the matter of appointment to posts of trust and responsibility.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th December 1912.

The Public Services Commission.

The editor suggests that competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service should be held simultaneously both in England and in India, and that the Judicial Service should be recruited from the legal profession.

28. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 22nd December 1912 points out that, though appointments in the Civil Service were thrown open to competition in 1853 ostensibly with the object of benefiting Indians, the avowed object was defeated by holding the examination in England only. The editor invites attention to the protests raised at that time by Liberal statesmen against not holding the examination in India, and he points out that in a despatch in 1879 Lord Lytton stated that, though Indians were not prohibited from appearing at the Civil Service examination, they were cheated out of the opportunity of doing so.

ADVOCATE. 22nd December 1912.

The Public Services Commission.

In conclusion, he enquires whether the British Government will not now wipe off "the reproach of partiality hurled at it" by one of its responsible members and whether it will not do justice to Indians by holding simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in England and in India.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th December 1912 deplores the fact that the recommendations regarding simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service both in India and in England made by the committee of the Council of the Secretary of State for India appointed in 1859, were not accepted. The editor points out that as a result only nine per cent. of the appointments in the Indian Civil Service are at present held by Indians. He expresses regret that, in spite of the evidence produced before the Public Services Commission of 1886, it decided against the holding of simultaneous competitive examinations in India on the pretext that the Muhammadans did not want such examinations. He considers that the holding of the competitive examination in India will in no wise affect backward communities, and he expresses the hope that justice will not be withheld from the people of India on such a flimsy excuse.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd December 1912.

Indians in South Africa.

31. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd December 1912, while approving of the suggestion of Mr. Gokhale that no more Indians should go to South Africa, takes exception on principle to his remark that European colonists view Indian immigration with disfavour.

The editor observes that as citizens of the British Empire there should be no bar to the entry of Indians into South Africa, and that if they show cowardice in the present struggle they will never be able to attain their legitimate rights.

He expresses regret that Indians have not full rights in their own country, and urges that they should agitate on constitutional lines for the attainment of their full rights in India as also in other parts of the British Empire.

He says that the Government of India should prohibit indentured labour and should insist on the Colonial Governments according better treatment to Indians in the Colonies.

He expresses gratification that Mr. Gokhale succeeded in obtaining a promise from the Natal authorities that the toll tax imposed on Indians would be abolished, but he urges that the position of Indians will not be materially improved unless the regulations governing the grant of licences to Indian traders are amended. He appeals to Indians to render substantial pecuniary assistance to their countrymen in South Africa to enable them to provide proper education to their children, and to support their brethren in that colony in making a bold stand for their rights.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th December 1912.

Membership of the Imperial Legislative Council.

32. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th December 1912 considers that the Government of India's circular on the question of making a member of the Provincial Legislative Council ineligible for election to the Imperial Legislative Council is quite uncalled for and will unnecessarily interfere with the freedom of choice of the voters. The editor expresses the hope that the Government of India will allow the present arrangement to continue.

ADVOCATE, 26th December 1912.

Imperial Council Election.

33. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th December 1912 appeals on behalf of the Hindu community to Sir James Meston to postpone the first meeting of the new local Council to some date after the 13th January in order to enable all the elected members to take part in the election of representatives for the Imperial Council. The editor points out that the voting strength of the Hindu members has been reduced by the objection taken by the local Government to the elections of Lala Sukhbir Singh and Lala Bishambhar Nath, and he expresses apprehension that if the meeting is not postponed, the Hindus will not be properly and adequately represented in the Imperial Council.

AZAD, 19th December 1912.

The United Provinces Legislative Council.

34. The editor of the Azad (Cawnpore) in the issue of the 19th December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) expresses satisfaction with the recent elections for the United Provinces Legislative Council.

He however regrets to note that Babu Preo Nath Banerji of Bareilly and Hafiz Abdul Rahim of Aligarh were not elected, and says that the past record of the Hon'ble Mr. Asghar Ali Khan does not justify any expectation of good work from him in the council. He expresses dissatisfaction with the Council regulations for these provinces and expresses the hope that they will be revised and that the number of elected members will be raised to at least twenty-two. He deplores the injustice involved in allowing only Muhammadan graduates to vote for council elections, and expresses the hope that the same privilege will be extended to Hindu graduates as well.

He rejoices at the defeat of Nawab Abdul Majid, who, he says, was an inveterate enemy of reform. In conclusion, he urges Government to introduce a direct system of representation.

ADVOCATE, 22nd December 1912.

Membership of legislative councils.

35. Referring to the question raised by the Government of India as to whether the present practice of allowing the same person to sit as a member in both the Imperial and local councils should be abolished or not, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 23nd December 1912 says that it is generally impossible for the same person to attend the sittings of both the Imperial and local councils. The editor considers that in view of the fact that there is no dearth of public men the present practice should be abolished.

The India Council.

36. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 25th December 1912 considers that the Council of the Secretary of State for India is an impediment in the way of reform and is "an unnecessary and a costly luxury."

LEADER, 25th December 1912.

Regeneration of India.

37. The Nagri Pracharak (Lucknow) for September 1912 (received on the 21st December) contains a poem entitled "Prayer to God" contributed by one Laksmi Narayan Misra, in which the following lines occur:—

NAGRI PRACHARAK, September 1912.

"O Lord, you have come upon earth in various forms for the good of your devotees.

* * * * * * * *

Be kind to us. Why do you delay to come to India during this age?

* * * * * * * *

You removed the troubles of Bhim, Arjun and Yudhishthir and established swaraj.

* * * * * * * *

We have long been appealing to you, O Lord; remove our unbearable miseries soon.

* * * * * * * *

Sudhakar (non-de-plume of the writer) will be pleased only when India makes progress again.

* * * * * * * *

You always destroyed those who oppressed your devotees.

What has been their fault this time that you have thrown them into the bondage of the enemy?

Sudhakar constantly asks your forgiveness. O Lord, remove our miseries soon.

Be kind to us. Have you forgotten India this time?"

The policy of the Azad (Cawnpore).

38. The editor of the Azad (Cawnpore) in the issue of the 12th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) says that in future the paper will advocate self-government for India under British suzerainty. He dwells at length on the advantages of British rule, and emphasizes the absolute necessity of its existence for the future welfare of India. He considers that true patriotism is perfectly compatible with loyalty to the English throne, though he recognizes that for a long time to come India will not be fit for self-government on colonial lines. While urging loyalty he denounces flattery and says that he will wage an incessant war against sycophancy, and he proposes to represent to Government the true feelings and aspirations of Indians. He will also advocate moral and social reform.

AZAD, 12th December 1912.

He deplores the hollowness and insincerity of Indian public life and denounces the policy of the newspapers that trade on racial prejudice and stir up racial strife and hatred. He professes to represent Indians as a whole and not any particular sect or community. In conclusion, he promises to give no room in the columns of his paper to attacks on individuals or communities.

Sir James Meston at Aligarh.

39. Referring to Sir James Meston's advice to the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, not to keep fasts and observe mourning unnecessarily, the editor of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), in the issue of the 17th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) assures His Honour that the sympathy shown by the students for their co-religionists in Turkey has no political significance but is only the outcome of religious feeling. He points out that it is a characteristic of Muhammadans to sympathize with their distressed brethren in every part of the world, and that the Aligarh students can be no exception to the general rule. He contends that some consideration should be made for the wider outlook which education has given to the Aligarh students, and he says that it is not fair to misconstrue their religious enthusiasm and to stigmatize it as political. He expresses regret that there was no leader like Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk who could explain to His Honour that the feeling among the students was purely religious, and he asserts that this feeling of religious sympathy will not die out but will gain strength with time.

MASHRIQ, 17th December 1912.

He notes with regret that His Honour had to plead for harmony among the authorities of the college. He states that there are apparently two parties at work in the college, and he advises them not to exceed the bounds of reason and moderation.

He expresses agreement with His Honour's remarks regarding the extension of the disciplinary powers of the European staff, but he insists that the rights and powers of the trustees should be clearly defined and that care should be taken that the European staff does not unnecessarily interfere with them.

ABHYUDAYA, 19th December 1912.

The anniversary of the King-Emperor's Coronation in India.

40. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th December 1912 commends the King-Emperor's message to the Viceroy on the occasion of the anniversary of His Majesty's Coronation in India, and observes that India would be very fortunate if His Majesty's servants in this country shaped their actions according to his wishes for the progress and prosperity of the Indian people.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd December 1912.

The Raja of Narajole's complicity in the Midnapur conspiracy.

41. Referring to a notification by the Bengal Government to the effect that the Raja of Narajole has acknowledged his complicity in the Midnapur sedition case and has asked pardon for it, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd December 1912 professes ignorance of the existence of any seditious movement in Midnapur, and observes that if the Raja refers to the agitation in connection with which Raja Peary Mohan Mukerjee and others were arrested it is very improper of him to characterize it as seditious, as the case against the twenty-five accused persons was withdrawn. He remarks that it is not only an injustice to the people of Midnapur but also a serious reflection on the capacity and efficiency of the local authorities to describe the agitation as seditious in a government notification.

Village sanitation.

44. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of the 18th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) complains of the insanitary condition of many of the villages in the provinces. The editor suggests that the villagers should be taxed to provide sweepers for their villages and that latrines should be built at a distance from the villages. He also urges that the villagers should not be allowed to dig earth for building purposes within the village itself but that any earth required should be brought from outside the village. He says that rich villagers should be encouraged to construct model sanitary buildings and should be asked to leave sufficient space for lanes. He recommends that it should be made penal to accumulate house refuse within the village.

The Kosi municipality.

45. A correspondent who signs himself "BAIJ NATH" contributes an article to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 22nd December 1912, in which he reiterates his protest against the proposal to replace octroi in the Kosi municipality by a property tax, and expresses the hope that Sir James Meston will give due consideration to the resolutions passed by the inhabitants of Kosi at a public meeting held on the 28th November. He observes that the people of Kosi are not opposed to being taxed, but that they do not like to be burdened with a vexatious tax.

Restraint upon Indian students in England.

47. Referring to the recent appointment of advisers for Indian students at different British universities the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 22nd December 1912 reiterates its contention that students residing in England have come to years of discretion and do not stand in need of guardians. The editor says that the appointment of guardianship is resented by Indian students as well as by their natural guardians in India, and he expresses the hope that the matter will receive due consideration at the hands of the authorities.

Indian students in England.

48. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 26th December 1912 takes exception to a remark of the Cairo correspondent of the Pioneer (Allahabad) to the effect that Egyptian and Indian students in England form the backbone of the revolutionary parties in their respective countries. The editor protests against the appointment of advisory and inspection committees with a view to check this supposed evil.

ADVOCATE, 26th December 1912.

Indian and Egyptian students in England.

49. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 26th December 1912 takes exception to the remark of the Cairo correspondent of the Pioneer (Allahabad) that the Indian and Egyptian students in England imbibe revolutionary ideas in that country, and that most of the propagators of sedition in India and Egypt during the past years were those who had completed their education in Europe.

The editor says that the remarks may be true with regard to a few individual cases, but that no such charge can be preferred against Europe-returned Indian and Egyptian students in general, and he urges that the Indians and the Egyptians should enter an emphatic protest against the unjustifiable attack made on them in this respect.

ABHYUDAYA, 26th December 1912.

The proposed Hindu and Muhammadan universities and affiliation.

50. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore) in the issue for October 1912 (received in December) expresses surprise at the dissatisfaction expressed both by the Hindus and Muhammadans at the decision arrived at by Government regarding the proposed denominational universities.

He points out that it is useless to insist on affiliation when a sufficient number of colleges throughout the country are not prepared for affiliation to the proposed universities. He also contends that the Viceroy cannot personally discharge the duties pertaining to the chancellorships of these universities, and he considers that looked at from the purely educational point of view the terms offered by Government are eminently reasonable.

He regrets to note that people are apt to forget that Government has done a great favour to these universities by allowing them to appoint their own professors and by promising an annual grant of one lakh of rupees to the funds of the universities.

ZAMANA, October 1912.

He appeals to the Hindu and Muhammadan leaders to abandon their present fruitless agitation and to ask Government to grant the universities greater freedom of action regarding internal management, as well as the power of affiliating schools.

He expresses approval of the decision of the Government of India regarding the designation of the proposed universities.

He regrets to note that the Hindu university committee did not press for the transfer of the management of the Benares Queen's College into the hands of the Hindu university. He says that the Queen's College, the Central Hindu College and the Sanskrit College could provide for instruction in arts, science and Sanskrit respectively, and he opines that these colleges, together with a college of technology, could very well form the nucleus of the Hindu university.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st and 24th December 1912.

The proposed Muslim University and affiliation.

51. The editor of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) in the combined issue of the 21st and 24th December 1912 (received on the 27th December 1912) expresses disapproval of Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk's proposal for an independent Urdu university.

He considers that it is impossible at present to impart advanced Western education in Urdu, and he further asserts that there is no demand in India for the services of Urdu-educated men.

GARHWALI, November 1912.

Agricultural education.

52. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for November 1912 (received on the 23rd December) publishes a contributed article in which the writer, one Tula Ram, emphasizes the need for agricultural improvements in India, and urges that Government should arrange to impart practical education in modern methods of agriculture to Indian cultivators.

LEADER. 25th December 1912.

Education in the Punjab.

53. Discussing the Convocation address delivered by Sir Louis Dane, the Leader (Allahabad) of the 25th December 1912 expresses doubt as to whether Hindus and Muhammadans will so far abandon their bias for the Nagri and Persian scripts respectively as to acquiesce in any proposal for the universal use of the Roman script in India. The editor expresses approval of Sir Louis Dane's grant-in-aid policy, but regrets to note that His Honour is in favour of increasing fees in schools and colleges.

He deplores the backwardness of technical education in the Punjab, but is glad to note that female education is making good progress.

RAHBAR, 21st December 1912.

Indian industries.

56. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st December 1912 (received on the 27th December) deplores the ill-treatment of Indians in the British colonies, and considers that they will command respect only when they encourage indigenous industries by using swadeshi goods and by spreading technical education.

57. The Leader (Allahabad) of the 24th December 1912 protests against the unfair treatment meted out to India in the matter of the protection of her industries, and urges Indian reformers to agitate for protection for the industries of the country. LEADER, 24th December 1912.

Protection of Indian industries.

58. The Saraswati (Allahabad) for December 1912 views with suspicion the attempt to introduce the Roman script into India. The editor considers the Roman script extremely defective and quite unsuitable for Indian languages, and he asks educated Indians to strongly resist any change in the characters of the Indian vernaculars. SARASWATI, December 1912.

Use of the Roman script in India.

59. Referring to the heavy damages recently awarded by the Bombay High Court to a Parsi for injuries sustained by him in a motor accident, the editor of the Bharata Sudasha-Pravartak (Fatehgarh) in the issue of the 20th December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) enquires why similar damages are not awarded to poor Indians who are either ill-treated in the Colonies or are engaged in forced labour in India and are kicked and sometimes even beaten to death by their Anglo-Indian employers. Ill-treatment of Indian coolies.

60. The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow) in the issue of the 21st December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) attributes the high prices of food-stuffs in India to the exportation of corn to foreign countries, and complains that clerks in government service drawing a monthly salary of rupees fifteen or twenty find it very hard to support themselves and their families. TAFRIH, 21st December 1912.

The high prices of food-stuffs in India.

He says that Government should take steps to relieve the distress of its poorer servants, and he suggests that either high export duties should be imposed in order to prevent the large exportation of corn from the country or the minimum pay of a clerk should be fixed at rupees thirty and that of an orderly at rupees fifteen per mensem.

V.—Legislation.

61. The Rajput (Agra) of the 15th December 1912 (received on the 21st December) dwells on the evils of juvenile smoking and asks Government to penalize it by legislation. RAJPUT, 15th December 1912.

The Kalwar Mitra (Allahabad) for December 1912 urges the Local Government to have a thorough inquiry made as to why the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad allowed cow sacrifice at Ajodhya when it is alleged that no such sacrifice was ever performed there before, and also as to why the troops charged unarmed people with bayonets and fired on them. KALWAR MITRA, December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

64. The editor of the Azad (Cawnpore) in the issue of the 19th December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) attributes the riots at Ajodhia to the short-sighted and ill-advised action of the local authorities and to the high-handedness of the local Muhammadans. He considers that permission for cow-sacrifice should not have AZAD, 19th December 1912.

been given at Ajodhia as 96 per cent. of the inhabitants of the town are Hindus and cows have never been sacrificed there before. He enquires why proper precautions were not taken to preserve the public peace, and he takes exception to the parading of cows in an offensive manner in the public streets. In conclusion, he says that as the Hindus, Muhammadans and the local officials are all to blame for the riots, a European Magistrate from another district should be deputed by the local Government to try the riot cases.

TAFRIH, 21st December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

65. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 21st December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) publishes a contributed article in which the writer asserts that cows were never sacrificed on the occasion of the Bakr-Id in Ajodhya, and he refuses to believe in the assertions of the Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) to the effect that cows were sacrificed there privately.

He says that if the Deputy Commissioner had shown any regard for the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus, he would never have allowed the Muhammadans to sacrifice cows, and that when he allowed the sacrifice he should have given conditional permission that the sacrifice should be made in such a way as not to give the slightest cause of provocation to the Hindus.

He goes on to say that the Deputy Commissioner should have also taken due precautions, and should have asked for a strong police force in case of emergency.

He blames the Muhammadans for the riots, and suggests that the cases should be tried by a special magistrate and should be finished as soon as possible.

He appeals to the Muhammadan leaders to use their influence in preventing the sacrifice of cows, as cow-sacrifice wounds the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus and stands in the way of a Hindu-Muhammadan rapprochement.

HINDUSTANI, 23rd December 1912.

The Bakr-Id riots at Ajodhya.

66. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 23rd December 1912 publishes an article contributed by a Gorakhpur correspondent in which the writer tries to prove that Ajodhya is a very holy place and that cows had never before been sacrificed there.

He expresses regret that Mr. Way did not show any regard for the recommendations of his predecessor, Mr. Dewar, and did not ask for definite instructions from the local Government before granting permission for cow-sacrifice at Ajodhya. He asserts that the Muhammadans obstructed the Hindus while they were going to the Deputy Commissioner, and that they paraded a cow in an offensive manner in the streets. He attributes the riots to the provocative attitude of the Muhammadans, and asks Government to warn the Muhammadan papers that are publishing exaggerated statements about the riots and are trying to inflame the passions of their co-religionists.

He urges that a committee consisting of one Hindu, one Muhammadan and one Englishman should be appointed to enquire into the matter and to come to a final decision regarding it.

In the same issue there is another contributed article in which the writer takes exception to an article that appeared in the Kaisar-i-Hind (Fyzabad) of the 28th November 1912 (Selection no. 49, paragraph 44), and says that it does not become Muhammadans to insist on the right of cow-sacrifice at such a holy place of pilgrimage as Ajodhya.

With regard to the complaint that Pandit Ram Lal, sub-inspector, did not take down the names of the rioters, he says that it was impossible for him to do so as an enormous crowd had assembled at Ajodhya owing to the Paikarma fair. He enquires why the Kaisar-i-Hind did not criticize the actions of the Muhammadan sub-inspector, Nasr-ullah Khan, and the Muhammadan head constable, Nur Muhammad, and remarks that the attacks of the Kaisar-i-Hind on the Hindu officials are actuated simply by its anti-Hindu bias.

He expresses regret that a cow was offensively paraded in the streets, and that the Muhammadans publicly made taunting remarks with the intention of provoking a breach of the peace.

In conclusion he enquires why the Kaisar-i-Hind did not publish any facts about the theft of cloth from the market by some sowars.

67. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 19th December 1912 says that the letters published in the Leader (Allahabad) lend countenance to the view that if the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad had acted tactfully, the deplorable riots between Hindus and Muhammadans would not have occourred. ABHYUDAYA, 19th December 1912.

The Bakr Id riots at Ajodhya and Fyzabad.

The editor considers that when the Deputy Commissioner had ascertained the state of feeling among the people and had discovered that no cows were sacrificed before at Ajodhya, he should not have permitted any departure from the established practice this year, or at any rate he should have ensured that the feelings of the Hindus would not be outraged.

He urges that a special magistrate should be deputed to hold an enquiry into the cases arising out of the riots.

He expresses the hope that the Lieutenant Governor will take steps to soothe the feelings of the Hindus and to prevent the recurrence of such incidents in future.

68. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st December 1912 (received on the 27th December) notes with regret that permission for cow-sacrifice was given at Ajodhya, which is held so sacred by Hindus and where Hindus form ninety-six per cent. of the population. The editor asserts that the Muhammadans inflame the passions of the bairagis by proclaiming by beat of drum that they had gained permission for cow-sacrifice. He further states that a cow was paraded in the streets of Fyzabad in a provocative manner with cries of "Hasan" and "Ali," and he says that the Hindus were ill-treated by Pathan sepoys. He appeals to Sir James Meston to depute an impartial officer to enquire into the matter. RAHBAR, 21st December 1912.

The Bakr Id riots at Ajodhya and Fyzabad.

69. The editor of the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad) in the issue for November 1912 (received on the 18th December) is glad to note that the Government of Bengal has decided to grant Muhammadan employés in government offices leave for Friday prayers, and he expresses the hope that other provinces will follow the example of Bengal. ZIA-UL-ISLAM, November 1912.

70. The Bharat Sudasha Pravartak (Fatehgarh) of the 20th December 1912 (received on the 23rd December) publishes a contributed article by Tahal Ram Ganga Ram of Dehra Ismail Khan in which the writer deplores the misdirected use of charity in feeding a large number of idle sadhus in India. He expresses regret that the sadhus do not perform their proper duty of spreading education and inculcating patriotic and swadeshi principles among the people. BHARATA SUDASHA PRAVARTAK, 20th December 1912.

The reform of sadhus.

He deplores the decay of indigenous industries owing to foreign competition and owing to the preference shown by rich Indians for foreign goods.

He urges Indians to use swadeshi articles and to encourage indigenous industries in order to provide employment for the idle millions of India. In conclusion, he urges the starting of schools in villages and the opening of libraries and reading rooms in dharmsalas and temples.
